Common kerosene is being highly recommended as a tonic for falling hair. One woman tried one thing after another without any sign of improvement till advised to try kerosene. "Mercy! I never could stand it," she protested, but was finally driven to giving it a trial by her fast vanishing scalp covering. Every other Sunday after breakfast she retires to her room with a little tin cup filled with kerosene. Every inch of her scalp is rubbed thoroughly with it, the hair is left hanging, and the woman makes herself comfortable with an easy chair and a book. By dinner time all signs of the stuff have disappeared. She makes her toilet and spends the remainder of the day like other women. She has stopped the falling entirely and can discern a sturdy growth of hair all over her head.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Steaming Her Face.

Mrs. George R. McLane's complexion is the despair of all other matrons who have seen it. "All due to washing my face in steam," she explains. "I open the valve and place my face as close to it as the heat will permit and lie there for a quarter of an hour. The effect is lovely. The roughest skin will become as soft as velvet in a few trials. I wonder why all women do not steam themselves. The hot towel on the face I abominate."—New York Press.

Settling the Coffee.

Few persons are left who use egg for settling boiled coffee. Boiled coffee, by the way, is a misnomer, for no good coffee is ever boiled. It is brought only to the boiling point and checked there. But the so called coffee, a term which distinguishes it from the drip kind, settles itself without any difficulty if handled gently and left to stand a couple of minutes before pouring. A tablespoonful or two of cold water turned in at the last minute is a safeguard but is seldom, if ever, necessary.

Feather Beds.

Feather beds are most unhealthy. The body sinks down into them. This prevents the escape of perspiration and makes ventilation difficult. They are heating and in case of illness make the duties of nurse most difficult. If used they should be shaken every day, and occasionally the feathers should be cleaned.

How About "Ez?"

No two people in the world have precisely the same idea as to what constitutes the highest enjoyment of which they are capable. Mrs. Jennings had an ideal which did not appeal at all to the person who should have been in fullest sympathy with her.

"Go to the picnic? No, I guess not!" And the energetic woman looked scornfully at the acquaintance who had ventured to suggest such a mishap. "I don't enjoy lugging my food three or four miles into the bush for the sake of letting other folks criticise it and get all eat up with gnat flies into the bargain. My notion of pleasure is something quite different."

"What is your notion of pleasure?" inquired the visitor curiously.

"Well, I expect to have about as good a time this afternoon as ever I need," said Mrs. Jennings briskly. "We've got a load of Josiah Pond's elegant stove wood coming this morning, and when my week's done this afternoon I'm planning to take my crochet work out into the shed, where it's cool and shady, and watch Ez saw and split for a couple of hours. That's what I like about as well as anything I can think of. I do admire to see things going on!"

Sarcastic.

Waiter—How did you order your beef, sir? Gruxeigh—Personally, confound you! I suppose I ought to have ordered it by mail two weeks in advance.

Plenty of Talk.

"You say that public official had nothing to say?" said the editor.

"Yes," answered the self confident reporter, "but he talked three-quarters of an hour before I discovered it."

Meekness.

Meekness is imperfect if it be not both active and passive, leading us to subdue our own passions and resentments as well as to bear patiently the passions and resentments of others.—Foster.

Popular Banker Retires.

Tweed News: Mr. Robert Gordon, who was appointed manager of the Tweed branch of the Sovereign Bank upon the taking over by that institution of the private banking business of Murphy, Gordon & Co. about a year ago, has severed his connection with the bank, and in appreciation of his services has been granted a substantial pension. Mr. Gordon's familiar face will be greatly missed by the patrons of the bank, having been connected with the banking in Tweed for so many years. He will now enjoy a well-earned rest.

Mr. Robt Gordon is the father of Ald. W. H. Gordon, of this city, and has hosts of friends here.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Hardware Team the Winners.

The second game in the City League series was played last night, between the Greys and the team representing the Belleville Hardware Company. "Sandy" Burrows was referee, and had his work cut out in trying to make the boys play clean hockey. There was a lot of tripping, and many of the lads "roughed it up" much more than was necessary. The game at one time looked like a case of "another good thing gone wrong." Bets were freely offered yesterday that the Hardware team would beat the Greys by at least four goals, and takers were few and far between. However, when half-time ended last night, and the Greys were ahead by a score of 2 to 1, the people who had got their bets down were not any too cheerful. In the second half, however, the kids from the East hill blew up, and the Hardware boys poked in four goals, thus winning the match by 5 to 2. Two of the Hardware goals were decidedly lucky ones, the Greys' goalkeeper not seeing the puck till it was in the net as the result of a long shot, but taking things all round, the Hardware lads had rather the best of it in the last half. The youngsters played hard all the way, but it was only semi-occasionally that either side showed a flash of combination. There was a lot of kicking the puck and slashing that should be cut out. However, many of the youngsters have the earmarks of clever hockey players, and before many winters have passed Belleville should have a "home brew" team able to go with any of them. The teams last night lined up like this:

FOOTBALL.

Player Ruined for Life.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 11.— Daniel J. Hurley, of the Harvard 'Varsity eleven, who was seriously injured the latter part of the football season, returned to his home to-day after a sojourn in the mountains, where he was sent after two weeks' treatment at the City Hospital. He is not a well man by any means, and it looks now as though he would have to give up his ambition to become a surgeon. His family has been very anxious to put him through the Harvard Medical School, but the surgeons at the hospital are averse to his determination to study, and they will not consent to his returning to the medical school until a more complete examination is made of his injuries.

In his game with the Carlisle Indians this fall he received two more bad knocks, which resulted in a blood clot forming on the brain.

The result of the surgeons' examination is awaited with much anxiety by Harvard men in general, who regard Captain Hurley as one of the best football men ever developed at Cambridge.

YACHTING.

Lipton Will Try Again for the America's Cup.

New York, Jan. 11. — Sir Thomas Lipton is making plans for another campaign against the New York Yacht Club next year, and the bone of contention will be the 'America's Cup, for which the popular Irish baronet has tried three times.

A letter received in this city this week from Sir Thomas says he still has hoped of capturing the famous trophy, and is considering plans for the building of a new challenger, which he hopes to have here some time in 1907. Just what plans he is making now he will not divulge, but he is pleased to think that the next time he comes he can bring a good, wholesome type of boat and will be met by one built under certain restrictions that will bar excessive overhangs and other freakish features.

It is said on good authority that Sir Thomas may bring over a schooner, and that the new boat will be built up to the limit of that type of yacht allowed under the terms of the deed of gift, which is 115 feet on the water line.

SPORTING NOTES.

It looks, at present, as though the Bankers may be the first team to drink out of the Corby cup.

Mr. Ketcheson, of this city, to-day shipped his horse, Jim K., to Lindsay, where he will participate in the races to be held there next week.

The Brockville Times errs slightly on the following item: Johnston, the new man on the Brockville line-up, comes originally from Belleville. Latterly he has been employed in Sherbrooke, Que., but had not been in practice long enough to show his true form. He is a hard checker and shoots with accuracy and precision.

A Brockville paper hands this bouquet to Harold Armstrong, formerly of Peterboro; "The most flagrant offender was Armstrong, the Smith's Falls cover point, who was given enforced rests on five different occasions. He could not restrain himself from dirty tactics."

A fine game should result when the Bankers and Hardware Co. team meet next Tuesday night. Both those teams have now won a game, and a swift match should be dished up for hockey lovers.

Hockey lovers will be glad to hear that The Intelligencer's suggestion will be acted upon, and that some fast teams will be brought here this winter to meet our best seven in exhibition matches. The management of the affair is in good hands.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

SERVICES WERE HELD IN HOLLOWAY ST. CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

The week of prayer services were continued last evening, the meeting being held in Holloway St. Church. Rev. R. H. Leitch, pastor, presided over the gathering. The speaker of the evening was the Rev. C. H. Emerson, pastor of the Baptist church. His topic was; "For a revival which, saving the individual, shall also save society. The speaker referred to many evils which underlie the veneer of civilization to-day, most of which can be traced to pride and the greed of gain. This evening the final meeting will be held at the Baptist church, and Rev. A. H. Drumm will deliver the address.

PRETTY GOOD TALE, THIS

IT COMES FROM ALASKA AND MAY BE TRUE.

Vancouver, Jan. 11.—Sheep's teeth tipped with gold led to a remarkable discovery of rich copper and gold deposits in Alaska, according to Mr. L. C. Dillman, who has just come down from Fort Wrangel, and who has the lower jaw of a mountain sheep to prove his strange story. The molar teeth are heavily coated with gold and copper precipitates, and the metals are as highly polished as though the job had been done by a skilful dentist.

Mr. Dillman says that the sheep from which the bone was taken was killed in the foothills of Mount Wrangel; and the metal coating sent prospectors up to the head of Nizina River, a tributary of Great Copper River, where a group of claims was located and called the Ram's Head. A ledge fifteen feet wide, carrying ore giving sixty per cent. copper and $20 in gold to the ton was found. The jawbone is to be sent to President Roosevelt. It is pronounced unique.

Runaway Accident at Fuller.

A peculiar and rather unaccountable accident occurred at Fuller on Friday afternoon last as a result of which Mr. James Hallett sustained quite severe injuries. While going for a load of wood his horses ran away and threw him with the sleigh box, into the snow. Mrs. Royal Walker happened to see the horses running past her house without a driver and, with great presence of mind, ignored the horses and started in the direction from which they came. Following their tracks, she finally found Mr. Hallett lying in the snow in a field in an unconscious condition. She at once summoned help and everything possible was done for the injured man. He had sustained a bad cut over one eye and his face was severely bruised. By the time that medical aid was procured Mr. Hallett had regained consciousness, but he cannot account for the accident. All he remembers is that suddenly a peculiar feeling of weakness came over him, and he thinks the horses must have started to run away while he was in that condition. The horses ran about a mile and a half before they came to a stop, and, strange to say, were not injured themselves, nor was any part of the sleigh or harness damaged. Mr. Hallett is getting along as well as can be expected.

BOARD OF HEALTH

HELD ITS ORGANIZATION FOR THE YEAR THIS MORNING.

A meeting of the local Board of Health was held in the City Clerk's office this morning, for the purpose of organizing for the year. All the members were present, namely: Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer; Mayor Sulman, Messrs. A. McGie, J. Hanley, J. Panter, J. A. Laidlaw and Walter Alford.

Dr. Yeomans presented his annual report, which was a rather lengthy document, and which may be published later.

The report was filed.

The first business was the election of a chairman of the Board for the year, and Mr. A. McGie was unanimously chosen.

The matter of procuring a suitable conveyance for carrying persons afflicted with contagious diseases to the hospital was referred to the chairman and Medical Health Officer.

The matter of converting the rooms over the meat market into a laboratory where milk and other food supplies can be properly tested was also referred to the Medical Health Officer and chairman.

The fact that the provincial authorities having intimated that the grant to the hospital would be withdrawn if persons with contagious diseases were admitted to it, led the members to discuss the propriety of building an isolation hospital.

A motion prevailed that plans, specifications, etc., for an isolation hospital be procured, also an estimate as to its probable cost.

This concluded the business and the Board adjourned.

BUTTER IS SCARCE.

ENGLISH MARKET LOOKING FOR SUPPLIES AND CANADIAN CONDITIONS MAY BE EXTREME.

The butter situation in this country and in Great Britain is assuming some rather striking features, and all operators, though more particularly the retailers, are keeping a close watch on the trend of the market.

In Britain the situation is most acute, and advices by cable and by mail tell of a great scarcity of butter, the choicest grades are specified, but the shortage extends also to the stocks of medium and confectionery grades of butter. Distributors on that market are said to be face to face with a serious problem when trying to replenish their stores. It is apparent that the holdings of surplus stocks of butter, sufficient to see the trade over any temporary shortage, do not exist in England this year, as they have generally have been abnormally heavy this season, but if our output was utilized to cover a shortage from another source of production, as well as to meet the regular demand, the effect of the increased shipments from this country would be lost.

Considering the state of internal affairs in Russia, where a large proportion of the butter consumed in England is produced, it is not to be wondered at if the receipts from that direction have fallen below the average.

What more directly concerns the general public says the Montreal Witness, is the fact that retailers claim that the situation on the wholesale market forces them to charge as high as 30c a pound for their finest creamery. Some merchants laid in a stock earlier in the season, which cost less than it would to-day, but the majority of the grocers are trying almost from hand to mouth, and the value of butter is approaching the record established last February and March, when butter sold as high as 35c.

Escaped from Verdun.

The Chief of Police hands us the following with a request for its publication:

About six months ago there escaped from Verdun Asylum, Montreal, Canada, a man named Robert Von Zoederflicht. In spite of all efforts no trace of him has been discovered. His friends would be very grateful for any information leading to a knowledge of his whereabouts His description is as follows; A man of medium height and build; about 5 ft. 8 in. tall, and weighing about 135 lbs. Aged 40; complexion fair; narrow pointed face; light moustache and beard, but often without beard. Eyes blue. He had a large scar over the right eyebrow, and a smaller one below the lower eyelid. He had a patch of chronically thickened skin on the right cheek. Nose was sharp and pointed; one eyelid drooped. He spoke English rapidly but with a marked German accent. He also spoke French, but poorly, and with an accent. When escaped he wore a dark suit with a white thread running through it, and all his clothing was marked with his asylum number and his name, R. v. Zoederflicht. A, 2. He wore a dark grey soft felt hat, and boots with very narrow pointed toes, size 7 or 8. As to his insanity, it was characterized by 'delusions of grandeur," for instance, he was about to marry the King's daughter; he had ordered a table service of pure gold; he owned vases of fabulous value (he was a curiosity dealer); Emperor William of Germany was one of his closest friends,—and so on, referring usually either to his illustrious connections or his own prospective great wealth. In other matters he seemed comparatively sane. Any information concerning him might be sent to the Verdun Insane Asylum, Montreal, and would be deeply appreciated.

ATTACK A MONEY TRAIN.

Two Volleys From Infantry Kill 65 Revolutionists—Czar Clings to Autocratic Power.

Riga, Livonia, Jan. 12—News has just reached this city of a daring attempt of the revolutionists to capture a military train conveying a large sum of money from St. Petersburg to Libau.

A band of revolutionists having advance information gathered at Hazenpot, burned two bridges and tore up the track. Two companies of infantry which were escorting the train left the cars and were joined by a detachment of dragoons. This force marched against the revolutionists who from behind improvised defences, opened fire on the soldiers.

The infantry, after firing two volleys, which killed sixty-five and wounded nearly 100 of the revolutionists, charged with the bayonet, and the dragoons completed the rout by sabring of the revolutionists they overtook.

Not An Inch Beyond Manifesto.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 12.—Premier Witte according to the Novoe Vremya, at his reception Wednesday of the delegation, headed by the Mayor of St. Petersburg, which called on him to request a relaxation of the orders of the prefect of police against meetings in the interest of the electoral campaign, declared emphatically that the Government would not go an inch beyond the imperial manifesto in the question of transforming the National Assembly into a constituent assembly for the purpose of formulating a constitution and will not tolerate any attempt to do so, which would make it a revolutionary assembly and subject to dissolution by the Emperor.

Clings to Autocratic Power.

The Novoe Vremya also claims that the Premier announced that the Emperor had not abrogated autocratic power and could still by an Imperial manifesto, broaden, abridge and even abolish the rights granted to the people. Continuing the paper quotes Premier Witte, as saying that much is expected of the Manchurian army in the restoration of order in Russia.

T. R. MERRITT IS DEAD.

Founder and President of Imperial Bank Passes to Rest.

St. Catharines, Ont., Jan. 12.—Thomas R. Merritt died at 2.15 yesterday afternoon.

Thomas R. Merritt was born November 17, 1824, in Mayville, New York. He was the fourth son of the late Hon. William Hamilton Merritt, builder of the Welland Canal.

Deceased was reputed to be worth about two million dollars. He was president and founder of the Imperial Bank. The Imperial Bank grew out of the Niagara District Bank, of which he was 21 years president and director.

He was also president of the Welland Canal Loan Co.; president of the Security Loan & Savings Co.; president of the Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Co.; and for many years president of the St. Catharines Gas Co.

He was educated in the St. Catharines Collegiate Institute, and Upper Canada College. In 1853 he married Mary, daughter of the late Thomas Benson, who survives her husband. There were no children. In 1868 Mr. Merritt was elected member of Parliament for Lincoln county, when Hon. Mr. Benson was taken into the Senate. In 1872 he was re-elected, but in 1874 he declined the unanimous nomination of the Conservatives.

He was for many years managing director of the Welland division of the Grand Trunk. Mr. Merritt was prominently connected with Ridley College, and held the office of president. He was a life-long member of St. Thomas Episcopal Church here.

RULE OR RUIN.

U.S. Senator Heyburn Pays His Respects to Wall Street.

Washington, D.C., Jan. 12.—Before going into executive session yesterday, the Senate listened to a speech by Mr. Heyburn in support of his bill creating a national board for the control for corporations, in which he denounced Wall street because of its alleged interference with the affairs of the country.

He said that when the "street" could not dictate the financial course of the Government it was ever ready to threaten disaster, and he pleaded for legislation that would rob it of such power for evil.

AFTER GARRY VANZANT

Did Toronto Gaol Governor Take a Hand in West Elgin in 1899?

Two Reputable Citizens of St. Thomas Charge That He Was "Deputy Returning Officer Stratford" at Polling Division No. 4 in St. Thomas—The Affidavits in Full—Governor VanZant Denies Charge Emphatically.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—That Garry VanZant, governor of the Toronto Jail, had a hand in the West Elgin election of Jan. 12, 1899, is asserted by two reputable residents of the city of St. Thomas, who have sworn to affidavits now in the hands of the Provincial Secretary.

The men who make the solemn declaration that VanZant is Christopher Stratford are Percy A. Honsinger, merchant of St. Thomas, and Benjamin F. Honsinger, cigar manufacturer, of the same place.

Mr. VanZant was appointed to the jail after the bye-elections of 1899; the office was the gift of the Ross Government. The Ross Government was sustained in power by the result in West Elgin. West Elgin prolonged the life of the Ross Government, but it was the turning point in its career. Interesting revelations are expected.

What B. F. Honsinger Says.

The affidavit of Benjamin F. Honsinger of St. Thomas, cigar manufacturer, says:

"I well remember the provincial election held in West Elgin on the 12th day of January, 1899, and was engaged at said election around the polling booth for polling sub-division No. 4, St. Thomas, and saw the man who acted in said division as deputy returning officer in the name of Christopher Stratford, and I know that the person who so acted there in his name was not Christopher Stratford. I have had produced and shown to me the photograph marked exhibit "A" to this my declaration, and I believe the person who is marked with the letter "A" in said photograph is the person who acted under the false name of Christopher Stratford at said election."

Percy Honsinger's Affidavit.

Percy A. Honsinger swears:

"That I am a merchant residing in the City of St. Thomas and have resided there for twenty years. That on Jan. 12, 1899, I acted as inside scrutineer at polling sub-division No. 4 for the City of St. Thomas, in connection with the elections holden for the electoral district of West Elgin. That at that time a man, representing himself as of the name of Christopher Stratford, and gave his occupation as a railroad engineer on the Michigan Central, and said he resided at Walkerville, in the County of Essex, acted as deputy returning officer.

"Since then I have had pointed out to me a man who is alleged to be Garry VanZant, formerly a resident of Markham Village, in the County of York, and his picture is marked as exhibit "A," hereto annexed. To-day, at the request of some friend, who thought that the present jailer, Garry VanZant, was the same person as the Christopher Stratford, above mentioned, I visited the Toronto Jail in order to see the said VanZant.

Thou Are the Man.

"I have seen the said VanZant, and I am perfectly satisfied that the said VanZant, who is now a jailor at the Toronto Jail, is one and the same person who acted as deputy returning officer in polling sub-division No. 4, in the said City of St. Thomas, under the name of Christopher Stratford, representing himself to be a railroad engineer, and residing at Walkerville, in Essex County.

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of 'The Canada Evidence Act, 1893'."

Not at the Buildings Yet.

Premier Whitney didn't know anything about it. "I know of no such charges, affidavits or otherwise. When such affidavits come before me I can assure you I shall read them with a great deal of interest," he said.

Hon. Mr. Hanna said he had heard about the VanZant matter, but he was very emphatic that there was nothing official about it in his department.

VanZant Denies It.

"I never acted as deputy returning officer in West Elgin, or anywhere else in Canada, in my life. I was twice returning officer in East York. My son lives in St. Thomas and as far as I can learn he never acted as a deputy returning officer there. The insinuations are absolutely untrue. I have nothing further to say until some definite charges are made by somebody," said Governor VanZant when he was asked about it all last night.

That Confession.

From the confession of Donald Macnish, June 26, 1899: "That a large number of persons were especially sent into the constituency, which men, working on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part on Mr. Macnish's behalf in the election held Jan. 12, 1899, and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some of such persons to secure his election.

"That several of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers in the said election, and in at least three cases so acted in the names of reputable local men, having under assumed names been introduced to the returning officer by local agents of Mr. Macnish."

CHEESEMAKERS' DAY.

Progress of the Dairy Industry—Convention At Peterboro.

Mr. Publow presented a report of the work of the syndicated factories in Eastern Ontario during the past season, which showed progress along all lines. The factories had been improved, better dairies erected, and the farmers were beginning to take better care in handling the milk on the farm.

INTERESTING FACTS

FOR NEARLY EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD.

A short time ago we published an article recommending to our readers the new discovery for the cure of dyspepsia, called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and the claims then made regarding the wonderful curative properties of the remedy have been abundantly sustained by the facts. People who were cautious about trying new remedies advertised in the newspapers and were finally induced to give Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial were surprised and delighted at the results. In many cases a single package costing but 50 cents at any drug store made a complete cure and in every instance the most beneficial results were reported. From a hundred or more received we have space to publish only a few of the latest, but assure our readers we receive so many commendatory letters that we shall publish each week a fresh list of genuine, unsolicited testimonials and never publish the same one twice.

From James Yemmeisler, LaCrosse, Wis.: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are doing me more good than anything I ever tried and I was so pleased at results that I gave away several boxes to my friends, who have also had the same benefits.

From Jacob Anthony, Portmurray, New Jersey: I have taken Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets with the best results. I had dyspepsia for 6 years, and had taken a great deal of medicine, but the Tablets seem to take right a hold and I feel good. I am a farmer and lime burner, and I heartily recommend to everyone who has any trouble with his stomach to use these Tablets.

From Mrs. M. K. West, Preston, Minn.: I have received surprisingly good effects from using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I gave one-half of my last box to a friend who also suffered from indigestion and she had the same good results.

From Mrs. Agnes K. Ralston, Cadillac, Mich.: I have been taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and I am very much better, and feel very grateful for the great benefit I have received in so short a time.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a certain cure for all forms of indigestion. They are not claimed to be a cure-all, but are prepared for stomach troubles only, and physicians and druggists everywhere recommend them to all persons suffering from nervous dyspepsia, sour or acid stomach, heartburn, bloating or wind on stomach and similar disorders.

SERIES OF BIG DISCOUNTS.

Hardly Anything Left of List Prices When They Were Deducted.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—Agreements among the different members of the tack combine were unearthed by Crown Attorney Curry in the Police Court yesterday. They were similar to the ones previously published.

One of the letters read by Mr. Curry was one found in the Jenkins & Hardy files, written by the Montreal Rolling Mills. It stated that it would be as well to make a wholesale reduction of 12 1-2 per cent. in the prices of upholsterers' tacks, because the United States' manufacturers were selling them 12 1-2 per cent. below the combine prices.

The G. T. R. contracts were the subject of considerable discussion. In one letter it was stated that discounts of 85 per cent., 12 1-2, 12 1-2 and 5 were to be allowed on the list.

On Jan. 14, 1904, a circular was sent out from Hardy's office asking the members to agree not to increase the facilities in order to create a larger output in their factories.

The case was adjourned until Monday afternoon owing to Crown Attorney Curry being busy in the Walton case.

ROBLIN'S BILL OF FARE.

Extension of Manitoba's Boundaries to Be Demanded.

Winnipeg, Jan. 12.—The Provincial Legislature was opened yesterday afternoon by the Lieutenant-Governor. The speech from the throne expresses regret that the federal authorities omitted taking action in regard to Manitoba's request for wider boundaries.

A demand for an increased subsidy from the Dominion is forecasted, and bills promised to further supplement the revenues of the Crown by amendments to the Taxation of Corporation and Taxation of Railways Acts; to provide for the inspection of companies and organizations incorporated by or empowered to transact business under the laws of the province; respecting the operation of telephone lines; to amend the Liquor License Act by providing, amongst other things, for limiting the area in which licenses may be granted in the City of Winnipeg; to amend the Manitoba Election Act, ensuring to every elector the free and untrammelled right of franchise and imposing heavy penalties for the mutilation of lists of electors.

WHERE CANADA SELLS

Britain Gets Our Goods, But We Buy South of the Border.

Chamberlain "Facts and Figures" Concerning the Preference — Premier C. B. Gets His Seat by Acclamation —His Opponent Withdrew Through Illness—Countess of Warwick Advises Dock Laborers.

London, Jan. 12.—(C.A.P.)—To the great controversy now waging, the Chamberlain Tariff Commission here contributes another statement, summarizing the testimony offered as to the Canadian preference. It says that the facts and figures justify these conclusions: First, that during the last twenty years the tendency has been for Canada in an increasing degree to depend on the United Kingdom for a disposal of her products and on the United States for the supply of the materials which could have been supplied by the United Kingdom. Largely as the result of the keen United States and German competition, British exports to Canada had declined till the preference was granted. Since then they have increased, yet the British share of the Canadian market is increasing at a lesser rate than the share of the United States. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's utterance in September last is quoted to the effect that his Cabinet was ready to make a trade treaty with the British Ministers.

Bannerman's Walk-Over.

There will be no opposition to the re-election of the Premier, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, to represent the Stirling district, in Scotland, the Unionist candidate, K. C. Murchison, being seriously ill. This has caused the Unionist committee to abandon the contest.

At the last election Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman was elected by a majority of 630, the vote being: Campbell-Bannerman, 2,715; Lieut.-Col. Oliver T. Duke, 2,085.

The first nominations for the coming elections were made yesterday at Ipswich, where the four candidates in the field have agreed not to raise the question regarding the legality of such an early date, on which subject there is a difference of opinion. The polling at Ipswich to-day will start the elections.

Lady Warwick in It.

Lady Warwick, the court beauty known as the democratic countess, took a hand in the election struggle yesterday, addressing her "comrades and friends," the dock laborers of Westham, in support of the dock laborers' candidate, "Will" Thorne. The countess, in a dainty Parisian costume, braved the bleak wind while from a tradesman's wagon she urged the laborers to work to secure an independent labor party in the House of Commons. She asserted that she was convinced of the ultimate victory of the democratic movement, and prophesied that the new Government would not last longer than 18 months.

"You workers," said the countess, "are the empire. Rememebr your responsibility and sow the seeds of freedom for your children."

Her ladyship was accorded a tremendous ovation by crowds of dock laborers, who went without their dinners to listen to her speech.

BANWELL ARRESTED.

Crown Bank Absconder Run Down in Kingston, Jamaica.

Toronto, Jan. 12.—A cable was received at police headquarters last night from Kingston, Jamaica, stating that Edwin St. G. Banwell, the absconding clerk of the Crown Bank, was arrested there during the day. Detective William Black of the city force sent the message.

Banwell left the city suddenly on Dec. 9 with some of the bank's funds. Miss Hector is also under arrest.

The cablegram from Detective Black notifying the department that he had captured the fugitives also said he had recovered the money. Just how much Banwell got away with is still a mystery. Bank gossip has placed the amount at $60,000 others have run it up to $100,000.

As Jamaica is a British possession, extradition proceedings will not be necessary, and the couple are merely charge under the fugitive offenders act, and it is probable they will come back via Halifax.

The Printers' Strike.

New York, Jan. 12—The Typothetae of the City of New York authorized the statement yesterday that the working force now in the Typothetae and independent composing rooms is nearly 50 per cent. of the total number employed.

President McCormick of the Typographical Union was equally confident that the Typothetae could not win. He said: "As we have now 282 firms running on an eight-hour day, against only thirty-four running on a nine-hour day, the Typothetae's winning is an impossibility."

Teller Banwell Took $40,000.

Most of the Money Taken by The Fugitives Recovered.

Prisoner Had $38,000 in His Possession When Arrested by Detective Black at Kingston, Jamaica—His Wife Is Charged With Him—Their Relatives Will Make No Opposition to Their Forced Return—A Long Chase.

Toronto, Jan. 13.—After the arrest of Edwin St. George Banwell had been effected the principal question yesterday was: How much did he get away with? When the escaping couple went away they had in their possession:

400 $50 unsigned Crown Bank bills, numbering 601 to 1,000 inclusive.
228 $50 Crown Bank notes.
289 $20 Brown Bank notes.
A lot of unitialed 5, 10, 20 and 50-dollar notes.
125 $4 Dominion of Canada notes.
£1,500 Bank of England notes.
£132 English gold.
$835 United States gold.
Total, $40,350.33.

Of this, $1,000, which Banwell mailed to his mother, was returned to the bank, and Detective Black has recovered about $38,000.

Yesterday the authorities prepared the necessary papers to bring the fugitive bank clerk and his companion, Norah Hector, back to Toronto. The information is sworn out by Sergt. Detective Duncan, who charges Banwell and Norah Hector, alias Banwell, did on Dec. 9, contrary to law, fraudulently take and convert to their own use the above sums of money.

The necessary papers to bring the prisoners back were sent to Detective Black last night.

The relatives of both the fugitives have said to the police that they will put forth no opposition to their being brought back by the authorities.

The chase while it lasted spread through four countries and extended over about 5,000 miles of territory.

GIRLS BREAK THE STRIKE.

Montreal Gazette Printers Have Gone Back to Work.

Montreal, Jan. 13.—The Gazette has worsted the striking printers as far as the news room is concerned, the strike having been declared off in that department. Hereafter The Gazette newsroom will be an open shop.

The returned strikers were obliged to work last evening alongside the girls who had been brought in to take their places and who had helped to break the strike.

As soon as the local president heard that their ranks were broken and that six or seven men determined to go back on any terms he at once declared the strike off.

The situation in the job room remains unchanged.

The firemen were able to keep the sleeping rooms intact, but as there was no possibility of resuming operations for several weeks all the guests left the house. The loss of the kitchen plant, dining-room and general damage will, it is said, foot up to a quarter of a million dollars.

A Lack of Competition.

The old squire was narrating his experiences with county fairs. "You never had much to do with managing them, perhaps," he said. "Well, I have had a great deal. It takes a lot of head work, I can tell you, to think up popular features outside of the big steers, the fat hogs, the mammoth squashes, the poultry, the preserves, the lace tidies and the agricultural horse trots to draw the crowd.

"I remember one year," he proceeded, "when we got everybody's interest excited by announcing a prize of a gold

"Yes, I know 'im," interrupted one of the listeners, "and I've seen the cane. Who got the silk dress for being the homeliest woman?"

"Nobody. There weren't any entries."

Salt Water Falls.

There are a good many salt cataracts in existence. They may be found in Norway, southern Chile and British Columbia, where narrow fiords, or arms of the sea, are obstructed by barriers of rock. The rising tide flows over and filters through such reefs into the great natural reservoirs beyond, but the water is held back at the ebb until it flood tide from the gulf of Georgia, to the southward, is dammed back at a narrow cleft between two islands until it pours over in a boiling cascade eighteen feet high, with perhaps double the volume of the Rhine. At the turn of the tide, however, the waters from the north rush back into the gulf, producing a cascade of equal height and volume. This salt water fall actually flows both ways.

The Supreme Court of Mexico has declined to grant a stay of execution in the cases of Maston, Richardson and Hart, who were recently sentenced at Chihuahua to be shot for murder. Richardson was at one time a resident of this city, his business being life insurance. His crime in Mexico consisted of helping to do away with a man to secure his insurance money.

Rings of Fungous Growth.

Before people studied nature to learn the truth and when they delighted in all sorts of fancies it was claimed that rings of fungous growths were caused by the dancing of fairies, by a thunderbolt entering the ground or by the work of moles. Various other equally absurd explanations have been given. Now we know that the first fungous plant growing from a spore takes from the soil under and near it all or most of the special food that the plant requires. Only the spores from this plant that fall just outside the exhausted soil will find good fungous food, and so the circle of successive growths widens because only the spores outside of the ring can find food.

How Icelanders Take Snuff.

A peculiarity concerning the use of snuff in Iceland may be of interest. The snuff is made into bars after the manner of plug tobacco and is sold in that shape to the natives, nearly all of whom are addicted to its use and prefer it thus prepared. The Icelander allows the nail on the right hand thumb to grow long for the purpose and when using the snuff scratches it off the bar with his nail on the back of his left hand and applies it to his nose.

Whence Come Microbes.

A writer in Le Figaro of Paris (Dr. Ox) at the close of a long article on the origin of microbes declares that the bacillus of consumption originally came from blades of rye, wheat and corn and that the human lung is its adopted abode, where it would perish were it not replenished. That rare atmospheres are beneficial to consumptives is not because they are thin, but because rye, wheat, corn, etc., are not grown there.

Ice Trouble at Trenton

Trenton Courier: On Monday afternoon, a jam of ice up the river gave way flooding the banks and loosening the centre sheet of ice above G.T.R. bridge. The ice came down in one sheet cutting through the bridge and came with great force against the dam breaking the 12 x 14 inch stop logs like so many pipe stems, to a depth of 10 feet. The water in the dam was lowered 2 feet within an hour.

Railway Equipment—Its Cost!

Few people outside those immediately interested have the faintest idea of the magnitude of the equipment necessary to do the railway business of this continent.

The current issue of the Railway Age gives a list of the rolling stock ordered by the railways of this continent during 1905, which is well worth a few minutes study. Orders, says a reviewer, were placed during the year for 6,265 locomotives, a greater number than were ordered in 1902 and 1904 combined, or 146 per cent more than ordered in the latter year.

Orders for passenger stock were not as heavy, but nevertheless were 18 per cent. greater than those of 1904. The great increase, however, was in freight car orders, which were nearly 40 per cent. greater than in 1903 and 1904 combined, or an increase of 150 per cent. over the orders for 1904. The total expenditure represented by these orders is in excess of $450,000,000. The immensity of this sum can perhaps best be gauged from the fact that the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year 1904 gave the value of the equipment of the railways of the country as $534,000,000, or about $100,000,000 more than the value of the orders placed last year. Of course all this rolling stock did not go into service. It was ordered, not placed in service. Some of it as a matter of fact will not be delivered before the end of the present year. The plants of the continent could not turn out the equipment ordered in 1905 in twelve months. The orders indicate that the demand for increased equipment is general throughout the whole continent. Thus the following railways placed orders for more than 100 locomotives each:

Pennsylvania lines	841
Erie	259
Baltimore & Ohio	250
Southern Pacific	237
New York Central	191
Santa Fe	189
Southern	177
Rock Island	165
Burlington route	165
New York & N.H. & H.R.R.	142
Philadelphia & Reading	141
Western Pacific	141
Canadian Pacific	135
Chicago & Northwestern	125
Atlantic Coast line	100

The Grand Trunk would have been in this table but for the fact that it only placed an order for 89 locomotives after the end of the year, making its total 129.

The large orders for passenger equipment were not as numerous. They included:

New York N.H. & H.R.R.	216
Pennsylvania lines	205
Canadian Pacific	182
Southern Pacific	153
Santa Fe	123

The leading orders of freight equipment were:

Road	Cars.
Pennsylvania lines	51,665
Southern	17,572
Lake Shore	10,304
Baltimore & Ohio	10,010
New York Central	9,086
Norfolk & Western	8,725
Erie	8,721
Santa Fe	8,505
Canadian Pacific	8,020
Chesapeake & Ohio	7,608
Chicago & Eastern Minors	7,550
Great Western	7,200
Big Four	7,133
Chicago & Northwestern	6,569
Delaware, L. & W.	6,468
Philadelphia and Reading	6,100
Grand Trunk	5,650
Rock Island	5,594
Burlington Route	5,450
Illinois Central	5,295
Northern Pacific	5,200
Missouri Pacific	5,000
New York, N.H. & H.	4,824
Atlantic Coast line	4,725
Louisville & Nashville	4,725
Boston & Maine	4,258

All these railways earn a dividend for their shareholders. The political railway of Canada plunders the treasury of the country of about $2,000,000 a year to keep it running. That's the difference between political and business management!

TIMELY TOPICS.

This winter is a huge joke on those people who have gone down south and to Egypt to escape the cold weather.

Just think of it. Easter Sunday is only thirteen weeks from to-morrow, and we haven't started on our 'steenth ton of coal yet!

An alderman told The Intelligencer last night that he intended, at the next meeting of Council, to move that all civic employees be notified that now was the time for them to complain if they considered their salaries were not large enough. Then the Council could deal with their cases. Under no circumstances, our aldermanic friend said, would he again vote for a grant to a civic official in the dying moments of a year. The principle was a wrong one, and must be stopped at once.

A citizen dropped in yesterday evening to ask a question which seems quite pertinent at the present time. "I notice," he said, "that the Mayor, in his message, advises the construction of the Zwick's island filtering basin this year. Now, if I recollect rightly, the Council paid Mr. Willis Chipman, C.E., of Toronto, $50 to make an examination of the island and report on the proposed scheme. He reported that it would cost $13,000. Then Street Surveyor Hulme announced that he could do the work for $8,000. I would like to ask, before any steps are taken, the plan which Mr. Hulme proposes to follow in installing his $8,000 filtering system. It must be remembered that filtration takes time, and that water which percolates freely through gravel will gradually make its passage easier and before long there will be no filtration at all. This is a principle with which all hydraulic engineers are well acquainted. As a citizen, I think it would be deplorable if $8,000 of the city's money were sunk in what might, perhaps, turn out to be a useless experiment, therefore I would respectfully ask the Council, before they embark on Mr. Hulme's $8,000 scheme, to let us know something of the plan which they propose to follow. I think we are entitled to such information."

Most of our citizens, we are sure, will agree with the sentiments contained in the last sentence up above. There are, in this city, so many monuments to the Street Surveyor's engineering ability, in the shape of crooked walks, puddles on streets, walks lower than boulevards, and over which water runs, etc., that most people would like, before an $8,000 job is started, to see the plan O. K.'d by some "expert" other than the Street Surveyor. Reliable advice may come high, but it is generally cheapest in the long run.

The cost of living in the United States for the eight years to July 1, 1905, according to Dun's Index Number, has risen 35.7 per cent.; that is, wholesale prices representing, in due relation to per capita consumption, the cost of breadstuffs, meats, dairy and garden products, and other foods; clothing, metals and miscellaneous products like lumber, glass, paints and drugs, have risen since 1897 from $72,455 to $98,312. The prices of many hundred commodities, embracing practically all the necessaries of life, are included in this reckoning. The same goods cost at wholesale $101.91 in 1902, when prices were at the highest since 1882; in the latter year prices had risen since the resumption of specie payments in 1878 from $96,268 to $123.23. Average retail prices are impossible of ascertainment, but the course of wholesale prices represents fairly the difference in the cost of living.

It is stated officially, says the London Free Press, that the Province has 60,000 miles of country road under the control of county and township councils. Since the movement for better conditions started there has been a radical improvement in their condition. In the year 1903-4 over 1,600 miles of main roads were improved at an expenditure of $500,000, the provincial aid being one-third of the entire cost. The movement has led to the introduction of modern grading machines, stone crushers, road rollers, gravel wagons and scrapers in place of the crude methods and implements of the time when statute labor was chiefly relied upon to keep the roads in repair. From the public report it is gathered that drainage is given the greatest attention, tile being used with frequent outlets, leading to natural water courses. Concrete culverts have taken the place of the breakers once so common, and on the steep hills where such surface drainage is necessary, the road-bed with its high centre crown is as smooth as on the level.

The law was made to be obeyed. In the city of London, Ont., police court on the 11th Jan. four hotelmen were fined in sums of from $20 to $40 with costs for infraction of the liquor law. Hotelmen would do well to keep within the law.

The United States saw manufacturers' combine is negotiating for the purchase of all the saw manufacturing industries in Canada, consisting of shops in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, N.B., and Ottawa. The letter from Ald. Marsh, Chairman of the Executive Committee, which appears in another column, speaks for itself. The Intelligencer, on a former occasion, pointed out that property-owners who did not pay their taxes did injustice to those who did. That seems to be the principle which underlies this matter. The city has no right to make fish of one taxpayer and flesh of another. Ald. Marsh is to be commended for his action in taking steps to see that all classes of our citizens are used alike.

The question of Sunday funerals is an old and much-debated one. Time and again ministers in this city have declared against it, but it still goes on. That there are two sides to the question is thus proven by the Hamilton Spectator: "It is natural enough for a clergyman to desire to escape from the work incident to the so-called Christian burial on Sunday. That is his busy day, and when he adds a funeral to his other work, he has not much time to spare. But there are only a few clergymen, and there are many laymen who prefer Sunday funerals for the reason that they have more time to spare on that day than upon any other day. A week-day funeral involves the loss of half a day to every man who attends it, and there are few who can easily stand the consequent loss in wages. The greatest good to the greatest number is not a bad motto."

I have two children, and they had a terrible cough. I gave them everything I could think of, but they got no better, until one evening my husband bought a bottle of Shiloh's. We gave it to the children when they went to bed, and they slept all night. It cured them completely. I shall always keep it in the house." 603

Laboratory Idea Is Ridiculed By A Local Doctor

SAYS THERE IS NO NEED FOR EITHER THAT OR THE ISOLATION HOSPITAL—THINKS THEY WOULD BE VERY COSTLY AND ENTIRELY UNNECESSARY.

A local medical man, talking on the matters which came up at the Board of Health meeting yesterday, had a few interesting things to say to The Intelligencer. In regard to the proposition to convert the rooms over the Meat Market into a laboratory he was emphatic. "The place is totally unsuitable," he said, "and then what need is there for a laboratory in this city? The testing of milk was carried out here for five years before Dr. Yeomans became Medical Health Officer. The city owns a Babcock milk tester, and Mr. Kerr, a qualified Government inspector, lives in the city still. He used to test the milk for other Health Officers, and I have no doubt would do so for Dr. Yeomans if he were asked. The milk used formerly to be tested about six times a year. Perhaps you can tell me how many times it has been tested since the present Health Officer took office?"

"Once, I think," said the newspaper man, speaking from memory.

"As to food inspection," said the medico, "that is a Dominion Government affair entirely. If a complaint is laid before the Ottawa authorities they will take action at once. If a test of the water is needed, specimens need only be sent to Toronto. The only charge will be the expressage. What need is there, can you tell me, for a laboratory here?"

"What would be the probable cost of fitting up a laboratory?" asked the newspaper man.

"Fifteen hundred dollars, at least," said the medical man.

"They come high," ventured the other, "and what will it cost to fit up an isolation hospital, which the Board of Health talks of?"

"Probably between $4000 and $5000," said the medico, "and as much more yearly to maintain it. But to my mind there is no need for an isolation hospital. Let the doctors report all cases of infectious diseases at once, and let them be properly looked after, and there will be no trouble. I have heard it stated that some of the local doctors do not report their cases of infectious disease to the Medical Health Officer. Why does he not have them punished? That is his duty, and one of the things he is paid for."

And the newspaper man, not having a suitable answer to the question ready, passed it up. As he walked away, the medical man said: "Mind you, an isolation hospital, for diphtheria, scarlet fever and the like, could not be used for smallpox, anyhow. There would have to be a separate building for that." is better than other Soaps but is best when used in the Sunlight way. Follow directions.

SUNLIGHT WAY OF WASHING

FIRST.—Dip the article to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water, draw it out on a washboard and rub the soap lightly over it. Be particular not to miss soaping all over. THEN roll it in a tight roll, lay in the tub under the water, and go on the same way until all the pieces have the soap rubbed on, and are rolled up.

Then go away for thirty minutes to one hour and let the "Sunlight" Soap do its work.

NEXT.—After soaking the full time rub the clothes lightly out on a wash board, and the dirt will drop out; turn the garment inside out to get at the seams, but don't use any more soap; don't scald or boil a single piece, and don't wash through two suds. If the water gets too dirty, pour a little out and add fresh. If a streak is hard to wash, rub some more soap on it, and throw the piece back into the suds for a few minutes.

LASTLY COMES THE RINSING, which is to be done in lukewarm water, taking special care to get all the dirty suds away, then wring out and hang up to dry.

For Woolens and Flannels proceed as follows:—Shake the articles free from dust. Cut a tablet of SUNLIGHT SOAP into shavings, pour into a gallon of boiling water and whisk into a lather. When just lukewarm, work articles in the lather without rubbing. Squeeze out dirty water without twisting and rinse thoroughly in two relays of lukewarm water. Squeeze out water without twisting and hang in the open air.

The most delicate colors may be safely washed in the "Sunlight" way.

FOLLOWING THE STAR — GOLDEN TEXT IS "MY SON, GIVE ME THINE HEART."

(By William T. Ellis.)

For many centuries imagination has been busy about the story of the Wise Men and the star. Fable, fiction and poetry in profusion have been built upon it. Aside from the intensely dramatic character of the incident itself, it typifies the soul's pursuit of its highest destiny, and responds to the dim; unsatisfied yearnings that have always existed in the human heart, impelling the race to an endless search for some El Dorado, some golden age, some Ponce de Leon's fountain. Everybody, at some time or other, wishes to join the Wise Men in their mysterious quest.

This deep longing of mankind is universal: the old chroniclers say that at the time of the Wise Men it had become a great expectation. The world was on the qui vive for the arrival of a mighty personage or event. The universe seemed to be conspiring together to focus man's attention upon the new King. That ancient expectation, dim and inarticulate though it was, chords with the present definite awakening of interest, among all classes of society, in the character and teachings of Jesus. Novelist, socialist, moralist, politician and preacher all are laying new stress on that Life which they hold up as the hope of humanity. The wisdom of the Magi in undertaking a search which by many has been called folly, is to-day justified.

MEN OF MYSTERY.

Who and what were these Wise Men from the East is left largely to conjecture. Tradition has so colored the entire incident that the known facts must be sought for. Their number is not even said to have been three; this is a mere inference from the fact that there were three kinds of gifts brought. One legend says there were fourteen. Their names are not known, nor their residence. The surmise that they were Persian is reasonable. They doubtless belonged to that class, high in royal favor, and, at times, sitting on thrones, whom we find mentioned in the books of Daniel and Esther. Old Matthew Henry sagely observes, "Whatever sort of Wise Men they were before, they now began to be wise men indeed when they set themselves to inquire after Christ." They followed the light they had until it led them to more light; the Star of the East guided them to the Sun of Righteousness.

Mysterious as are these pilgrim astrologers to our view, the event proved them to be the wisest and best of their time. While the character of their gifts indicate that they were honorable and wealthy, and men of position in their own country, the simple fact of their quest proves them to have been men of serious mind, appraising life at its true value. Only an overmastering conviction of the importance of the birth to which the star pointed could have constrained them to the long journey which General Wallace's imagination has made so vivid in "Ben Hur." Most signal proof of their deserving is the fact that to them the King was revealed by God.

There is an interesting study in the characters of the persons to whom this revelation of the birth came; first to the simple shepherds about their toil, then to aged Simeon and Anna in the temple, then to the Magi of heathen lands—labor, worship and scholarship thus earning peculiar crowns. The East welcomed the new King, the South sheltered Him, but the frivolous, fashionable and worldly Jerusalem of the day ignored Him, while its king sought His life.

THE WONDERFUL STAR.

One of the least of the many wonders attending the miraculous birth of Jesus was this strange new star which God hung in the heavens as a beckoning beacon to the devout astrologers of the East. Kepler, the astronomer, has offered an explanation to the effect that it was a conjunction of the major planets, which appeared again early in the seventeenth century. This explanation has since been generally discredited, nor was it ever necessary. The moving star must be accepted as a miracle, if accepted at all. It was, one has said, "a candle set up on purpose to guide the Wise Men to Christ." The star, it may be said in passing, did not appear to the shepherds, nor did it hang over the manger; it was a later event.

The star proved the Magi wise, for they followed it. Many others must have seen the phenomenon in the sky and marvelled, but they alone obeyed its beckoning. Wonderment becomes faith only when it finds its feet. Everybody has occasional exalted moments and lofty impulses, but only the few make these the rule of their lives. Tennyson sums up all success in fidelity to one's noblest vision, and his exhortation is:

"After it! After it!
Follow the gleam!"

The Wise Men recognized this as the star of a king; who less would be worthy of such unparalleled and heavenly distinction? So they came to do reverence, obeying that deep instinct to worship which is a crown man was permitted to wear out of his estate of Eden. The eagerness of the great to recognize a greater is a measure of their own greatness. The impudent irreverence which mocks at sacred things—any man's sacred things—is found only in the small and irresponsible. At its best moments, at the summit of its experience, the soul is worshipful.

THE JEALOUSY OF THE GREAT.

Here was Herod the Great, at the zenith of his magnificence, yet his cruel, hard old heart began to quake when a little company of pilgrims appear asking for the new King. Why should his despotic greatness tremble because a babe had been born? It does seem as if jealousy, one of the lowest passions—the one Milton says, which made hell—takes up its abode most frequently in highest places. Had Herod been half as good a Jew as he pretended to be he would have rejoiced over this sign of the fulfilment of the old prophecies. Instead, unreasoning terror seized him. He veiled it, together with a sinister purpose, beneath a hypocritical solicitude for the new Messiah. So he gathered all the chief priests and experts in ecclesiastical law and set them to hunting through the prophetic rolls for an answer to the wise men's question—nor was he the Messiah was to be born in the neighboring village of Bethlehem, "for thus it is written by the prophet,

And thou, Bethlehem, land of Judah,
Art in no wise least among the princes of Judah:
For out of thee shall come a governor,
Who shall shepherd My people Israel."

A GREAT GOAL'S LONELINESS.

This pointed out a plain path for the Wise Men: the end of their strange search was at hand. Only five miles distant from Jerusalem, where they now stood, was Bethlehem, and they eagerly hastened forth, after the bloody-minded Herod had extracted from them what particulars of the birth they possessed, and had laid on them an injunction to return and tell him all they found. Such is the folly of the wicked, that Herod never sent a soldier or a spy to accompany the strangers, to make sure that his vengeance might strike certainly and swiftly.

Not a Jew followed the Wise Men. It is strange, almost beyond belief, that, despite the wonderment which the visit of the Magi had created, and the general knowledge of their destination, not a single person, nor even a priest or a devout student of the law, attached himself to their train. Nor did the effulgence of the moving star cause any to follow. Incredible heart-blindness!

Only the Wise Men journeyed on, and the goal of all their long and miracle-attended journey proved to be but a peasant home in an obscure village on the outskirts of Jerusalem.

THE WISE MEN AT THE BABE'S FEET.

It was not to the manger they went, many beautiful pictures to the contrary notwithstanding. The circumcision, with the legal eight days intervening between the rite and the birth, and the presentation in the temple, which occurred forty days after the birth, involving a journey to Jerusalem, and the recognition of the Babe by Simeon and Anna, had all elapsed since the visit of the shepherds. The Scripture plainly says that Wise Men came to the "house," where they found Jesus. Doubtless Mary and Joseph and the Babe were now residing with relatives or friends; the sojourn in the stable could not have been long, for woman's heart is the same everywhere and at all times; and it is unbelievable that the women of Bethlehem would permit the mother and newborn Child long to remain guests of the cattle in the annex of the inn.

When the Wise Men "came into the house and saw the young Child with Mary, His mother, they fell down and worshipped Him." Let none think that it was a light-irradiating, halo-crowned, celestial Creature, such as sacred art has loved to depict, before whom they prostrated themselves. It was only such a chubby, rosy, sleepy babe as blesses a myriad homes in this land to-day.

Thus the Wise Men showed their wisdom. Despite unimpressive external appearances, they were great enough to see that in the Babe could be the Messiah, whose advent had added a new star to the sky, and had set the universe into commotion. Any wise man bows at the feet of any babe, fresh from the mysterious realm where life's springs first bubble forth; how much the more should they adore this one who was Christ the Lord!

GIFTS FOR A KING.

Undoubting, rejoicing, satisfied, the Wise Men poured forth treasure—gold frankincense, myrrh, in which the church had delighted to see symbols of the nature of the new born Child—gold for His kingliness, frankincense for His divinity, and myrrh, the burial spice, for His humanity.

Very practical uses did these gifts serve, for thereby the humble carpenter, Joseph, was enabled to take his little family, as directed in a dream by the angel, down to Egypt, there to sojourn until the sanguinary purpose of Herod had been foiled, and the tyrant had himself perished.

Here the wise men drop out of sight One wonders what next. Whither did they go after worshipping the King? Back to their own country and to their old ways? The imagination loves to linger here. Doubtless they returned, but it was with a new joy, a new inspiration, a new hope, and new life. Their names stand high on the roll of the world's successful ones, for they had been true to their highest impulse and opportunity; they had followed their vision: they had worshipped the new King. Thenceforth His peace made endless music in their hearts, and the expectation of meeting and adoring Him again, beyond the stars, gave them a sufficient hope and reward Life nevermore becomes commonplace to a man who has done a great deed or seen a great vision.

You Probably Have the White Scab of Dandruff on It.

If your coat or shoulders have a white dust upon it, the chances are that it is from dandruff. The only way to permanently cure dandruff is to remove the cause, which is a germ. Newbro's Herpicide kills the germ. Every toilet table should have such a hair-dressing that contains also the destroyer of the dandruff and hair failing germ. It stops all irritation, keeps the scalp sweet, pure and wholesome. Remember that something claimed to be "just as good," will not do the work of genuine Herpicide.

A VENERABLE FICTION.

The Ceremony of Carrying the Purse In the House of Lords.

When the lord chancellor enters the house of lords to preside over its deliberations he is accompanied by his "purse bearer." This functionary, however, does not carry the purse of the lord chancellor, which would be a weighty responsibility, as his lordship draws a salary of £10,000 a year. The purse the "purse bearer" solemnly carries as, arrayed in court dress, he precedes the lord chancellor to and from the house of lords is a gorgeous satchel embroidered with the royal arms and other heraldic devices in white and gold and lined with the richest silk. It is supposed to contain the great seal. As a matter of fact, that emblem of a mighty sovereignty is never in the satchel. If it were, the responsibility of the "purse bearer" would be great—much greater indeed than if he had to bear a purse that carried a salary of £10,000 a year.

The ceremony of carrying the purse in the house of lords is but one of the many venerable fictions which play a picturesque part in the parliamentary procedure. The purse is placed on the woolsack. It indicates that the lord chancellor is in possession of the great seal and therefore entitled to perform his duties as speaker of the house of lords.—London Globe.

THREE WAYS TO SUBDUE.

A Story of Buddha and the Trainer of Elephants.

From Hindoo tales that have come through the Chinese, who give us most of our Indian records—the rishis were dreamers and not recorders—we have this story of Buddha:

The lord demanded one day of an elephant trainer what were the means he employed to subdue his beasts.

"Three," said the mahout. "One applies to the mouth a hook of iron, which he attaches to breast clasp, and the elephant cannot lift his neck. Then one gives less and less food till thin and weak and finally beats."

"And what does one accomplish by these means?" asked he-of-the-yellow-light.

"The crochet de fer serves to overcome the resistance of the head; the deprivation of food and drink, the violence of the body; the stick subdues the spirit. After this, all is easy."

The nimbused-bronze-one said:

"I also have three ways to subdue. First, by perfect sincerity I control what goes forth from the mouth; by affection and charity I harmonize the irregularities of the body; by inward vibration of thought I calm the spirit. Did you ever think of trying these on the elephant?"

FAMILY HISTORY.

Universal Interest In Knowing What Our Forefathers Did.

"Why don't you trace your family history?" The common reply to this question is summed up in the words, "If I knew how to go about it I should enjoy doing so." For few are the individuals who do not at times feel a longing to open the book of the past and read the records of their ancestors. Edward Everett felt that longing when he wrote, "There is no man of any culture who does not take some interest in what was done by his forefathers." The desire to trace the descent of one's family and to transmit the record to one's successors is as old as life—a strand in the binding cord of filial love.

So prevalent has the desire been among all nations to which either history or tradition extends that it has been regarded by many writers as an instinct in human nature. Observing its universality, the historian Hume began his history of England with these lines: "The curiosity entertained by all nations of inquiry into the exploits and adventures of their ancestors commonly excites a regret that the history of the ages should be involved in obscurity, uncertainty and tradition."

How to Roast the Succulent Oyster.

Select large oysters and have them scrubbed thoroughly, then place them in the oven in a large tin with the round side of the shells down, so that when they open the liquor will not be lost. As soon as they do open remove the upper shell, sprinkle them with salt, pepper and chopped parsley, add a little butter and serve hot as possible on a bed of water cress. Oysters served in this way make an excellent first course at dinner if accompanied by thin slices of brown bread and butter.

A Counter Attraction.

A recent visitor to Beaconsfield churchyard asked a middle aged native of the village to be directed to the graves of Burke and Waller. The man said he had no recollection of any such persons having been buried there. "But," he added, "you see that little chemist's shop over there? That's the shop where Devereux, the trunk murder man, used to be an apprentice!"

Not There.

"Judge," said Mrs. Starvem to the magistrate, who had recently come to board with her, "I'm particularly anxious to have you try this chicken soup."

"I have tried it," replied the magistrate, "and my decision is that the chicken has proved an alibi."—Exchange.

A Cure.

"Has your health improved of late?"

"Yes. I've been visiting among strangers who didn't keep talking to me about it all the time."

Joking often loses a friend and never gains an enemy.—Simmons.

Irving's Stagecraft.

It chanced to me once, and only once, in a life of some faring by land and sea to ride up a Kurdish gorge at early dawn, the sky still starry, as the charcoal burners had begun their work, and to see over all as the smoke rose a gray blue light as of the depths, some touch of deep chilled enveloping air on gorge and mountain side, as though a sapphire had aged and grown gray and wan. Once only I saw this and never again. When in "Faust" the curtain rose on the Brocken I saw before me the same miracle of gray blue. "How did you," I asked once at supper, "who ride abroad so little and are so rarely on the mountain side, hit on this, the rarest of lights?" "Once," and he took up a small plate, "I saw in a gallery," and he named it, but I have forgotten

CHOCOLATE.

It Was a Luxury In This Country In the Eighteenth Century.

The first newspaper notice that announced the sale of cocoa and chocolate in America read:

"Amos Track, at his house a little below the Bell tavern in Danvers, makes and sells chocolate which he will warrant to be good and takes cocoa to grind. Those who may please to favor him with their custom may depend upon being well served, and at a very cheap rate."

This notice appeared in the Essex Gazette of Massachusetts on the 18th of June, 1771, five years before the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Despite Mr. Trask's assurance that his rate was cheap, chocolate was very expensive and beyond the purse of any but the wealthy folk. Wouldn't they be surprised to see how generally chocolate is sold these days in packages as cheap as a penny?

When the Spanish soldier Cortes conquered Mexico in 1519 he found the people very fond of a drink called "chocolatl." This was served to the ruler Montezuma in a cup of solid gold. When the Spaniards went home they introduced this drink into their country, but it remained very expensive. The secret of its preparation was never allowed to get out of Spain. Now it is the cheapest article of food and drink we have.

VARIETY IN CHEWING.

Gum and Tobacco Are Not the Only Materials Utilized.

Gum chicle, which forms the basis of most American chewing gums, is by no means the only chewing material, though chewing gum has spread over a large portion of the world.

Among the old fashioned the gum of the spruce tree is still in greater favor, and druggists near the great spruce belts drive a thriving trade in the brown lumps.

Although the chicle comes from the tropics, it is seldom used as a chewing gum there, uncured rubber being the fashion. In Peru "cuca," or cocoa leaves, form the staple chew, the plant being a powerful stimulant, since from its leaves cocaine is extracted. In the east the betel nut is chewed in preference, the nut being prepared with lime. To it might be accorded the place of first prominence, since because of the congestion of population practically one-tenth of the human race give it their preference.

One of the oddest chews is the leaden bullet which the English soldier used to chew before the introduction of the jacketed bullets now in use. They declared that it lessened their thirst and to some extent deadened their hunger on long marches.

And then there is tobacco.

ODD THINGS ABOUT WORDS.

When the Word "Lunch" Was First Used It Meant a "Lump."

A "lunch," etymologically, is just a lump. In the sixteenth century a "lunch of bacon" meant merely a slice or hunk of it. So Burns speaks of bread and cheese "dealt about in lunches," and Scott records that "little Benjie was ramming a huge luncheon of pie crust into his mouth." While in modern times "lunch" is an abbreviation from "luncheon," the latter was originally an elongation of "lunch." A philologist shows how the old "noon shenk," noon drink, came to mean noon eating, and to appear as "nunsheon," and the development thereafter of "luncheon" from "lunch" was very natural.

Curious changes of words sometimes take place between two languages. Thus English has borrowed the French "poseur" and has given to France "snob" in trade. Frenchmen have a way of taking a polysyllabic word and using half of it. Thus of "steeplechase" they have appropriated the "steeple," and now the French sportsman speaks of "mounting a steeple" when he means to ride a race over the customary obstacles. A smoking jacket is with him a "smoking" and a sleeping car is a "sleeping."

Inspired a Noble Poem.

It was the daguerreotypist Hesler of Chicago who inspired Longfellow to write "Hiawatha." Mr. Hesler was one of the most eminent of his profession, and in 1851 the London world's fair awarded him the prize medal for daguerreotypes. One of them, a picture of the falls of Minnehaha, came into the poet's possession and furnished immediate inspiration for the poem. In testimony of his debt to Mr. Hesler Longfellow sent him a bound volume of his poems with his signature and compliments on the fly leaf.

The Herring.

Deep sea denizens of the northern waters are all remarkable for their migratory habits, the herring especially so. These fish approach the Newfoundland littoral to spawn and then are captured in great quantities, but this is only during a few months every year, while for the remainder they withdraw to some waters the location of which has never been determined.

A Great Sinner.

The Doctor—Yes; that's the sort of man Bejings is. The neighbors say he cheats the gas company by tapping a pipe in his basement, and he lies about the ages of his children to keep from having to send them to school. The Professor—Then he sins against both light and knowledge.

The Art of Pleasing.

The secret of many a man's success is an affable manner, which makes everybody feel easy in his presence, dispels fear and timidity and calls out the finest qualities in one's nature.—Success Magazine.

Appropriate.

Friend—What do you think of that cigar I gave you? It's a "Colonel." you know. Tommy—Well, how appropriate! There's something about this cigar that is suggestive of a colonel. Friend—What's that? Tommy—It's rank.—Scraps.

Usually.

Jack—Hello, Fred! Had your hair cut? Fred—Yes, old fellow. I found a place where they cut your hair while you wait. Jack—That's good. A barber's shop is usually a place where they cut some other man's hair while you wait.

CHARLES M. HAYS

President of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

One of the railroad men of the times who has mastered all the intricacies of railway work in his thirty-two years of continuous service, is Charles Melville Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and second vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. Born in 1856 at Rock Island, Ill., at the age of seventeen he began to learn the a-b-c of railroading, as clerk in the passenger department of the Atlantic and Pacific road at St. Louis. Then, after a year of this schooling had proved his fitness, he was promoted to the auditor's department and later to the general superintendent's office. From 1878-86 he was secretary to the general manager of two big roads, then general manager, later attaining the dignity of general manager of the Wabash system and in 1894 was elected vice-president.

In the two latter positions Mr. Hays represented his company as director on the boards of the various companies in which his road was interested. In January, 1896, through the efforts of Sir Charles Rivers Wilson, he was made general manager of the Grand Trunk at $25,000 a year with a five years' contract. The road was in a debilitated state of health; it needed heroic treatment—strong tonics quickly and properly administered, and deft surgery work in the way of cutting expenses and amputating useless members of the staff.

Mr. Hays made it clear that, as he was to be responsible for results, he must be free to select his own means to produce them. He was not to be a puppet nor a figure-head. He must have the support of the Board of Directors in carrying out what he decided the road needed. As the Grand Trunk had to meet American competition, it must win its way by recognizing and applying American methods. The English scheme of operating did not fit the situation; the road needed a brisk, vigorous, clean-cut business system, with the moss of tradition all removed. Mr. Hays prescribed this and he saw that the medicine was administered.

Old bridges that should long before have been put on the retired list were taken down, and modern steel bridges substituted; the road was double-tracked; primitive back-number rules and regulations were quietly eclipsed by introducing the Standard Rules in force in the States; the road-beds were brought up to concert pitch; the rolling stock made the latest and best; slow trains were displaced by fast-flyers; the road was transformed from a snailway to a railway; and trained men took the places of the old men whose one merit was influence at the home office.

In 1901 Mr. Hays retired to accept the presidency of the Southern Pacific; but the position proving distasteful, he was again secured for the Grand Trunk and is now busy with this road and his new project—the Grand Trunk Pacific R.R.

An old bookcase set on the kitchen table, back to the wall, makes a very respectable imitation of a kitchen cabinet and saves many steps.

To clean copper kettles, etc., rub the article to be cleaned all over with a cut lemon dipped in salt, then rinse thoroughly with clear water and polish with a soft cloth.

Keep coarse sand in the kitchen for scouring purposes. With sand kitchen tables and other wooden articles may be kept beautifully clean with half the trouble entailed in producing the same effect with the scrubbing brush.

Hairbrushes.

To clean hairbrushes never use either hot water or soap, as both discolor the bristles and loosen them from the backs. Dissolve soda or borax in hot water and let it get almost cold, when it will be just right for use. Dip the bristles in and out of the water till clean, taking care not to wet the backs of the brushes or their polish will be spoiled. Then rinse in clear cold water, shake as dry as possible and stand in the air till perfectly dry, when the bristles will be as firm and stiff as when new. Never put a brush near the fire or in the sunshine to dry, for this will soon spoil the color of the bristles.

A SUCCESSFUL HORSEMAN

Never allows his horse to suffer pain. He always uses Nerviline, which is noted for curing stiffness, rheumatism, swellings and strains. Nerviline is just as good inside as outside. For cramps, colic and internal pain it's a perfect marvel.

LINCOLN THE ATHLETE.

How the Youth's Bodily Vigor Stood Him In Good Stead.

Young Lincoln's bodily vigor stood him in good stead in many ways. In frontier life strength and athletic skill served as well for popular amusement as for prosaic toil, and at times, indeed, they were needed for personal defense. Every community had its champion wrestler, a man of considerable local importance, in whose success the neighbors took a becoming interest. There was not far from New Salem a settlement called Clary's Grove, where lived a set of restless, rollicking young backwoodsmen with a strong liking for frontier athletics and rough practical jokes. Jack Armstrong was the leader of these and until Lincoln's arrival had been the champion wrestler of both Clary's Grove and New Salem. He and his friends had not the slightest personal grudge against Lincoln; but, hearing the neighborhood talk about the newcomer and especially Offut's extravagant praise of his clerk, who, according to Offut's statement, knew more than any one else in the United States and could beat the whole country at running, jumping or "wrastling," they decided that the time had come to assert themselves and strove to bring about a trial of strength between Armstrong and Lincoln. Lincoln, who disapproved of all this "wooling and pulling," as he called it, and had no desire to come to blows with his neighbors, put off the encounter as long as possible. At length even his good temper was powerless to avert it, and the wrestling match took place. Jack Armstrong soon found that he had tackled a man as strong and skillful as himself, and his friends, seeing him likely to get the worst of it, swarmed to his assistance, almost succeeding, by tripping and kicking, in getting Lincoln down. At the unfairness of this Lincoln became suddenly and furiously angry, put forth his entire strength, lifted the pride of Clary's Grove in his arms like a child and, holding him high in the air, almost choked the life out of him. It seemed for a moment as though a general fight must follow; but even while Lincoln's fierce rage compelled their respect his quickly returning self control won their admiration, and the crisis was safely passed.

Instead of becoming enemies and leaders in a neighborhood feud, as might have been expected, the two grew to be warm friends, the affection thus strangely begun lasting through life. They proved useful to each other in various ways, and years afterward Lincoln made ample amends for his rough treatment of the other's throat by saving the neck of Jack Armstrong's son from the halter in a memorable trial for murder. The Clary's Grove "boys" voted Lincoln "the cleverest fellow that ever broke into the settlement," and thereafter took as much pride in his peaceableness and book learning as they did in the rougher and more questionable accomplishments of their discomfited leader.—Helen Nicolay in St. Nicholas.

Samaria Stopped His Drinking

A London Lady cures her husband permanently of the drink habit and without his knowledge.

"How glad I am that I overcame my hesitation about writing you for a Free Sample of Samaria. At that time my husband was drinking very hard, and I was in despair. The effect of your treatment was immediate, and now our home is entirely free from the Drink Curse. I gave my husband the tablets in his tea, and he never knew. As the taste for liquor left him, his general health improved and is now splendid—many, many thanks. I will be glad if you will tell others of my experience.

Immaterial.

Aunt Hepsy was in ecstasies over the young lady her nephew, Ike, was going to marry. "I never saw her till last week," she said, "but I fell in love with her at first sight myself. She's good, sweet, amiable and as pretty as a picture."

"What's her name?" asked the listeners.

"Maria."

"Maria what?"

Aunt Hepsy wrinkled her forehead, pursed up her lips, looked at the ceiling and gave it up.

"I declare, I can't think of her other name."

The general laugh that followed this confession nettled Aunt Hepsy.

"What's the difference about her last name anyway?" she said explosively. "It's only temporary. She's going to change it!"—Youth's Companion.

Old Time Astronomers.

Kepler, the astronomer of the seventeenth century, explained rather quaintly why so many mediaeval astronomers were obliged to dabble in the occult sciences. "Ye overwise philosophers," he wrote to his "Tertius Interveniens," "ye censure this daughter of astronomy beyond her deserts. Know ye not that she must support her mother by her charms? The scanty reward of an astronomer would not provide him with bread, if men did not entertain hopes of reading the future in the heavens."

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE LOST BOY.

(J. W. Foley.)

Little Boy Careless has strewn his blocks
From end to end of the nursery;
He has broken the top of the gaudy box
That held sliced animals—My, ah me!
His wooden soldiers are seamed and scarred
From battle with him, and his jumping-jack
Is lodged halfway from a blow too hard.
Nor all of my coaxing will get him back.

Little Boy Careless has split his drum
And bent the tube of his screeching fife
Till all of his martial airs are dumb,
And the doll that squeaked has lost her life
From a mallet blow on her waxen head,
And none of her sister dolls knows or cares
How the sawdust in her is strewn and spread
From the bedroom door to the hall downstairs.

Little Boy Careless has gone away,
And Big Boy Hopeful has come to me,
The toys that were scattered yesterday
Are stored up there in the nursery;
The broken drum and the jumping-jack,
The waxen doll in her crib alone,
Nor little Boy Careless will e'er come back
To scatter the toys by his years outgrown.

For ah! but the heart of me aches and cries
For the Little Boy Careless to come and play
The light of the dawn in his big brown eyes,
With the toys that are gathered and laid away.
The Big Boy Hopeful will come to pine
For the world out there and will yearn to go
But the Little Boy Careless was mine, all mine,
And that is the reason I loved him so!

AN UNTIMELY POEM.

When the mercury's at zero, and the snow is falling fast,
And folks shiver round and wonder if such weather's going to last,
I get thinking of mosquitoes, buzzing flies and sunstrokes, too,
And I'm just so glad it's winter that I don't know what to do.

The Globe having intimated that Quebec might lose one of the Dominion portfolios, Le Soliel promptly jumps on that enlightened organ with an emphasis which brooks no misunderstanding. Just what course The Globe will take is not yet clear. Probably as in the case of its fruitless demand for the removal of the Ontario barnacles, it will try and look the other way and pretend that it never uttered a word.

The Mackintosh of Mackintosh, who succeeds the late Lochiel as Lord Lieutenant of Inverness-shire, is the head of the Clan Chattan, one of the most famous Scottish clans, which has existed for about five hundred years. Moy Hall, the beautiful Inverness-shire home of the Mackintosh, is a fine place, with a splendid shooting, which the Prince of Wales greatly enjoyed last autumn when he was the guest of this famous Scottish chieftain. The Mackintosh keeps up the customs of his country, he always wears a kilt when in the north, and every morning at Moy Hall the piper marches round the house playing Scottish airs, whilst in the evening after dinner the piper plays in the dining room. In the library stands the table at which Prince Charlie dined the night before the battle of Culloden.

The office of executor of an estate is generally a thankless position, and frequently entails on the holder considerable inconvenience and loss of time and money, to say nothing of the ill-feeling he may incur in the discharge of his duties. The financial responsibility is also very strict. In a case tried in Toronto recently the court held the executors personally responsible for selling real estate at a lower value than might have been attained if they had studied the market.

The snowshoe is one of the best of our Indian legacies, says a writer in Outing. It was undoubtedly invented a long time ago, and has come down to us from the unknown along with the birch bark canoe. Like the canoe, though in a lesser degree, the snowshoe has been modified and improved by the white man. The shape of the bows and the manner of putting in the rawhide filling varies in different parts of the country. Those made by the Indians show their tribal design, as do their moccasins, but, generally speaking, snowshoes are made for the particular condition of the country where they are used.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Lincoln's Integrity.

No man ever believed in his calling more thoroughly than Lincoln, and he had no patience with the much mouthed charge that honesty was not compatible with its practice.

"Let no young man choosing the law for a calling yield to that popular belief," he wrote. "Resolve to be honest at all events. If, in your judgment, you cannot be an honest lawyer, resolve to be honest without being a lawyer. Choose some other occupation rather than one in the choosing of which you do, in advance, consent to be a knave." —Frederick Trevor Hill in Century.

Penciling on Zinc.

An ordinary pencil mark on zinc is in a measure indelible. The writer saw recently a zinc label on which a name had been written with an ordinary lead pencil thirty years ago, and after a little of the oxide had been rubbed off the name was as legible as if it was just written. For permanency, where no illegibility is desired, nothing can be more durable.—Exchange.

What Eddie Was Reading.

A New England father who believes that children should be nourished on good literature as well as on good food has always read the English classics aloud to his only son, Eddie, now six years old.

A friend of the family, knowing of this practice, recently asked Eddie what he was reading.

"A Wavering novel," was his reply.

Her Regret.

Marjorie had been given some hard peppermint candies, and after holding one in her mouth for a few minutes she ran to her mother and cried, "Oh, mother, I swallowed that candy!"

"Never mind," said her mother; "it will not hurt you."

"Yes, I know," said Marjorie, "but I lost the use of it."

Right In Line.

"If there is anything I like," said he to his wife, "it is a woman who knows enough to be a good listener," whereat the servant girl at the keyhole could not repress a smile of satisfaction.

IPSWICH LIBERAL GAIN

Constituency Rejects Its Member For Twenty Years.

Voting Is Unusually Heavy—Three Liberals and One Conservative Returned Without Opposition—Twenty-Five Contests on for To-day—Chamberlain Says This Will Not Be the Final Verdict—Unfair Play.

London, Jan. 13.—Ipswich was the first of the British contested elections polled yesterday, and resulted in the gain of a seat by the Liberal party. It was this dual constituency which gave the first decision against Mr. Gladstone's home rule bill, and during the last Parliament it was represented by Daniel Ford Goddar, Liberal, and Sir Charles Dalrymple, Conservative. Now the latter is turned down by Felix Cobbold, the second Liberal candidate, by a large majority.

Sir Charles Dalrymple, the unseated member, is a barrister and landowner, and was considered a good enough candidate in 1885 to be put up against Gladstone in the famous Midlothian campaign. He was defeated then, but was elected for Ipswich in 1886, and has held the seat since.

The polling was unusually heavy, showing how deeply the country is stirred by the fiscal struggle. Motor cars played an important part in taking voters to and from the polls, and many persons are attributing the great success of the Liberals to their being better supplied with these vehicles than the Conservatives.

During the day three Liberal candidates and one Conservative were returned without opposition.

Twenty-five boroughs will poll today, including the six divisions of Manchester City. The constituency of Manchester East, is that represented by Mr. Balfour, whose opponent is T. G. Harridge, K.C. Winston Churchill, under secretary for the colonies, is the candidate for Manchester Northwest, his opponent being W. Jaynson Hicks. It was represented in the last Parliament by Sir W. H. Houldsworth, Unionist, who retires.

Chamberlain, at Wolverhampton yesterday, charged his opponents with not playing a fair game. They were seeking to obscure the tariff issue with lying statements about the Chinese.

"I am not," he affirmed, "going to accept this election, whatever the result may be, as absolutely final."

NAVAL PROGRAM CHANGES.

Belief In B. C. That Canadian Stations Will Be Restored.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 13.—Letters to naval officers at Esquimalt from London state that important changes in the British naval program are imminent consequent upon the change in Government at home in connection with which it is probable that Esquimalt and Halifax stations will be restored. It is already decided that the efficiency of the China station will be much increased.

CHAPTER I.

THE YELLOW MANUSCRIPT.

Two men sat and smoked in a small room in Shaftoe street, Bristol. It was an untidy room, and through the pungent incense of ship's plug, which one of them was smoking, there struggled another and more unpleasant odor, the musty spirituous smell of a badly kept anatomy museum. Human skulls and arm bones littered the tables, monstrosities in wide mouthed bottles jostled other stuffed and moldy monstrosities on the shelves, and a couple of bloated serpents twined themselves into slimy knots in a glass case in one corner. And where there were none of these things there were books—books everywhere—even in the corners of the deep armchair in which one of the men (he of the ship's plug) was sitting. Their sharp edges made dimples in the comfortable roundness of his figure, but he was excited, and if they hurt him he did not seem to notice it.

He was a big man, red faced and heavy, and the hair growing in a close mat down over his wrists gave a suggestion of burly outdoor strength strangely incongruous in such a room as this. His dress, which was that of a captain in the merchant service, bore out this appearance of incongruity.

Presently he removed the pipe from his mouth and, leaning forward, tapped the other man's knee with the stem.

"Can we do it, doctor?" he asked anxiously. "The gold must be there; enough of it to make us both millionaires, most likely. The point is—can we lay our hands on it?"

At this question the other man rose from his chair and walked over to the glass case where the serpents were. For fully five minutes he watched their slow, purposeless contortions without speaking. Then he returned to the table, reached for the tobacco jar and rolled himself a thin and very tight cigarette. Now, whether it was that Dr. Tring did not share his comrade's excitement or that his leathery brown face was too thickly seared with deep permanent lines to allow any passing emotion to affect his expression it is impossible to say, but the fact remains that even Captain Nicholas Colepepper's sailor's eye was unable to read anything, whether of encouragement or the reverse, on the shriveled, chartlike face of his friend.

The doctor took a long pull at his cigarette, drew the smoke deep down into his lungs and kept it there for about half a minute; then he spoke, and with each word the imprisoned smoke crept furtively in broken spurts from his mouth and went to join forces with the heavy clouds which the captain was blowing with impatient energy from his pipe.

"Captain Colepepper, sir, you ask me whether we can raise that Spanish gold (a whole shipload of it, if your story is true) from where it now lies, imbedded deep in the ooze of the Atlantic. I answer you that I don't know."

The captain had evidently expected a more encouraging reply, and the vicious way in which he bit at his pipestem showed how much he was disappointed.

"You've thought over what I told you?" said he.

"Yes. I've thought it over."

"And you don't think it can be done? Man, it's bound to be a million at least! And it's there, I tell you, just waiting for us to take it."

"I don't go so far as to say that it can't be done," replied the doctor with some hesitation. "It may be, Colepepper, it may be. But I don't like to commit myself until I'm sure."

"Oh, come, that's better!" exclaimed the captain with returning animation. "If you say it's possible at all, that's enough for me. If Dr. Tring says a thing can be done, then Dr. Tring and Captain Colepepper between 'em will do it."

"Umph!" said the doctor shortly.

"A million of gold—or two millions, maybe," went on the other, mouthing the big numbers as though the very manner of saying them would make them bigger. "We shall be able to do things with that."

"No doubt," said the doctor dryly, "if we get it, but it seems to me that if we try we're more likely to lose the little we have and our lives, too, perhaps."

"But the manuscript, doctor, the manuscript!" It's all down there as plain as the rule o' the road at sea."

"Who was this Nicholas Colepepper, and where did you find his log?"

"I found the log in a lumber chest down at our old farmhouse in Devonshire, and the Nicholas Colepepper who wrote it was an ancestor of mine. I expect," added the captain meditatively. "I'm called after him in a way, as my name's Nicholas too. But, for the matter o' that, my grandfather's name was Nicholas. There always has been one in the family, you see."

"And this Nicholas the First—what was he?"

"Pirate," replied the captain shortly. "He doesn't say so himself, of course. Calls himself an honest buccaneer in his log, but I expect pirate was about the real size of it."

"Yes," said the doctor. "The law was not so squeamish in those days as it is now. I don't fancy you need be afraid that you are doing an injustice to your ancestor's memory. Piracy was an eminently respectable calling in the time of good Queen Bess."

"Of course it was!" agreed Captain Colepepper excitedly. "And, don't you see, that's just what makes me so cocksure that the story is true!"

Dr. Tring nodded, and, toying absently with a human thigh bone which was lying on the table, smoked for a little time in thoughtful silence. Captain Colepepper meanwhile fidgeted incessantly in the big chair, and with fumbling fingers cut another fill of plug and rammed it into his pipe with so much unnecessary violence that the shining black clay was in imminent danger of breaking under the strain. All of which is merely an evidence that the captain's agitation was overpowering, for he loved his cutty, and would have grieved for a month if he had broken it.

His action in filling his pipe was, however, apparently just as unconscious as the doctor's in playing with the thigh bone, for when he had done he did not light it, but laid it on the table, and, resting his elbows on his knees and his chin in his hands, leaned forward and anxiously watched his companion's face. His whole attitude betokened an excitement the suppression of which was actually painful.

Dr. Tring's face, however, betrayed nothing. He might have been engaged in deciding what he would have for dinner, so utterly calm was his expression. It was a terribly anxious moment for the sailor, for on his friend's decision rested everything. Excellent seaman though he was, Captain Colepepper knew well enough that without the other's assistance he could do nothing. He could fit out a ship, it is true, and take her to the very spot where the galleon with all her precious freight had foundered; that much he knew he could do, but that was not enough. And for the rest he relied absolutely on the scientific skill of his friend Dr. Tring. If Dr. Tring said "No," then the Spanish gold must stay where it was, and Captain Colepepper would spend his life in the sailing of ships and die at last a humble merchant captain. If Dr. Tring said "Yes," Captain Colepepper would cheerfully spend every penny he had in the world in fitting out a vessel in which to make the venture and would be content to die in the end a pauper, if only he could first have a fair shot at being a millionaire.

Meanwhile the suspense was slowly driving him frantic. Beads of perspiration were rolling unheeded down his nose and dropping on to his beard. At last he could stand the strain of inaction no longer, and, throwing himself back in the chair, began, utterly unconscious of what he was doing, to whisper strange sailor oaths beneath his breath.

The captain spread the yellow manuscript out on the table.

These turgid mutterings had the effect of rousing Dr. Tring to speech:

"Have you got your respected ancestor's log with you?" he asked.

For answer the captain produced the stained yellow sheets from his pocket and handed them across to his companion.

"Read it to me again," said the doctor. "I want to get a clear grasp of all the details."

"The whole of it?"

"No. Only where he tells about the plateship."

The captain spread the yellow manuscript out on the table before him and read as follows:

"From the log of Nicholas Colepepper, Esq., master of the snow [brig] Lucky Venture.

"THURSDAY, iij February. 1591.

* * * "The night had been a thick one, and mayhap our lookouts, being somewhat tired of their task, had not been overspry in their watch. Three weeks of peering through the weather for a vessel that never heaves in sight dulls the fresh glances of any mariner's eye, and we had been lying hove to or standing on and off for the galleon for five days over that time. So when dawn sicklied over the waters, and the great ship was spied bowling along good five miles to windward, I was at first minded to shoot the fellow on the foreyard for keeping such lubberly watch, but remembering that we should presently need all the hands we could get I anointed him with a few shrewd blows from a calker's mallet, lying handy, and set the watch to trim and make sail, that we might get all the pace out of our light little snow of which she was capable.

"The Spaniard's lookout was smart enough. His sail trimmers were hard at work when first we espied him, so he must have known of our presence before we knew of his. Now, it is the custom of the yearly plateship to sail only during the day and to remain hove to during the night hours, but this fellow must have been under weigh all through the darkness, having been advertised of our snow's presence, probably, and so from this departure from custom we judged that he feared us, and our lads took heart accordingly.

"A chase to windward is always tedious work, but as we sailed better and faster on every point than the Spaniards, 'twas only a matter of time, and we could tell the hour to a nicety when we should be able to bring them into action. The thing that vexed some of my men was the disparity in numbers. We had been at sea, off and on, for two years, and had lost half our number through wounds, scurvy, calentures and other sickness, and so could muster but a poor 83 all told, and many of them half disabled and brought scurvy rotten from their bunks by the rustle of preparation. The don was a 1,000 ton galleon newly out of port, with all her complement hale and sound, and with well nigh 500 men fit to carry arms.

"As we rose her hull above the plain of ocean we saw it was pierced for ordnance innumerable, for pieces both great and small; but, though this was somewhat discomforting, her lowness in the water was such that fears were swamped as they rose to the surface, for there was surely yellow ballast enough in her holds to make us all rich men for life, even supposing that none of us was killed, and as out of our small 83 a third, or perhaps a half, might lose the number of their mess during so hot an engagement as the one whereon we were entering promised to be, there would be the greater share for the survivors. So all were eager for the cast of fortune's dice box, which might bring them their death or might render them independent of mariner's trafficking for the remainder of their natural lives.

"The don was ablaze with banners and ancients [ensigns], and on the ample belly of her forecourse was depicted the head of St. Catherine, her patroness, with all the gauds and embellishments of the master painter's art. She was replete with carvings and gildings, with high fore and after castles, with close quarters and with all the Spanish devices for naval fortification, and in good sooth she was as brave a ship as ever breasted Atlantic or lured honest English buccaneer to plunder.

"Thus far had I writ before we came within shot range. Our fellows, as is always their wont, had set a cask of strong ale abroach in the waist and were feasting and making merry, for fear lest the hap of war should take from them other opportunity of doing that same again. The don, seeing that his heels were too dull to give us the slip, triced boarding nettings up to his lower yardarms, opened his ports and ran out the guns, and in fine made all ready for action. He was willing enough to run had chance been given him to do so, but now that he was cornered had no notion of yielding his treasure without a battle. But as this fell out as we had anticipated we were in nowise dismayed nor surprised, but cleared our pipes with a loud voiced drinking song, worked round to windward of him and held on to within musket range without throwing a shot.

"The don had been burning powder for a good half hour before our culverins and falconets hurtled back their message. Indeed his great ordnance on both broadsides had been spitting away at one and the same time, so that we guessed at the confusion that was raging in his 'tween decks and took comfort therefrom mightily, remembering that one small ball driven home is worth a dozen score of heavy ones which miss their bourne. Owing to the closeness of our approach, the don's gunners could not well depress the muzzles of their pieces, by reason of the narrowness of the gun ports; so that even the few shot whose direction was true had too great elevation and whistled harmlessly over our mastheads or sang through the upper rigging, and save for a cheesehole punched in the main topsail and a lee fore topmast backstay shot in twain we were not a whit the worse for his pelting when at length we began our own.

"Having run up into such short range before I gave the word to fire, we hacked him through and through with our very first broadside, and the groans and yells from his 'tween decks told us that we had made commendable slaughter, but by this time the arquebusiers in his roundtops had steadied down to their work and were browning my gun crews somewhat too cavalierly. So I bade my fellows load up with bar and chain shot, knock out some of their quoins and have at the don's rigging for all their skins were worth, which salute the galleon acknowledged by bowing to us with his foremast head, which had shooters, foreyard and the great bellying course with its gaudy painting came down by the run; the galleon slid up head to wind, in spite of her timoneer's every effort, and we had her at our mercy.

"After this I ran ahead and in a series of short tacks raked her with alternate broadsides, to which she could hardly reply with a gun; for her bow chasers were masked by the raffle of wreckage, and when any of her people sought to remove this they, too, were mown down by our incessant fire. And had the fates permitted me to carry on this game of long bowls, she must perforce have yielded unconditionally.

"But when another half dozen broadsides must have reduced her word was passed that the powder had run completely out, for we had come into action with but a poorly stocked magazine, not having found opportunity to replenish it of late. Forgetful of this, we had been burning the precious grains with feverish haste, and the grinning little powder monkey who brought me the tidings declared that there was not another tub left.

"'Tis truly vexatious when an honest buccaneer finds himself in a strait like this, but there was no help for it. We could not get more powder by mere wishing, and we could not fire shot without it. We had naught therefore but cold steel left to rely upon, but cold steel has laid many a Spaniard low at my hands (and will, please heaven, do the like to many more). So, trusting in that, I sang out, 'Up helm!' and cried for boarders.

"We ran down alongside and threw our grapple. The Spanish gunners poured in a fierce fire to our deserted 'tween decks, but armed with pike, hanger and boarding ax we scaled their lofty upper works and hacked our way through the nettings inboard.

"Flushed with victory and nerved with strength by thoughts of the golden hoard below, my fellows were not to be resisted, and save for a party headed by the Spanish commandant—who retreated beyond the break of the poop and held the after castle in spite of all our efforts to dislodge them—save, I say, for these few, the whole crew was beaten below, and we thought the vessel our own. But this pestilential handful kept stubbornly at bay, and so, when, tiring at length of their resistance, they called for a parley, we staid our arms for a moment, being willing to make a truce and grant them quarter.

"You agree?" cried the captain.

"But the k[illegible] commandant, aping an insolence t[illegible] would have sat ill on his betters, must needs dictate terms to us—to us, who held his ship and his shipmates' lives at our swords' mercy. 'I yield to pirates on no terms whatever,' quoth he. 'Get you gone, and your lives are spared,' quoth he, 'or stay and press your present advantage and I will rid the world of your thievish hands and minds forever, even at a large cost to myself and my following. And ye have not left my ship before this minute glass hath drained its sand I swear to you on my honor as a caballero that I will send you and the Santa Catarina and myself and my crew skyward in one smoky shower. Beware, accursed English picaroon! A volcano is underfoot! At this instant I turn the glass. If in a minute's time you and your robber band have not made retreat, I fire my magazine,' quoth he.

"His speech was in Spanish, and but few of my lads understood it. For myself, I never thought the fellow would be as good as his threat, and so, unwilling to be worsted by mere bravado, ordered a couple of main deck culverins to be hauled in, loaded, slewed round and trained so as to sweep his defenses. 'Thou truculent braggart,' quoth I, 'down on thy marrow bones and sue for quarter, or I blow thee and thy handful of ironclads out through the stern ports and into the sea!' But scarce had the words left my beard when there came a roar from underfoot, the deck heaved, and we were all shot skyward together.

"Beshrew me if the knave Spaniard had not been as good as his word!

"For myself, I fell into the water amid a shower of other solids, unhurt by twice a miracle, and gained the snow with some trouble, and there I was joined by five and twenty of my fellows, all with their hides more or less singed and dented. The remainder of the crew had gone skyward in pieces that no surgeon, be he never so skillful, could join.

"But worse remains to tell, and surely gentlemen of fortune were never entreated so evilly. The port side of the galleon—that furthest from us—was blown completely out, and she foundered incontinently; foundered, I declare upon my manhood, before we could spoil her of anything; foundered without yielding us a solitary piece of eight, no not a maravedi; foundered in 200 fathoms of water in latitude"—

HANDEL'S OBSTINACY.

An Incident of the Great Musician's Childhood Days.

A child's obstinacy does not always bring as fortunate results as was the case with Handel, the great musician. His extraordinary resoluteness as a boy doubtless led to that great success which crowned the later years of his life. When he was some seven years of age his father had occasion to visit a son by a former wife, who was valet to the Duke of Saxe Weissenfels. Traveling in those days—200 years ago—was tedious and expensive, and Dr. Handel did not desire to be delayed with the care of an "infant" during a journey which the demands of a responsible profession would probably make as short as possible.

But the future giant of music would go. He cried, bellowed and eventually ran along the road after the vehicle, until the tender feelings of the doctor could refuse no longer. In an evil moment for his jurisprudence scheme he took the child with him.

No sooner did the little fellow reach the ducal residence than he gave rein to his fancy on the keys of every instrument that he found open. The remarkable music that came from the finger tips of the child's hands was soon the object of wonder and conversation throughout the palace, and all this was intensified when he secured an opportunity of touching the keys of the chancel organ within the hearing of the duke.

Such a throb started from that chapel organ when little Handel's tendriled fingers chose the keys, and the soul of the duke was touched as it never had been touched before—truly a momentous occurrence, since but for it Handel's sacred music might never have been written.

The duke's attention having been arrested, he inquired of Dr. Handel concerning the child's future, and eventually succeeded in placing him for three years' study under Zachau, the organist of Halle cathedral. This was the beginning of Handel's musical education.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

A good many people who call themselves critics are merely kickers.

Give any man who has paid a compliment time enough, and he will qualify it.

About the most expensive experience the average man can have is to accept gifts.

As a rule, people do not rebuke you for telling gossip until they have heard all the details.

When the members of a family quarrel some very clever things are said which no one present applauds or repeats.

It is every wife's opinion that her husband needs her to protect him, and his experience later as a widower goes to prove it.

One of these days the man who gets scolded when he complains of his wife's biscuits will drop dead when he hears her apologizing for them to company.

The Poison of Wealth.

Great riches, carrying with them enormous possibilities of self indulgence, may fairly be considered as a sort of poison which ruins a certain proportion of those who are exposed to it, though strong constitutions survive. As rum destroys savages, so wealth tends to destroy persons—especially young ones, whom use and training have not gradually made immune to its effects. How that is may readily be noticed in observing the effects of newly won wealth on the families of the winners. It is a rare man and usually one very much blessed in his wife who can combine with the ability that wins him riches the sagacity to train children born in comparative poverty so that they will benefit by a rapid and radical improvement in his circumstances.—Edward S. Martin in Atlantic.

The Fish Net.

A curious custom was at one time in vogue at Gloucester, Mass., which illustrates the sacredness which seems to surround a fish net and the protection which the law affords that class of property. Whenever it became necessary to quarantine a house because of smallpox or other contagious disease the quarantine was effected by stringing nets about the building on the outside. The penalty for disturbing a net was so great that no one dared to meddle with the barrier.

A Human Compass.

Little Jack—What did papa mean by saying that he was the captain of this ship? Ma—Oh, that is only his way of saying that he is the head of the house. Little Jack—If pa is captain, then what are you? Ma—Well, I suppose I am the pilot. Little Jack—Oh, yes, and then I must be the compass. Ma—The compass? Why the compass? Little Jack—Why, the captain and pilot are always boxing the compass, you know!

The Bitter Truth.

"After all, I guess it doesn't cost much to live in New York."

"It may not cost much to live," replied the man who had tried it, "but it costs a lot to make people believe you're living."

Unseen Chances.

Be not too presumptuously sure in any business, for things of this world depend on such a train of unseen chances that if it were in man's hands to set the tables still he would not be certain to win the game.—Herbert.

A LUCKY REPORTER.

He Happened to Be on the Spot on Important Occasions.

It requires eternal vigilance for a reporter to bag his game, leaving not a single chance for escape. It might be further said, however, that the element of luck does creep in now and then, either to a newspaper man's advantage or to his ruin. When Reginald Foster was one of the craft, he became famous as the luckiest of reporters. He was alert, energetic and capable of writing an excellent story when he landed it, but seemed to have a mascot perennial and eternal. Wherever he went he stumbled upon a "beat." He happened to be reporting a St. Patrick's day parade and went into the Windsor hotel to telephone his office when the fateful fire started in that hostelry, resulting in the horrible deaths of a great number of persons. Foster abandoned the parade, and helped rescue the imprisoned patrons of the burning hotel, and that night wrote a graphic account of the fire from start to finish. He was the most available reporter in New York when the great Hoboken fire started, and, hiring a steamer in the name of his newspaper, he saved many lives before the firemen could render aid. When President McKinley was assassinated at Buffalo the first news came to all the papers in New York in the shape of a very brief bulletin. A group of newspaper men simultaneously asked of each other, "Where is Foster?" Somebody explained that he was then on his vacation at Narragansett Pier, but, even while he was speaking, a telegram to the city editor was received and torn open. It read thus: "I was right beside the president when he was shot, having come to Buffalo exposition to close my vacation. Will send full descriptive story tonight." It was Foster.—Remsen Crawford in Success Magazine.

THE MARINE ENGINEER.

Startling Example Showing the Dangers of His Calling.

Of all causes of boiler deterioration, says H. P. Watson in the Engineering Magazine, by far the most numerous are those arising from the presence of scale and its twin sister, incrustation; but broken braces can give an engineer a very bad quarter of an hour. A steamer plying on the great lakes many years ago carried very high steam for those days—fifty pounds per square inch on a very large and light shell. The engineer on watch was down in the fire room looking around when a loud bang came from one of the boilers. Instantly divining the cause, he looked questioningly at the head watch tender, who replied, "Bo jabers, I hope that ain't next door neighbor to the one that let go on the other watch."

That startled the engineer, for he had not been told of the other broken brace. He at once stopped the blowers, opened the doors, shut the stop valve between boilers and put on the feed pumps as rapidly as they could go so as to reduce pressure. The deck department was notified that it would be necessary to stop, and they hauled to one side of the channel and waited for the coming up of another boat in the same line passed a few miles back. The passengers (there were 1,000 on board) and mails were transferred, and the boat returned with the injured boiler out of business.

Upon examination the next day it was found that three braces had given way at or near one another, two letting go simultaneously apparently, and that the precautions taken against a disaster (which would have been terrible if it had occurred) were none too soon. This was merely an episode within the everyday duty of an engineer and carries its own warning.

Jumble of Languages.

There are towns in Hungary, and small towns, too, where from seven to ten idioms are constantly being used. On the Galician frontier there is in a lovely valley the old town of Eperjes. The number of its inhabitants do not exceed 12,000. To this day the good people of Eperjes are in the habit of talking or being talked to in six different languages and several dialects. An ordinary household will include a Slovac manservant, a Hungarian coachman, a German cook and a Polish chambermaid. What is still more remarkable, each grade of society will tenaciously cling to its own language for centuries.

The Bishop and the Senator.

A visiting bishop in Washington was arguing with a senator on the desirability of attending church. At last he put the question squarely, "What is your personal reason for not attending?"

The senator smiled in a no-offense-intended way as he replied, "The fact is, one finds so many hypocrites there."

Returning the smile, the bishop said: "Don't let that keep you away, senator. There's always room for one more."

Rejected.

"No, Mr. Penwiggle," said the fair girl to the literary youth who had proposed, "I cannot accept you, but that does not imply"—

"I know what you would say," he interrupted bitterly. "A rejection does not imply any lack of merit, but a number of circumstances render an article unsuitable. It's the old story."

Help on Both Sides.

Uncle Archibald—It must tire you, Bertha, to talk to your old deaf uncle. Bertha—Oh, just a trifle, dear Uncle Archie. Uncle Archibald—Well—don't say half so much, but say it louder.

If you don't learn to have before you give, you'll never have anything worth while to give.—"Gumption."

Mr. Spurgeon as a Smoker.

The Rev. W. Williams in his "Personal Reminiscences of C. H. Spurgeon" tells an anecdote concerning the great preacher as a smoker. Some gentleman wrote to Mr. Spurgeon, saying he had heard he smoked and could not believe it true. Would Mr. Spurgeon write and tell him if it really was so? The reply sent was as follows: "Dear ——, I cultivate my flowers and burn my weeds. Yours truly, C. H. Spurgeon."

But He Wouldn't Tell.

Gaybol—I had the bulliest chance to kiss another fellow's girl in the dark the other night. What would you have done under the circumstances?

STRICTURE AND KIDNEY DISEASE CURED.

"I had stricture for eleven years. It finally brought on Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. I had an uncomfortable shooting pain in the groin and feeling as though something was in the urethra. My back was weak and I could scarcely stoop over. Urine was full of sediment. Had a desire to urinate frequently. Family doctors, so-called specialists, patent medicines, electric belts, all failed. I was discouraged. I had spent hundreds of dollars in vain. Finally I consulted Drs. Kennedy & Kergan as the last resort. I had heard a great deal about them and concluded from the fact that they had been established over 25 years that they understood their business. I am delighted with the results. In one week I felt better and in a few weeks was entirely cured. Have gained sixteen pounds in weight."

WHIPS OF FLAME.

Picturesque and Puzzling Fire Dance of the Indians.

Mysterious are many of the ways of the red man. Dr. Matthews of Washington gave an interesting account of a fire dance which he was fortunate enough to witness in the far west. The spectators were seated about a large open space, in the center of which burned a ruddy fire.

Suddenly sounded a loud blowing of buffalo horns, mingled with a strange cry like the call of a sand hill crane. Nearer and nearer it came, and then there bounded into the circle ten men, naked to the waist and bearing long bundles of shredded cedar bark.

Round and round the fire danced the little procession, chanting and waving the flexible fagots. After some time the leader abruptly stopped and lighted his fagot of bark. The others followed his example.

Now began a wild race. At first the Indians kept close, spitting upon each other's back a substance supposed to have medicinal virtue. Soon they ran without concert, the long, brilliant streamers of flame flaring behind them. As they sped over the ground round the circle they applied the fiery brands to the bodies of themselves and comrades. Not a man turned as the vigorous, burning blows descended on his naked back. Sometimes they would seize the brand in their hands and rub it over their flesh as if it were a sponge and they were giving themselves a bath of flames. On they danced and whipped and rubbed until all seemed a dazzling ring of fire to the onlookers.

And were there sore and blistered backs the next day under the carelessly worn blankets? Apparently not, for Dr. Matthews saw and talked with the actors directly after the dance, and they seemed to experience no discomfort.

His explanation of the secret does not include the mysterious compound which the Indians spat upon each other. That, he thinks, was probably of no value. But cedar bark ignites at a low temperature, and the white earth with which the men were thickly coated was an excellent nonconductor.—Youth's Companion.

BARRIER BREAKERS.

Peter Cooper—Was only one year at school.

Oliver P. Morton—Lame; walked on crutches.

Chief Justice Chase—Nearsighted; had an impediment in his speech.

Elihu Burritt—Son of a farmer; became an apprentice in a blacksmith's shop.

Estey, the organ maker—Given away at four years of age; had scarcely any schooling.

Nelson W. Aldrich—Entered Providence on foot, with his clothes strung over his back.

Andrew Carnegie—Son of an immigrant; worked as bobbin boy in a mill for $1.20 a week.

Alexander H. Stephens—A dwarf; with a broken scythe he overmatched in the harvest all those who had perfect ones.

Thurlow Weed—So poor in boyhood that one cold March day he had to wrap pieces of cloth about his feet in place of socks and shoes.—Craft's "Successful Men of Today."

In the Polar Night.

The power of the eye to adjust itself to varying intensities of light is illustrated by Dr. Nansen's account of his experience on his north polar expedition in the winter of 1895-96. He was determined to keep a continuous thermometric record during the months of darkness, and whenever the moon was above the horizon he and his assistants found no difficulty in reading the instruments, which were placed in the crow's nest of the ship's mast. But at the time of new moon they had only starlight, because they could not afford to use the oil needed for an outdoor lamp. Yet gradually their eyes became so well trained to see in the dark that they could read the figures on the thermometer scale even in the absence of the moon.

Expressive Slang.

Once in awhile a bit of slang is so expressive that it becomes incorporated into the language as an allowable idiom. One of the most striking of these is "making good." It has come to have not simply a general but a specific meaning. It illustrates the idea of competition; it indicates that under intense modern methods it is only he who succeeds that can, in the long run, win recognition. Recommendations, testimonials, requests from eminent men, all fall before the stern decree that you must "make good."

His Other Fall.

In the memoirs of Dr. Thomas W. Evans appears this anecdote of the court of Emperor Napoleon III. in Paris: "At a ball given at the Tuileries a general, slipping on the polished floor, fell at the emperor's feet, pulling down with him his partner. 'Madame,' said the emperor, assisting the lady to rise, 'this is the second time General —— has fallen in my presence. The first time was at Solferino.'"

Just a Gentle One.

The Man—A fortune teller predicted that I would be lucky in love. The Maid (demurely)—And the same prediction precisely was made about me. Do you still think, Henry that we were made for each other?

Getting to It.

Anxious Mother—Has Mr. Bashful proposed yet? Daughter—Not exactly, but last evening, when I was holding little Dick in my lap, Mr. Bashful went to the piano and sang "Would I Were a Boy Again."

THAT PALE, TIRED GIRL.

How quickly it strengthens—what an appetite it gives—what a glow it brings to pallid cheeks! The nutriment contained in Ferrozone puts strength into anybody. Laughing eyes, rosy lips, bright, quick movements all tell of the vitality Ferrozone produces. Thousands of attractive, happy women use Ferrozone—why not you? A box of fifty chocolate-coated tablets costs fifty cents at any drug store.

A BARGAIN IN CARDS.

The Nail Skin.

Never cut the cuticle at the base of the nail unless it is very ragged; then pass the curved blade under for the purpose, that the outside may not be touched. This cuticle will ravel exactly like a piece of cloth of which the selvage has been cut. If a fairly stiff brush is used on the hands there will be no need for scraping under the nails with a cleaner of any sort. When this is once begun the skin gets rough and dirt accumulates.

Remedy For a Little Trouble.

Some of our modern houses are built so rapidly that fine workmanship is not a vital point. For instance, the tiles of a bathroom are cemented in such haste that little dabs of the cement are spread around and left to harden. The housekeeper despairs, after scrubbing busily with sand soap, coal oil and what not. This will fix it. But be careful. Put about a teaspoonful of muriatic acid in a pint of cold water. Wrap a coarse rag—an old wash rag or piece of Turkish towel—on the end of a stick and rub it off. Don't let it touch the fingers. If the cement is very refractory, try the pure acid.

Of the execution of Anne Boleyn Martin Hume, the author of "The Wives of Henry VIII," says:

Anne herself knelt in a distraught way, as if to pray, but really gazed around her in mute appeal from one pitiless face to another. The headsman, taking compassion upon her, assured her that he would not strike until she gave the signal. "You will have to take this coif off," said the poor woman, and one of the ladies who attended her did so and partially bound her eyes with a handkerchief, but Anne still imagined that her headdress was in the way and kept her hand upon her hair, straining her eyes and ears toward the steps, where from the headsman's words she expected the sword to be handed to him. While she was thus kneeling erect in suspense the sword which was hidden in the straw behind her was deftly seized by the French executioner, who, swinging the heavy blade around, in an instant cut through the erect, slender neck, and the head of Anne Boleyn jerked from the shoulders and rolled upon the cloth that covered the platform.

The Garibaldi.

The Garibaldi are a very ancient Ligurian family. The first who used the name would seem to have been Garibald, duke of Bavaria, A. D. 584. From him descended Grimaldus, king of Lombardy, A. D. 673. His son was Garibaldus. Then the name disappears, but it is early found among the nobles of Genoa, and at the institution of the Liber Aureus, in 1528, its members are recorded as of the ancient nobility. From 1528 to 1751 the successive generations of the Garibaldi are recorded in the "Libro d'Oro," and the last name but one there entered is Joseph Garibaldi, born 1792, probably an ancestor of the dictator. In 1685 Jeannetia Garibaldi was one of the four senators who accompanied the doge of Genoa to Versailles after Louis XIV. had nearly destroyed Genova la Superba by bombs to apologize to the ruthless tyrant.—Notes and Queries.

Under Many Flags.

Possibly no possession has changed nationality so frequently as the island of Santa Cruz, in the Danish West Indies. Originally the land belonged to Spain, and it was taken from Spain to be under the joint rule of England and Holland. After awhile the flag of Holland was taken down, and the English flag alone floated, only to give way to Spain again. The Knights of Malta were the next possessors, and from them it passed to a company of adventurers, who lost it to France, which sold to a Danish company, the land finally coming into the possession of the Danish government. England again took possession in 1801, and eight years later it passed to the Danish government again. Eventually it will probably become a part of the United States, two bargains having been arranged, but never completed.

Coxey's Army.

Coxey's army started from Coxey's home in eastern Ohio in the spring of 1894 to carry, as Coxey said, a "petition in boots" to congress for relief from the hard times then prevailing. On arriving at Washington it was denied access to congress, and those of the pilgrims who disregarded the order to "keep off the grass" of the capitol grounds were sent to jail. Coxey himself was condemned to a term in jail. The "army" at last crossed the Potomac and settled down in a sort of hobo camp on the Virginia side. There it was allowed to remain for several months until complaints from Washington induced the governor of Virginia to break up the camp and disperse the campers.

Odd Marriage Ceremony.

Polynesia is probably the only place in the world where the marriage feast takes place without the presence of the bridegroom. For some unexplained reason the young man is "sent into the bush" when negotiations are opened with the family of his bride, and he remains there during the subsequent festivities. It is only when the guests have departed and the girl is left alone with his parents that messengers are dispatched for him.

A Scotch "Bull."

General Wade constructed military roads in the highlands of Scotland. An obelisk was constructed to commemorate his achievements on which was inscribed the following "bull," intended to distinguish between natural tracks and made roads:

Had you seen these roads before they were made,
You would lift up your hands and bless
 General Wade.

Difference and Distinction.

Most people are afraid to be different. Some people are different for the express purpose of showing that they are not afraid. And then there are a few who are big enough not to care whether they are different or not. They are the ones that win out, but nine times out of ten they do things in the ordinary way.

In Her Own Coin.

Mamma—You naughty boy! What do you mean by saying "Don't bother me now" when I asked you how you got your clothes soiled? Tommy—That is what you always say when I ask you something you don't know how to answer.

FINAL MEETING OF BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR 1905 HELD LAST NIGHT — TWO MEMBERS RESIGN — BOARD ADJOURNED SINE DIE, AFTER WARBLING THE NATIONAL ANTHEM.

The last meeting of the Board of Education, as constituted for 1905, was held last evening, and the business for the year wound up. The members present were: Messrs. J. F. Wills, chairman; H. Naylor, J. H. Anderson, H. Walker, L. Diamond, W. P. Hudson, W. Tennent, W. C. Reid, A. A. Roberts, W. N. Ponton, L. P. Hughes, Rev. A. L. Geen, W. S. Morden and Hy. Taylor.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Mr. W. P. Hudson, tendering his resignation as a High School trustee,

From Mr. A. McGinnis, tendering his resignation as a member of the School Board for Bleecker Ward, owing to ill health.

From Miss L. Pearl Campbell, asking to be appointed upon the teaching staff when a vacancy occurs. — Referred to the School Management Committee

REPORTS.

The School Management Committee presented the following report;

On the afternoon of December 30th Miss Luella Boselly handed in her resignation to take effect on Jan. 1st.

The Committee considered several applications and Miss Marion Lambly was engaged until the end of the teaching year at the rate of $360 per annum; subject to the approval of the Board.

The Finance Committee recommended the payment of the following accounts:

C. P. Holton	$ 23.64
R. McCoy	2.00
W. Stewart	1.10
Luella Boselly	21.41
Belleville Pottery Co.	.75
D. M. Waters	5.50
Tickell & Sons	3.00
J. W Walker	20.52
Downey Co.	22.50
Schuster Co.	38.90
Dewney Co.	96.11
J. Lewis Co.	156.74

Board went into Committee of the Whole on Reports, Col. Ponton in the chair.

The Finance Committee's report, as also that of the School Management Committee, were adopted without discussion.

Mr. Hudson reported verbally that Miss Northcott was taken ill and it was found necessary to engage a teacher temporarily. Miss Wood is at present teaching and has consented to stay until the Easter holidays at the rate of $30 per month. Miss Northcott may then be able to teach.

The explanation of Mr. Hudson was considered satisfactory.

MOTIONS.

Col. Ponton moved, seconded by Mr. W. C. Reid, that the Board approves of the principle of establishing penny savings banks in connection with the Public Schools of Belleville, as established elsewhere in the Province, and would respectfully recommend that the incoming Board do at an early date appoint a committee to consider and report upon this proposal.

The mover spoke in support of the motion. In other cities this scheme was in force and some of the children had made considerable savings.

Mr. H. Walker said that the matter was brought up in the Board some years ago but it was not acted upon. He thought that the matter should be left until the new Board is organized.

Mr. Reid spoke in support of the motion. It was a move in the right direction.

Rev. A. L. Geen was in hearty accord with the move. It should, however, be placed in such a position as to be perfectly secure.

Mr. Walker said he was not speaking against the motion, but he thought the new Board should deal with the matter.

The motion was adopted.

INQUIRIES.

Mr. Morden asked if a report in reference to the children who had taken domestic science had been received.

The Secretary said that he would get such a report.

Mr Roberts asked if a report of the temperature of the rooms in the public schools was kept daily, the same as in the High School.

The matter was referred to the various principals, to report to the Board.

THE RESIGNATIONS.

The resignation of Mr. Hudson was taken up.

The Chairman said he no doubt expressed the sentiments of all the members when he stated that the Board would regret to have Mr. Hudson resign. He (the speaker) hoped Mr. Hudson would reconsider his resignation.

Mr. Hudson said it was with reluctance that he took the stand he did. It was not on account of old age or ill health that he was resigning. The facts were that his business demanded his attention, and he could not do justice to his position on the Board. He hoped his resignation would be accepted. At some future time he might again serve upon the Board.

Messrs. Morden and Walker spoke in support of Mr. Hudson reconsidering his determination to resign.

The matter was on motion laid over until the new Board meets.

The resignation of Mr. A. McGinnis was taken up.

Col. Ponton said the Board would most sincerely regret losing the valuable service of Mr. McGinnis, which would be the case if his resignation were accepted.

Mr. Wills stated that Mr. McGinnis was a valuable member of the Board, and as the Board had the right to grant a member three months' leave of absence he would be in favor of such a course being pursued

Mr. Walker moved, seconded by Col. Ponton, that the matter be referred to the new Board.—Carried.

This concluded the business. The minutes were read and the Board adjourned sine die, after singing the National Anthem.

Before the members left Mr. Morden exhibited a sample of silk flags which were being procured for the various schools, and it was admired by all.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE MEDICAL HEALTH OFFICER

AS PRESENTED TO THE BOARD OF HEALTH YESTERDAY.

Following is a resume of the report of Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer, to the Board of Health yesterday:

During the year just closed 163 deaths were registered.

Fifty-one occurred in people who had passed three-score-and-ten years, some having reached the 90's.

Twenty-seven deaths were due to tubercular disease of the lungs.

Six deaths were due to contagious diseases and all of these were the result of diphtheria.

During the year we have been called upon to investigate and placard contagious cases in 90 different homes in the city; 2 of smallpox with 5 cases; 36 of scarlet fever with 48 cases; 12 of diphtheria with 67 cases. With the smallpox we have been particularly fortunate. Although we have been surrounded with smallpox throughout a great portion of the past year, we have only had the disease develop in two homes in the city—five cases in all.

The infection in these cases was due to a man returning from the lumber camps in New Ontario.

During the early part of the year there were a number of cases of scarlet fever. These were all of a very mild type and no deaths resulted.

For the past two months we have been having an epidemic of diphtheria. 52 houses have been infected with a total of 67 cases. Many of the cases have been very mild, but still there has been fatal termination in six cases.

The exceedingly mild nature of some of these cases made it very difficult to deal with the trouble with any certainty, as many children with sore throats, that were undoubtedly diphtheretic, were allowed to attend school and mingle with other children.

During the past year antitoxine has been furnished free of cost in all cases of diphtheria, where the people have been unable to provide it themselves.

For the past two years the city has been almost free from typhoid fever, and I think this has been due in great part to the careful systematic investigation of all yards, etc., by the Sanitary Inspector and the co-operation of the citizens in at once co[illegible]ting irregularities when re[illegible] to do so.

Thirt[illegible] free vaccinations have been performed, all having been with those directly or indirectly exposed to the cases of smallpox. I feel satisfied that without a careful general vaccination it is only a question of time before we will have an outbreak of smallpox, for with so many cases around us, sooner or later, some infected person will carry the disease in to us.

There were 107 complaints made to the Health Officer regarding various unsanitary conditions, and these were promptly and personally investigated and the required steps taken to relieve the conditions found.

The city water has been analyzed twice in the Provincial Laboratory at Toronto and examined frequently here. The reports from Toronto were not as favorable as in former years and showed sewage contamination.

The milk has been tested twice and pronounced by Inspector Kerr as generally of a good quality. It would be more satisfactory to the citizens, however, if the milk vendors would not exercise so much care to keep the proportion of cream just within the requirements of the law.

One thing I would again call your attention to is the great need of some proper conveyance for the removal of contagious cases. During the past year almost enough has been expended in renting as would have purchased a suitable conveyance for the use in such cases.

The general health of the city is now particularly good and I look forward to great advances in the means of securing public health and sanitation during this coming year.

Wm. Leonard was arrested charged with vagrancy. He was convicted of the offence and sent to jail for three months.

DRUNK.

John Connor, an old offender, who is in debt to the city for a previous fine, was sent to jail for 30 days.

FINED FOR ILLEGAL PEDDLING.

The Police Magistrate this morning rendered judgment in the case of the County against Wm. Daly, charged with peddling without a license. The accused was convicted and fined $20 and $17.11 costs. The judgment, which was a lengthy and exhaustive one, may be published in full later, as it is of considerable interest.

WAGES CASE.

A lad named Robert Richardson charged Tobias Dockstader with refusing to pay him $2.50, alleged due for wages. After the evidence had been taken the Magistrate directed Dockstader to pay the amount, and also to give the boy some clothing which he claimed Pay Up Back Taxes Or City Will Sue.

ALD MARSH, CHAIRMAN OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, POINTS OUT THAT THE CITY IS OWED $46,000 IN BACK TAXES, AND SAYS THE SAME MUST BE COLLECTED AT ONCE.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir, — Will you kindly allow me through your columns to make an appeal to certain ratepayers to pay to the Tax Collector and Treasurer those amounts which are past due, and which should have been in the hands of the City Treasurer long before now.

When I took over the Chairmanship of the Finance Committee of the City Council I found that three tax rolls were still outstanding, and the following amounts on the respective rolls uncollected:

1903 Roll	$ 6570.58
1904 Roll	12768.39
1905 Roll	26360.36

Now, sir, I believe that the city has one of the best tax collectors we have ever had, and I am told that a balance of $26,000.00 on a previous year's roll is a small one to be carried over into the next year, and that our Tax Collector deserves credit for having collected the large amount that he has. Perhaps this is so, but I cannot understand why the whole roll should not be collected before the 31st of December of each year. Of the above amounts uncollected on the rolls mentioned there will be a considerable amount returned against the lands. There are also the rolling mills taxes in litigation, but on deducting these amounts I find $25,000 or $30,000, which should have reached the Treasurer's hands before the end of 1905.

In order that this may be cleaned up as rapidly as possible I have instructed the Tax Collector to issue warrants for the collection of all unpaid taxes on all the above rolls. Several warrants have already been served, and the balance will be issued within the next few days. I hope that parties interested will govern themselves accordingly, and will pay in all amounts they owe without further trouble.

There are also some water rates outstanding from 1905 which should be paid at once in order that this department may have the funds in hand necessary to the carrying on of its business.

Allow me, sir, to thank you for the publishing of this letter in the interests of the corporation, and at the same time to express the hope that citizens still owing moneys to the city will have enough interest in its welfare to pay their indebtedness at once. Civic officials do not care to proceed to extreme measures if they can be avoided, and if these measures must be resorted to it must be considered the fault of the individuals who do not pay promptly all moneys they owe the Corporation.

Yours respectfully,
L. W. MARSH.
Chairman Fin. Com.

SPORTING NOTES.

"Sandy" Burrows was referee in the Picton-Cobourg game at the latter place last night. Cobourg won 7-2, but "Sandy" is enthusiastic over the speed and skill displayed by the Picton lads, who, he says, will do much better against the light Belleville team than against a beefy bunch like Cobourg or Picton. So look out for a swift game next Friday night, when the Pea Canners come here.

The Port Hope intermediates justified our prediction that they could go some by holding Peterboro down to 7-6 on their own ice last night. The Port Hopers lost, but they made the Petes travel.

[illegible], one of the champion Marlboros' crack forwards, will not be in the game this winter. Neither will Dr. Wright, the ex-'Varsity cover-point.

"A" Westport ice races, Wednesday, "Headlight," owned by W. R. Acton, Gananoque, was first in the 2.20 class, with best time of 2.35. 'Nettie Wright' also owned by Mr. Acton, was second. The green race was won by 'Reflector," owned by W. J. Gibson, Gananoque.

Brooklyn Eagle: From a managerial point of view, Intercollegiate hockey is the thing. The rink was crowded to the doors by a typical college crowd, which cared nothing for the finer points of the game. The majority hardly knew what hockey was. One fair miss, who was wildly estor' 'what the little black thing the players were hitting was made of.' From his academical lore he delved up the information that the puck was made of rubber bound with iron. Then he loudly cheered for dear old college. Columbia won the contest, solely on account of her good condition.

Billiards on tables inlaid with diamonds and precious stones. Floors studded with $20 gold pieces, and walls carpeted with green goods from Uncle Sam's print works. Ivories carved from the tusks of the King of Siam's favorite charger. Cues cut from the mahogany forest of Jericho. Lackeys owned by the Duke of Orleans from his own household. Wines and liquors imported from Italy, France and Germany. Only gentlemen in evening dress, morning or dinner coats admitted. Business suits barred. These are a few of the particulars about the exclusive billiard and pool emporium soon to be opened by Tod Sloan and "Muggsy" McGraw, on Broadway, New York. With kings and princes as patrons, and sports as customers, the firm of "McGraw & Sloan, billiardists to gentlemen," ought to make money. — Buffalo Exchange.

The senior Marlboros, of Toronto, get theirs at Barrie last night, being trimmed to the tune of 14 to 7. There will hardly be any championship for the Dukes this year.

Deseronto beat Napanee by the jug-handled score of 14 to last night.

Queen's College defeated 'Varsity by 10 to 3 on Kingston ice last evening. Mills, Queen's goal-keeper, was ruled off three times for getting down on his knees to stop the puck. Dick always was tricky.

Aurelia Herrara, a Mexican boxer, put young Corbett away in five rounds last night. The former champion appears to be "all in."

PLANS FOREST POLICY

"As a Business Proposition to Business Men."

Judson F. Clark, Forester For the Province of Ontario, Outlines a Practical Scheme—Protection First In His Policy, Especially Protection From Fire — Progress Desirable Along Three Lines Immediately.

Ottawa, Jan. 13.—Earl Grey was again present and Sir Wilfrid Laurier presided at yesterday morning's session of the Forestry convention.

The first paper was by Mr. Joseph Hobson, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk, on "The Wood Supply of the Railway." His paper was a technical discussion of the species of woods needed by railways and of the sources of their supply.

Mr. W. Tye, chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific, read a paper on the same subject. On the Canadian Pacific west of Fort William 3,500,000 ties are required annually, and east of Fort William 1,500,000. In addition, 30,000 telegraph poles are needed each year and 25,000,000 feet of British Columbia fir is used for other purposes. He urged fire precautions, suggesting that Indians be enlisted as fire rangers.

Preserve Our Pulp.

Mr. E. B. Biggar gave a detailed description of the pulp and paper industry of Canada.

Mr. J. F. Mackay, of The Globe, spoke as a representative of the Canadian Press Association. He advocated restriction of the export of pulpwood to the United States.

Mr. Frederick Keefer read a paper on "The Forest and the Mine."

Mr. J. Kerr Osborne sent a paper on "The Wood Supply of the Manufacturer." After noting the replacement of wood by steel and iron for many purposes, Mr. Osborne noted the disappearance from Canada of woods like hickory, white ash, rock elm and oak. No attempt had been made at replanting.

Quebec's Attitude

Hon. Jean Prevost, Minister of Colonization for Quebec, then gave an address, declaring that though the forests are under the control of the Provincial Government, it was within the constitutional power of the Federal Government to provide a general scheme of forest protection. The deforestation in Quebec was due to the B. N. A. Act, for the province had been obliged to explore the forest to eke out its revenue. Quebec had greater reserves than was generally known, and the Government would increase them every year. The new policy was to place settlers on the clay belt, and reserve the natural forest lands. He urged the establishment of forestry schools to receive both Federal and Provincial aid.

In the afternoon Mgr. J. N. K. Laflamme, of Laval, gave an address on "Forestry Education."

A Forest Policy.

Mr. Judson F. Clark, Forester for the Province of Ontario, outlined "A Canadian Forest Policy." He described forestry as a business proposition to business men, and especially to statesmen. He also laid it down that the state is the best, if not the only good forester. After reiterating the three paramount reasons for a forestry policy—the securing of the permanence of lumbering industries, the conservation of stream flow and water powers, and the public revenue to be gained—he declared that a wood famine is in sight.

"The population of the consuming area tributary to our forests has increased four-fold during the last half-century, but its wood consumption has increased ten-fold." Canada, he held, should "be more interested in this wood famine as a seller than as a purchaser, and herein lies the possibilities of a great, ever-growing revenue from her public forest lands." Already the famine "has established stumpage prices, which put national wood culture on a satisfactory financial basis from the standpoint of revenue alone."

Protection is First.

First in his policy Mr. Clark placed protection, especially protection from fire. "Further progress is needed along three lines, namely:

"Improved fire laws

"More efficient administration of the fire laws, and the "Disposal of debris incident to lumbering operations.

"Nova Scotia has at present the best fire law, though it in some respects is surpassed by that of New Brunswick, and Ontario the most efficient administration."

On the disposal of debris Mr. Clark said that it had been proved that on pine lands brush can be burned for from 12 to 25 cents per thousand of the timber cut. A similar test regarding spruce lands is an urgent duty. "It will pay any province vastly better to take ten or fifteen cents less per cord for its pulpwood and secure the safety and the advantage to reproduction which goes with the burning of the debris than to secure the utmost cash return and leave the areas cut over for pulpwood in the deplorable and menacing condition which is to-day characteristic of Canadian pulpwood slashings." The state, not the lumbermen, should bear the expense.

Advocates Municipal Reserves.

Next came the taxation of privately owned forest lands. This should be arranged so as to restrain deforestation.

Exploration and classification of public lands is necessary. Arable land should be opened to settlement; areas where non-arable lands predominate should be constituted forest reserves. "A mistake in choosing too high a standard for the agricultural lands may be subsequently remedied at any time without embarrassment or loss, while the mistake of opening up for settlement lands unsuited for agriculture is certain to be a great and lasting injury to both settler and province and is well nigh irremediable as witness many townships in Muskoka, Haliburton and elsewhere."

Mr. Clark further advocated municipal forest reserves. The provinces might advance money for townships to buy non-agricultural areas and reforest them, and might organize a forest service for their management. "There are many municipalities in Europe having no higher prices for forest products than obtain in Western Ontario to-day, whose income from such municipal forests pays the entire expense of maintaining schools, roads, and other local improvements, and in not a few cases there is a surplus which is annually divided as a cash bonus among the citizens."

Practical Management.

Such a forest would begin to pay in from 15 years in Southern, to 30 to 35 years in Northern Ontario. The plan might be extended to the newer districts and townships started on their career with municipal forests.

The central feature of Mr. Clark's policy was the introduction of a system of practical and distinctively Canadian forest management, aiming at the perpetuation and improvement of the forest, by judicious lumbering.

The provinces should undertake a systematic stock-taking of their timber resources.

Timber should be sold under conditions making it the lumberman's interest to conserve the forest.

Trained foresters are needed, and a School of Forestry.

Knowledge of improved methods of woodland management should be spread among private owners.

The Work Summarized.

At the closing session the committee on resolutions presented a lengthy report, which summarised the work of the convention.

The Governments, Dominion and Provincial, were urged to encourage the farmers in re-forestration by the dessemination of expert knowledge, the procuring of proper seedlings and further aid.

The fire ranging systems were approved, but the small expenditure of the Governments in the protection of so valuable an asset was deplored.

The construction of the G. T. P. and other roads projected through coniferous forests were urged to provide proper patrols and other precautions.

Forest reserves were approved, and the Governments urged to establish a system of exploration ahead of settlement with a view to selecting proper agricultural lands and saving the forests as far as possible.

It was also resolved that the time is now ripe for a general forest policy for Canada, and that the Federal Government be asked to inaugurate the same.

The opinion was also expressed that the retention of areas under wood and the replanting of deplete areas would be encouraged by an abolition of taxation.

Last night a large number of delegates left by special G. T. R. train to visit limits near Madawaska. The train was arranged for by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier closed the convention with these words: "Gentlemen, we are dispersing, but our labors are not at an end; they are just beginning. Let everyone when he goes back to his home become a missionary for forest protection.

PLUMBERS PLEAD GUILTY.

One Hundred and Twenty-Two Defendants in Conspiracy and Fraud Charges Admit Their Guilt.

Toronto, Jan. 13.—One hundred and twenty-two members of the Plumbers' Union, under individual indictments for conspiracy to defraud and to restrain trade, pleaded guilty before Chancellor Boyd in the Assizes yesterday, and they are to be sentenced on Monday next.

Nine of them, through M. R. Riddell, their counsel, pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the Toronto Bedding Co. of $400.

Four others entered a similar plea to a charge of conspiracy to injure J. W. Reeves, and another quartette, represented by J. G. O'Donoghue, pleaded not guilty. An indictment against H. E. Jarman, who had given evidence, was withdrawn.

R. M. Yeoman, for whom Mr. Riddell pleaded guilty, with a group of others, stood up in court and changed his plea to not guilty. Mr. Riddell announced that restitution had been made in all his cases and this fact will be considered by Chief Justice Boyd in imposing sentence.

CUT TO PIECES.

Toronto Junction, Jan. 13.—A terrible accident occurred at 6.45 last evening between Royce avenue and Humberside avenue, when a man, who has been identified as John Halaney, with address the corner of Dufferin and Bloor streets, was literally cut to pieces by a Queen and Dundas street car, No. 840, going to the Junction.

A Battery Man a Defaulter.

Kingston, Jan. 13.—Pay Sergeant Norwebb of A Battery has been missing since Wednesday morning. His uniform was returned last night, and it is stated that he crossed the border on the Cape boat yesterday. Norwebb, who has been pay sergeant for the past year, has, for several months had practically a free hand in his department. Capt. Panet, in whose charge the department has been absent on sick leave, Norwebb was about a week ago placed under restraint, although not under close arrest. Besides the $1.75 per day which he drew from the battery, he also had a substantial income from relatives in England. He is said to have come from good parentage. Norwebb was married several months ago to Miss Mackenzie of Barriefield. It is reported that Mrs. Norwebb has left to join her husband. Norwebb has been in the service for about four years.

Children of Drunkard Get $17,500.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Damages in $17,500 were awarded by a jury Thursday to the children of a drunken father for redress against the saloonkeepers alleged to have made a drunkard of him. The verdict, establishing a precedent, which will result in the institution of many similar suits, was rendered in Judge Richard S. Tuthill's court. The plaintiffs were the five children of John Hedlund, and the defendants, Oscar Geyer, Louis Lundquits and Ernest Thoren, saloonkeepers. The verdict is against them separately and jointly.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold, in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small, chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood, by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flours of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patients and physicians alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

DAIRYMEN CONCLUDE.

D. Derbyshire, M. P., Re-Elected President—The Butter Experts.

Peterboro, Jan. 13.—The Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Convention was brought to a close yesterday morning with the re-election of D. Derbyshire, M. P., president. The other officers are: First vice-president, John R. Dargavel, M. P. P., Elgin; second vice-president, G. G. Publow, Kingston; third vice-president, T. B. Carlow, Warkworth; fourth vice-president, J. H. Singleton, Newboro; directors, Ed. Kidd, North Gower; William Eager, Morrisburg; Levi Patton, Brockville; James Whitton, Wellman's Corners; Alex. Hume, Menie; Henry Glendenning, Manilla; hon. director, T. D. Young, Central Smith; secretary, R. G. Murphy, Brockville; treasurer, John R. Dargavel; auditors, Morden Bird, Sterling; F. W. Brenton, Belleville.

Some idea of the growth of the butter export trade was given yesterday morning by J. W. Mitchell, superintendent of the Kingston Dairy School. The exports for last year were 80,000 packages more than in 1904, and 225,000 packages more than in 1903. The price obtained was three and one-half cents in excess of the figures for 1904. The output in Eastern Ontario has kept pace with the expansion, there being an increase of 25,000 pounds in the average output of twelve creameries which had reported.

The special committee on licensing factories believed in a thorough measure of inspection of cheese and butter factories and dairies, and will petition the Ontario Government for legislation to ensure factories, dairies, etc., being kept in a clean condition with a pure water supply.

Says They Must Die.

El Paso, Texas, Jan. 13.—The Supreme Court of Mexico, according to information, received yesterday, has declined to grant a stay of execution received yesterday in the case of three Americans, Maston, Richardson and Hart, recently sentenced at Chihuahua to be shot for murdering several persons to secure life insurance. Executive clemency will now be asked.

Richardson was at one time a resident of Belleville, Ont.

ON THE WAY TO CANADA.

Remains of Late Hon. Raymond Prefontaine Leave France and May Reach Halifax On the 20th.

Cherbourg, Jan. 13.—A special train conveying the remains of Hon. Raymond Prefontaine, left St. Lazare Station, Paris, at eight o'clock yesterday morning. Early though the hour was a large number of friends of the deceased were present, among whom were Louis Beaudoin, Montreal; Suzor Cote, of Arthabaska; Captain Morgan, naval attache, British embassy; Garcel Guiard, representing the Minister of Foreign Affairs; Albert Vignal, representing the Minister of Commerce; Maynard Dequelike representing the Commercial Union; Duff Miller, agent-general for New Brunswick; Pierre Foursin, representing Hector Fabre; Paul Wiellard, representing the Minister of the Interior; Anatole Peindron, agent for the Dominion of Canada in France; Doctor Roblet du Plessis, Doctor Latreille, Marquis Daigneaux, the last three from Montreal.

All excepting Messrs. Beaudoin and Cote accompanied Mr. Lemieux to Cherbourg. On arrival at Cherbourg the train was switched on the track leading to the arsenal jetty. On passing through the arsenal yards marines were posted every few yards who presented arms. At the admiral jetty Admiral Besson and staff received M. Lemieux, who expressed the thanks of the Canadian Government for the honors paid the remains of M. Prefontaine. Admiral Besson briefly replied, expressing the sympathy of the French army.

The coffin was placed on board the torpedo boat Zouave, and with the band playing the Chopin funeral march, the coffin was conveyed to the battleship Dominion, lying some distance out in the harbor. All the flags on ships in the harbor were half-mast, also those in the arsenal. Messrs. Clement and Haines accompany M. Lemieux to Canada on the Dominion. The French man-of-war Jules Ferry fired nineteen guns, and the Dominion returned the salute.

The Dominion left yesterday afternoon at six o'clock for Halifax. Captain Marx said he hoped to arrive at Halifax by the twentieth.

THE PUDDY MATTER AGAIN.

Late Street Commissioner Jones Tells What He Knows.

Toronto, Jan. 13.—The Puddy matter loomed up in the civic inquiry yesterday, when John Jones, late street commissioner, told what he knew. These were the salient points in the narration:

That Elliott told him Dr. Lynd had "voted right" and he (Elliott) had something for him.

That he slapped his pocket and said the "stuff was right there."

That Dr. Lynd came in to Scholes' "red room," and Mr. Jones withdrew leaving the two together.

Harry Berryman of the city engineers' staff, also contributed something to the Puddy case. The points were:

That on Saturday, July 15, Elliott showed him money in Scholes' hotel, claimed to be for services to the Puddys.

That Elliott said he was to get $150 if the "deal went through."

That Elliott said he had three alderman fixed.

STOLEN OR MISLAID?

Literary Woman Is Placed In An Unpleasant Predicament.

Cornwall, Jan. 13.—Miss Josephine Smith, a literary woman who has been devoting considerable time to the gathering of data regarding the U. E. Loyalists and the early settlement of Eastern Ontario was charged with the theft of a prayer book, the property of A. G. Drew of Morrisburg.

The prayer book, it seems, was printed 400 years ago, and Miss Smith was entrusted with it by Drew for the purpose of having value placed upon it by some of the historical societies. She claims that it has been mislaid.

She was committed for trial. The grand jury brought in a true bill, and the trial was adjourned until the next assizes. Miss Smith is held in $400 of her own bail and $400 in another surety.

Perish From Cold.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 13.—Reports have reached here from the Klondyke stating that several men have been frozen to death at Dawson City. The mercury has reached 60 below zero.

The Cattle Shooting Habit.

The irate farmer who orders the city sportsman off his "lands" is always incomprehensible to the man with the gun. His stories of damage to his cattle are unbelieved, but there seems to be some reason for the rural objection to city gunners. "To know how widespread the cattle shooting habit is," said a government meat inspector, "one should take up a position beside an inspector at a packing house and note how many cattle are flayed revealing a charge of bird shot in their bodies. Some are peppered on one side only, others on both sides. I don't know whether the cases are all accidental or whether the hunters shoot the cattle full of bird shot just for fun, but mighty few, either native or range cattle, reach the packing houses without carrying souvenirs of some glorious hunting trip."

A Malicious Will.

Persons wishing to register in their last wills and testaments their feelings regarding their natural heirs may take as a model the following crisp effort of an Englishman, William Hall: "I give to that vile wretch, Samuel Hall, who I admitted of the temple many years since, but he sold his gown, and in seven years I could never get him to church but once, and twice he assaulted me, and at the time he had certainly killed me if by God's providence I had not by a maidservant been thrown against a great fire, the sum of 10 shillings, to be paid him every Monday upon request, and I wish that the first food he takes after my death will choke him."

Mr. Balfour Was Defeated

Former Prime Minister is Beaten By a Free Trader.

Libera's Triumphant in Twenty-One Out of Twenty-Six Seats—Conservative Majorities Aggregating 17,369 Disappear in Liberal Majorities Aggregating 34,090—Hamar Greenwood, a Canadian, Wins, and Sir Gilbert Parker Holds His Seat

London, Jan. 15.—(C. A. P.)—Ex-Premier Balfour is defeated, and Winston Churchill is triumphant—twenty-one out of twenty-six seats taken from the Conservatives. Those are the great outstanding facts in the Liberal free trade sweep with which polling began on Saturday. The actual figures are even more astounding. Not only did the Conservatives fail to gain a single seat to offset their repeated losses, but whereas they started in twenty-one ridings with majorities aggregating 17,369 in their favor, they finished with majorities aggregating 34,090 against them.

The voting covered forty seats, and the result, when analyzed, shows that the Conservatives retained only five out of twenty-six, while the Liberals added seventeen to the twelve they had already. The Labor party had increased its holdings from two to six. The Labor vote may be included with the Liberal vote as, with on exception, where Labor won there was no Liberal in the field.

RIGHT HON. ARTHUR J. BALFOUR.

The Liberal majorities in the seats held increased from 8,043 to 23,130, the average Liberal majority being 1,635.

Prominent among the victors were two Canadians, Sir Gilbert Parker again led the Unionist cause with a success at Gravesend, his campaign having been conducted on lines of advanced tariff reform. He had a three-cornered fight, which resulted thus: Parker, 3,102; Geary, Liberal, 1,413; MacPherson, Liberal, 873. At the last election it was a straight party fight, Parker's majority being 738.

Then Hamar Greenwood joins the ranks of the Canadians in the Imperial Parliament, heading the poll as Liberal candidate for York City, with a population of 100,000. He has been campaigning in the city for about two years, and it is reported had over 1,000 canvassers working on his behalf during the last few days. York has two members, and at the last election two Unionists were returned unopposed. The result this time is: Greenwood, Liberal, 6,413; Faber, Conservative, 6,103; Butcher, Conservative, 6,904; Stuart, Liberal, 4,573.

What Lancashire says to-day, England will say to-morrow, is an old saying, as Liberals are now fond of recalling. What a Manchester, a Lancashire city, said seems likely to be the most remarkable feature of the whole contest. In the east division, represented by Mr. Balfour since 1886, his majorities, ranging from 398 to 2,453, the Conservative leader has gone down before the lawyer, Horridge, by 1,980. In the northwest division, Conservative since 1886, by 1,471 majority, Winston Churchill wins by 1,241. The northeast division changes from a majority of 706 Conservative, to 2,432 for Labor. The south division gives 4,222 for the Liberal, changing from 1,272 for the Conservatives. The southwest division, from 1,619 for the Conservatives, gives 1,226 for the Liberals. The north division increases the Liberal majority from 26 to 2,454.

HAMAR GREENWOOD.

The great revolution is attributed to the free trade sentiment of the cotton trade therein centered, and the work of Churchill, who has been organizing upwards of two years. The defeat of Mr. Balfour was a great surprise. Everyone expects another seat will be readily secured for him.

The fact of the woollen centre, Bradford; the cotton centre Salford, and the carpet centre, Kidderminster, declaring solidly for the Liberals had on important bearing on tariff reform.

Mr. Wyndham, a former Minister, has increased his majority at Dover.

Returned by Acclamation.

The following are the candidates who were returned for the new British House of Commons by acclamation at Saturday's nominations:

Liberals.

Sir J. Kitson, Yorkshire.
S. M. Evans, Mid-Glamorganshire.
George Lambert, Devon.

READ AND LEARN.

The following clipped from a contemporary should be carefully read and conned over by every taxpayer, who voted to put the so-called economical Liberal party in power.

The Federal Public Accounts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, have just been issued, and the public can learn from them how the financial carnival, which was inaugurated in 1896, is progressing. To fully comprehend the situation, it is necessary to recall the conditions which prevailed when the Laurier Government took office. The members of that Administration, it will be remembered, met in convention in 1893 and professed to "view" with "alarm" the expenditures of that period. These outlays, we are told, were enormous, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and others of his followers stated that they would reduce them by two, three, and even four millions of dollars, if they were given the opportunity.

The state of the finances which called forth the alarm is thus recorded in the official documents:

Regular outlays	$36,814,052.90
Capital expenditure	3,088,317.60
Railway subsidies	811,394.07
Other charges	139,963.34
Total	$40,853,727.91

For the year which closed six months ago the expenditures were as follows:

Regular outlays	$63,319,682.86
Capital expenditure	11,933,491.31
Railway subsidies	1,275,629.53
Other charges	2,275,334.47
Total	$78,804,138.77

Thus, between the "view with alarm" year, and 1905, there has been an addition to the annual obligation of $37,950,410.86, instead of the reduction of two, three, and four millions that was promised.

We are now in another fiscal year —1905-06. What that is to bring forth it is difficult to guess. But the votes taken at the last session of Parliament help to a conclusion on that point. The actual votes were these:

Main estimates	$68,664,397
Supplementaries	13,414,373
Supplementaries, second batch	797,880
Increased salaries and indemnities	612,500
Subsidies to new provinces	2,218,250
Bounties	1,750,000
Subsidies	1,400,000
Total	$88,885,000

This means that we are committed to an expenditure of TEN MILLIONS more than we expended last year. But the huge sums voted is not the entire story, because we are drifting into the great outlays upon the Government end of the Grand Trunk Pacific, which is to cost us no less than $75,000,000 plus interest, and the cost of betterments.

It is interesting to observe how the burdens have been increased by "leaps and bounds," as the saying is. The following table makes this feature of the situation clear:

1896	44,096,383
1899	51,542,635
1905	78,804,138

The extra expenditure—that is to say, the amount annually expended, over and above the average of the years prior to the coming of this Government to office — has been so great that if applied to the national debt, instead of being thrown away upon useless objects, it would have relieved us of more than half of that burden.

This thing, unhappily, is getting worse instead of better. There is no present hope of relief. The obligations forced upon us in respect of railways, the Grand Trunk Pacific liability, the loss of the Intercolonial, which is a growing quantity — all these items tend to make the burden which the taxpayer must carry heavier and heavier year by year. Unless the people are anxious to give up the larger proportion of their earnings to the Ottawa politicians to waste or to graft, there will have to be a political revolution soon.

Nothing new.

"Do you believe in original sin?"
"No; there's no such thing. They've all been used hundreds of times."

TIMELY TOPICS.

A despatch from Belleville to the Toronto Globe announces that Dr. Yeomans, medical health officer of this city, "threatens to resign unless he gets an increase of salary." It is just possible that matters in this city might go on in the even tenor of their way even if Dr. Yeomans did resign, and it would hardly appear to be the part of wisdom on the part of the Council to raise his salary, taking into consideration the fact that other equally well qualified gentlemen are willing to take the position of medical health officer at the salary now paid.

The letter from Ald. Marsh, in Saturday's paper, is making a few people sit up and think. "I never voted for Marsh yet," said a large property-owner on Saturday, "but if he does what he threatens to do I will vote for him next time he runs."

"Forty-six thousand dollars in arrears," said a small property-owner, "and I'll wager that if you could see the list you would find the names of many well-to-do men among the delinquents. A nice thing that poor people like me are threatened without mercy, while men who could easily pay, but who want their money to speculate with, are allowed to get largely into arrears."

There may be some injustice in the above remark, but the two quotations above show pretty fairly how Ald. Marsh's letter was received by disinterested citizens. And now it remains to be seen whether the Tax Collection department will carry out their threats or admit that they were "four-flushing," in the expressive language of the street. Somehow or other, though, we don't think the new Chairman of the Executive will get "cold feet" so easily, and in that case the city will be saved the expense of paying interest on borrowed money while $46,000 are owed in taxes.

"I heartily second the Intelligencer's motion," said a former mayor of this city, speaking of our remarks on Saturday night about the Zwick's Island filtering scheme. "It is easy to be seen that, if the City Surveyor's crude scheme is carried out, matters will soon be no better than they are at present, so far as the filtration of the water is concerned. By all means let us have expert advice on the matter, and then let that advice be followed."

Everybody, nearly, has heard the famous "Glory Song," sung so inspiringly in Bridge St. Church, under the leadership of Mr. Excell, when the provincial Y.P. Union met here. Those who heard it then and on other occasions will appreciate the following remarks about it in a Toronto paper: "The critics assert that the wording is bad poetry, and the music is bad music. Probably they are right. And it all matters—not at all. The idea of the Song is simple . . . and tremendous. The melody has a rhythmic swing that somehow augments and accumulates force until it carries you off your feet by its sheer might. Even the stoics of these latter days, schooled in self repression and self-drilled into cold concealment of natural feeling, soon begin to wonder — to waver—and finally, struggle as they may, they feel mightily constrained to join in the swinging chorus. Most of them do join, and the great tide of harmony rises and swells until its very warmth and power reach and touch something in the deep primitive heart of man and prepare the way for what is to come. Poor music? Doubtless. Poor words? Also, doubtless. And yet, as sung by Mr. Alexander and his picked voices, leading the thunderous harmony of the packed multitude, one can but say, "Great is the Glory Song."

The qualification under the Act is the owner of real estate of the value of $1,200, "over and "above what will satisfy and discharge all incumberances affecting the same, and over and "above all rents and charges payable out of or affecting the "same." A RUSSIAN TRAGEDY

STUDENT REFUSED TO HONOR NATIONAL ANTHEM AND WAS SHOT DEAD.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 13, 4 a.m.—A tragedy in which a student paid with his life the penalty of refusing to do honor to the old regime, occurred in the famous restaurant, "The Bear," shortly after midnight. The annual ceremony of watching the old year out was being observed with something like the old-time festivities The great hall was crowded and the orchestra of Mlle. Rgo, a sister of the quondam husband of the Princess Chimay, upon the stroke of midnigh burst forth with "God Save the Emperor." The guests, with the exception of a student named Davidoff, a member of an aristocratic family, rose to their feet, and the officers present demanded an encore, being determined to turn the celebration into a loyalist demonstration. Count Sheremetieff, a relative of the notorious Moscow reactionary, applied an epithet to Davidoff for refusing to honor the national anthem, and pulled his chair from under him.

Hot words followed, and suddenly the guests were startled by five shots in rapid succession, and the corpse of the student lay on the floor. Indescribable confusion followed.

Count Sheremetieff, in addition to killing Davidoff, wounded two women.

Three companions of Davidoff, armed with champagne bottles, attacked the murderer, who, with blood streaming from his face, managed to fight his way to the door. Women shrieked and fainted.

The confusion culminated in a wonderful dramatic controversy across the body of the dead student. The climax came when an aunt of Davidoff, who had fainted when the boy was shot, having regained consciousness, rushed forward and threw herself between the disputants and upon the body, passionately kissing the still, blood-stained face. A panic followed.

IN THE NITRATE COUNTRY.

Industry of the Barren, Dusty Deserts of South America.

In his "Commercial Traveler In South America" Frank Wiborg writes: "We stopped at a number of the nitrate towns—Pisagua, Iquique, Autofagasta—and I visited some of the mills, or officinas, in order to see something of the industry. Deposits of the crude nitrate of soda, called here 'caliche,' are found in the pampa, or rolling plateau, beyond the first range of foothills. In some places this plateau is but ten miles from the coast, in others as far as fifty miles. The pampa is an utterly barren desert. On the surface there is nothing to tempt the heart of man, but a few feet down lies the nitrate stratum. This presents much the appearance of rock salt and varies in color, according to the purity of the deposit, from a whitish tint to a dark gray. The upper earth is blown away with dynamite, and then the caliche is dug out with pick and shovel, loaded on iron carts and carried up to the mills.

"Here the caliche is first broken into small pieces by heavy crushers and then put into large boiling vats. Inside these vats are coils of steam pipes, by means of which the temperature can be regulated accurately. Sea water is poured in, and the caliche is boiled for a certain time. The liquid solution that results is drawn off into settling vats, which are exposed to the open air and the sun. Evaporation is rapid, and the pure nitrate of soda soon begins crystallizing and settling to the bottom. After this has gone on for some time the remaining liquid is drawn off and the crust of nitrate is scraped from the sides and bottom of the vat and thoroughly dried in the sun. Then it is graded according to quality and packed for shipment in 100 pound sacks.

"Most of the nitrate exported is used as a fertilizer, but a part goes to the manufacture of powder and high explosives. The nitrate towns are even barer and drier and less inviting than most of the other bare, dry towns of the coast. To some of them fresh water is brought in pipes from a distance of more than 100 miles. Before the day of these pipes it used to be sold in the streets by the gallon. That water even now, though not scarce, yet is not plentiful, is perhaps some excuse for the awful dust that blows everywhere."

Embarrassing.

A New York judge, speaking of a mistake that had been made, said: "It might have been embarrassing—as embarrassing as the position of a young man of Toledo whom I heard about the other day. He had been calling now and then on a young lady, and one night as he sat in the parlor waiting for her to come down her mother entered the room instead and asked him in a very grave, stern way what his intentions were. He turned very red and was about to stammer some incoherent reply when suddenly the young lady called down from the head of the stairs, 'Mamma, mamma, that is not the one!'"

WALTZED TO "GLORY SONG."

A TORONTO INCIDENT WHICH MADE A SENSATION LAST FRIDAY NIGHT.

Toronto, Jan. 15.—That the "Glory" song has taken hold of Toronto in earnest is proven by the fact that in the 'Varsity Literary Society dance in the gymnasium Friday night it was the second waltz on the after-supper programme.

Quite a sensation was sprung. Hundreds of dancers whirled on the polished floor to a dreamy, insidious, rag-time waltz, then wondered where they had heard the tune before. Girls hummed it to themselves. It was a swell waltz. It must be by the new French waltz king.

Suddenly a man and woman stopped dancing. Their faces grew white, then red, then white again.

"George, it's the 'Glory' song. I won't dance another step," said the girl.

The couple found their friends, and by that time everybody knew that Mr. Alexander's song was an excellent waltz.

A coterie of young people hurried to the orchestra. It must stop. It must not be played. Some boys sang the words from the gallery. Several dancers joined. Many were the cries, "It's fine; keep it up." The applause was tremendous. But it must be said that several left the hall, angry.

Inquiries will be made if the orchestra has asked permission of Mr. Alexander to use his famous tune.

WATER IN YOUR BLOOD.

Lots of people have thin, watery blood—they eat plenty, but don't digest. When digestion is poor, food isn't converted into nourishment—in consequence the body rapidly loses strength. To positively renew health, nothing equals Ferrozone. It excites sharp appetite—makes the stomach digest, forms life sustaining blood. Abundant strength is sure to follow. If you need more vitality, extra energy, better nerves, then use Ferrozone, the medical triumph of the age. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty chocolate coated Ferrozone tablets.

HAPPY RESULTS OBTAINED.

By The Use of the New Scalp Antiseptic.

It wouldn't take long to number the hairs in the heads of some people, the reason being they haven't many to number. In most instances, however, the fault is their own. A germ at the root soon plays havoc with the most luxuriant growth and causes it to fade and fall out. A remedy for this has recently been discovered, called Newbro's Herpicide, that acts by destroying the germ that does the damage, besides removing all impurities from the scalp. In addition it permits new life and vigor to enter the scalp and happy results are sure to be obtained from its use. Try it

THE ROOT OF NEURALGIC HEADACHE

Is an irritable condition of the nerves caused by cold. Relief comes quickly from Nerviline, the great pain reliever of to-day. "I consider Nerviline a magical remedy for neuralgia," writes Mrs. E. G. Harris, of Baltimore. "But I never worry if Nerviline is in the house. A few applications never yet failed to kill the pain. I can also recommend Nerviline for stiffness, rheumatism and muscular pains." In use nearly fifty years; try Nerviline yourself.

A Just Man.

A slight shower was falling, and Mr. Ferguson discovered, when on the point of starting for church, that there wasn't an umbrella in the house fit for use.

"You can borrow one from the Thompsons next door," suggested Mrs. Ferguson. "They never go to church."

"No, Laura," he answered, with iron firmness. "It is wrong to borrow umbrellas on Sunday. I should have bought one yesterday. I shall punish myself for my carelessness by not going to church this morning." Thereupon he proceeded to punish himself still further by reclining in an easy chair and reading the morning papers.

Retired Grinders.

A whole village of well to do Italians speaking English with an accent is one of the most astonishing things that Italy offers to the tourist. They are retired organ grinders who have acquired comfortable fortunes in various countries and have gone back to their beloved native land to live in affluence with their families in this strange little colony which they have founded among these sweet Italian mountains.

KNOW IVORY'S VALUE.

African Natives' Increased Knowledge Enhances Its Price.

It is a curious fact that notwithstanding the marked advance in the price of ivory in recent years the volume of sales has not diminished, but has actually increased. Tusks have been selling in the markets of London and Antwerp at an advance of 50 per cent. over the prices charged a few years ago.

The causes which have led to this advance in price are interesting. It is not due to any artificial manipulation of the market in the great centres, nor is it due to increased demand or scarcity of elephants. For the cause the inquirer must look to the heart of Africa, where a spirit of genuine commercialism is manifesting itself among the natives.

Their wealth is in ivory, and they have learned to value it as such. Indeed, the wealth of leading men among the natives was once commonly counted in tusks. They would say of a dusky capitalist of this kind that he was worth so many tusks, just as one in this country would say that a man is worth so many dollars.

Of course that was a natural phase in the development of a primitive people. The red man estimated his riches in wampum, and the Laplander in furs. They often would part with their possessions for a few beads or trinkets. They did not know the value of a dollar. Certainly it can no longer be said of the natives of Africa that they do not know the value of money. They have learned. Thus it comes that the "heathen in his blindness" is not so blind as has been supposed.

Increased transportation facilities and telegraphic communication have brought Africa into closer touch with the rest of the world. It is said that a native may be working 1,000 miles in the interior, and yet he can quote you the cash value of tusks in the Antwerp or London market.

Lonely London Bachelors.

The somewhat lonely life led by Admiral Sir Arthur Cochrane, K. C. B., whose sudden death at Charles Street, St. James', was the subject of a coroner's inquest recently, draws attention to many such solitary existences, says The London Mail.

The district contained within the limits of the Haymarket, Piccadilly, Pall Mall, and St. James Street, is practically monopolized by houses let out in rooms to retired naval and military men and civil servants, all bachelors, who have settled down to spend the evening of their lives within the four walls of their respective clubs. They sleep in the lodging houses which practically usurp the quadrilateral of St. James', and they get their breakfasts there, perhaps, and that is all. The rest of their time they spend in their clubs.

It must not be supposed that these rooms are especially cheap. None are to be had under twenty-five shillings a week; the average price is thirty shillings. For that one obtains a plainly furnished bedroom at the top of the house scrupulously clean but without undue adornment. The attendance is included. It is usually good, provided the tenant eases matters by occasional "tips" to the valet who keeps his wardrobe in order and brings him his bath in the morning. Lights are also included, and at night the transient lodger who returns to the house at 11 o'clock will see in serried rows the candlesticks of the habitues awaiting their return from the clubs.

In the halls of many of these houses also one may see packed away in a corner dusty piles of hat boxes — the property of young officers scattered all over the globe in quarters where silk hats are not de rigueur.

"These lodging houses," said the secretary of a large West End club, "serve a useful purpose, but they are not places to be ill in. The rules of most clubs make it impossible for members who practically live in them to take a bedroom permanently in the club buildings, and these lodging houses supply the want.

"For my part, I could not tolerate the loneliness. But you will find old gentlemen so wedded to their clubs that they think nothing of the few hours they spend in bed in their lodgings. They will stay up through the long vacation, though they have plenty of invitations into the country, rather than leave their clubs."

British Surgeon's Odd Dressing.

A substitution of glass for lint in dressing certain kinds of wounds is the curious suggestion made by Dr. J. L. A. Aymard, M. R. C. S., in The Lancet.

Dr. Aymard describes an experiment with the new dressing which he himself undertook at Johannesburg hospital. After obtaining a piece of thick window glass the edges of which were ground on an ordinary grindstone, he smeared it with carbolic oil and used it on a patient instead of lint. The wound, he says, subsequently healed entirely and will leave no trace of a scar.

Two other cases Dr. Aymard has treated with watch glasses, the results being equally satisfactory.

In summing up the advantages of a glass dressing, Dr. Aymard dwells upon its extreme cheapness and says that its adoption on a large scale would mean considerable economy in hospital practice.

It is also, he adds, a painless dressing, increases the rapidity of healing by at least one-half and further enables the wound to be examined without removal of the dressing.

Walking to Cure Malaria.

Obstinate cases of malaria that have withstood ocean voyages, mountain heights and quinine dosing are said to have been conquered by systematic and continued walking. What the malarial patient wants most to do is to sit indoors, nurse his aches and pains or to lie down and doze. Advocates of the walking cure maintain that fresh air is an antidote not only to the malaria itself, but of the blues, which usually accompany it. Their advice to the sufferer is to dress up warmly if the weather is damp or rainy and go out to walk. Wear flannel next to the skin, stout shoes and featherweight rubbers, a rain coat and a simple hat. If it is warm, dress lightly, but carry a wrap to throw around the shoulders against drafts and too rapid cooling off.

SOME FAMOUS KISSES

LADIES WHO GAVE FAVORS THAT BECAME HISTORIC.

The Most Effective Were Those of the Duchess of Gordon, Who Raised a Thousand Men With a Thousand Guineas and a Thousand Kisses—"Good Queen Bess" Gives Famous Kiss—Queen Victoria's Peace Kiss.

No more celebrated kiss was ever given than that bestowed on Nov. 22, 1581, in the gallery of Greenwich Palace by Queen Elizabeth upon the Duc d'Alencon, one of the suitors for her hand, whom, in the presence of Walsingham and Leicester, says Tit-Bits, she kissed upon his coarse lips and, placing her ring upon his finger, presented to her courtiers as their future master.

With true sincerity did another English Queen grant a like favor, though the kiss given was but that of friendship and esteem. It was at the conclusion of the Crimean war, when France and our country being, as at present, on the best of terms, Queen Victoria paid a visit to Paris. Her meeting with her ally, Napoleon III., was of the most cordial description, and the Queen reached every heart when, throwing ceremonial to the winds, she touched with her lips the Emperor's cheek, with that kiss doing more to cement the good-will between the two countries than any amount of formal courtesy would have effected.

Every one has heard of the famous kiss bestowed upon a butcher by Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire. In 1784 Fox was contesting Westminster in the Whig interest, among his keenest supporters being the beautiful duchess, who entered heart and soul into the spirit of the election, gaining many a vote for her protege by her golden speech and sparkling eyes. One man, however, a butcher, remained impervious to her wiles; neither beseeching glances nor persuasive word could move him. But the duchess was resolute on gaining her end; she offered a kiss for the man's vote. Such a bribe was irresistible.

The efficacy of a fair woman's kiss was incontestably proved when, in 1794, the famous Gordon Highlanders were raised by the lovely Duchess of Gordon, who was directly instrumental in gaining a thousand recruits by the donation of a guinea and a kiss apiece. In a sense, many of these kisses may be said to have been fatal, for in an encounter with the French shortly afterward more than 250 were either killed or wounded.

Alain Chartier, the French poet, is the hero of a romantic legend. One day he sat down in a public place, and, being weary and exhausted by the heat of the day, fell into a slumber. As he slept, Margaret of Scotland, the wife of the Dauphin, afterwards known in history as Louis XI., chanced to pass with her attendants. She glanced at the unconscious man and recognized in him the poet whose verses she so loved. Then, mentioning to her maids to be still, she gently stepped forward, and, stooping, imprinted a kiss on the sleeping poet's lips.

Pretty, too, is the story of Ingeborg Vinding and the poor student, Paul Vendelbo. The latter, whose empty purse was a sad trammel to his ardor after knowledge, was promised by two noblemen a foreign tour, conditional on his being able to obtain a kiss from the fair Ingeborg. Nothing despairing, Vendelbo one morning approached the lady as she was seated at a window and boldly made confession of his hard case. Ingeborg heard in silence, then bent down her proud head and in loving charity gave him a kiss.

At times, however, a kiss has been the prelude to a tragic sequel, as was that bestowed in 1718 by Prince Ferdinand of Bavaria upon Princess Thyra, the near relative of a ruler of a neighboring state, where he was on a visit. This affectionate greeting, a heedless whim of the moment, was given under the very eyes of the princess' betrothed, who, naturally taking umbrage, soundly rated the thoughtless prince. Words came to blows, which resulted in a duel being arranged, and diplomatic relations between the two states were broken off. In the war that followed, although hostilities lasted but six weeks, over a thousand lives were sacrificed.

A Useful Indian Tree.

In northern India, close to the foot of the Himalayas, grows the mahwa tree. Sugar is made from its flowers, as well as a cordial, and the tree proves itself useful in other ways. As a nut-bearing tree it has been known for many ages. It belongs to the sapotaceae (star apple) family. Its blooming period lasts from the end of February till April. Quickly after the pollen is formed the whitish tubular flowers swell to balls about as large as cherries, which contain a large amount of invert sugar (honey). The flower tubes fall, covering the ground in the greatest profusion. They are eagerly gathered by the natives, and eaten. A tree yields from 200 to 300 pounds of flowers.

Rice is usually mixed with the fruit before it is eaten. The dried flowers have very much the taste and appearance of raisins. They are exported to Europe as curiosities, and are also used as food for animals. Distillation yields a large percentage of spirits, which, diluted with water, makes "davu," a native drink very much used. It comes on the market in oaken barrels, and is highly esteemed by Europeans.

Besides the flowers the seed is of considerable use. They contain a fat of butter-like consistency, which serves as a foodstuff. It is called "mowra" and the crude stuff is known as "illipe," and is used by the Europeans largely for making candles, soaps and the like. The wood is very hard and lasting, and is much used for making wheels of the native bullock carts.

You have No Reason for Not Using

Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to take to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It wont hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Taken in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Taken later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that all must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

Sport in Morocco.

"There are few pastimes known to the people of Morocco that are not connected with religion," writes a traveler. "Children play football of a kind, and leapfrog, and practice wrestling and fencing. They also pursue rabbits with curved sticks and throw these with extraordinary skill. Some few experts claim to be able to kill partridges with the same simple weapon. The great game of the adult Moor is the lab-el barood, or powder play. This exercise is taken on horseback, and to see a body of Moorish horsemen come down at the charge with guns high above their heads to a given spot, where they fire their weapons and then pull their horses up on to their haunches, is a sight that will never be forgotten even by those who have seen cavalry maneuvers in Europe. Moors are very proud of their horsemanship and with reason."

Nature Teaches Inventors.

"We get our hints from nature," the inventor said. "Take, for instance, the hollow pillar, which is stronger than the solid one. The wheat straw showed us the superior strength of the hollow pillar. Solid, the wheat straw would be unable to support its head of grain. Where did man get his idea for carriage springs? From the hoofs of the horse, which, like the springs derived from them, are made from parallel plates. Scissors we get from the jaws of the tortoise, which are natural scissors; chisels from the squirrel, who carries them in his mouth; adzes from the hippopotamus, whose ivories are adzes of the best design; the plane from the bee's jaws; the trip hammer from the woodpecker."

Hardening Steel.

In hardening, bright steel should not be exposed naked to a fire or flame. It may with advantage be placed in a covered box containing bone dust or animal charcoal in some other form, or another plan is to smear soap oil over the article to be hardened. Water or oil is the medium generally selected for plunging the article in to cool it. Petroleum is recommended if extra hardness is desired. Either mercury or salt water will give great hardness, but the steel is rendered brittle. Oil is the best medium for hardening steel if toughness is required.

Called His Bluff.

"I see," he said, "that coal has gone up again."

"Has it?" she replied.

"And they're raising rents," he continued.

"Well," she exclaimed, flaring up, "if you wish to have our engagement broken off say so. I always hate to have people beat about the bush in a case of this kind."

Another Reformer.

Stella—So you are really going to marry old Millyuns. I had no idea you were mercenary. Maude—I'm not. I'm going to marry him to reform him. Stella—Reform him! I didn't know he had any bad habits. Maude—Yes, he has one. His friends say he is miserly.

Three gas companies in London consume between them 4,000,000 tons of coal per annum.

The Wily Ways of Dumas.

The well known Paris theater manager Doligny relates in his reminiscences an encounter he once had with the elder Dumas which furnishes an illustration of the novelist's wiliness. Doligny produced Dumas' drama, "Kean," with the rather peculiar stipulation that the author should receive one-third of the gross receipts when these exceeded 3,000 francs and nothing at all if they fell below that figure. Dumas, who was always hard up, came late one evening to get his share.

"Luck is against you again," said the manager. "You don't get anything tonight. Here is the account."

Dumas glanced at it and went away. In a few minutes he came back and said:

"Just look over the account again and then pay me 1,000 francs. The ticket that I just bought for 3 francs brings the total up to 3,000 francs and 50 centimes."

Titles in Italy.

There is an old Venetian adage which says, "Conte che non conta non conta niente" ("A count who doesn't count [money] doesn't count for anything"). And this cynical proposition represents fairly well the sentiment of the modern Italian. In that country the general feeling toward the titled aristocracy is of utter indifference. The lesser sort of titles are regarded as almost valueless even by their possessors. "I have known," says a writer in the London Mail, "a case of a noble lord who followed the interesting occupation of a street scavenger. In a cafe in a certain Italian town I was habitually served by a waiter with the title of count and a name famous in Venetian history. And I am personally acquainted with a lord of ancient lineage whose title descended from a father engaged in the vocation of railway porter. In general the aristocracy of Italy are miserably poor."

No Sleep For The Kidneys.

Old people are especially liable to Kidney and Bladder Irritation. The organs are weakened by age. This starts up inflammation—blood is not properly purified as it goes to the kidneys—and the bladder is unable to retain the urine properly. TELL HIM SO.

If you have a word of cheer
That may light the pathway drear
Of a brother pilgrim here,
Let him know.
Show him you appreciate
What he does, and do not wait
Till the heavy hand of Fate
Lays him low.
If your heart contains a thought
That will brighter make his lot,
Then, in mercy, hide it not—
Tell him so.

Bide not till the end of all
Carries him beyond recall;
When beside his sable pall,
To avow,
Your affection and acclaim
To do honor to his name,
And to place the wreath of fame
On his brow.
Rather speak to him to-day;
For the things you have to say
May assist him on his way;
Tell him now.

Life is hard enough, at best;
But the love that is expressed
Makes it seem a pathway blest
To our feet;
And the troubles that we share
Seem the easier to bear.
Smile upon your neighbor's care
As you greet.
Rough and stony are our ways,
Dark and dreary are our days;
But another's love and praise
Make them sweet.

CARRIE NATION AS A NUISANCE.

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

Carrie Nation has her Nemesis in a Texas town, where she had begun her usual enterprise of smashing other people's property and interfering with the liberties of such of the public as disagreed with her in matters of taste. She was forcibly ejected from one of the saloons, and also from a drug store she tried to wreck, and is to be arrested and examined on a charge of lunacy. This should have been done long ago. Whether experts pronounce her of unsound mind or not her conduct precludes the idea of complete sanity. Her methods are those of a ruffian, yet she relies on her skirts to protect her against retaliation.

A young lady on the teaching staff of the Toronto Board of Education has established, in conjunction with a Montreal journalist, a matrimonial record that is not likely to be beaten, says the Mail and Empire. Early last year the young woman obtained leave of absence on the ground of ill health, a leave that was subsequently extended, and went to the Northwest to recuperate. A few days ago, returning to the east, she paid a visit to Montreal, where she met a member of the staff of one of the dailies there. These two had known one another in the knicker and short period of their lives, but they had drifted apart, and nothing was further from the thoughts of either when they met again than matrimony. Yet within half an hour of their meeting again they married, and before 6 o'clock at night they were comfortably installed in a domestic flat in the full enjoyment of conjugal bliss.

BE HONEST, YOUNG MAN.

(Hamilton Times.)

The Scriptural "Though hand join in hand the wicked shall not be unpunished" is no less true to-day than when it was written. Men do not expect wheat when they sow tares; and a life of real comfort and happiness was never yet won by crime. The criminal law has a long arm and a tenacious memory; but they are short and weak beside the law which the Creator has impressed upon men and things, and to which all must yield obedience or pay the penalty.

Young man, be honest; not because of fear of the policeman, but because it pays—pays in cleanness of conscience, in self-respect, in opinion of society, in personal happiness, and ultimately in every way worth considering.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Archbishop of Paris Won't Permit an Inventory of Church Goods.

Paris, Jan. 15.—Cardinal Richard, Archbishop of Paris, has addressed a circular letter to the priests of this city, in which he declares that he will never permit the tabernacles to be opened for the agents charged with making inventories of church goods, and instructing them to declare on their words of honor as priests the number and the value of sacred vessels, but on no account to open tabernacles.

Nearly all the bishops, including the most moderate of them, have issued letters similar to that of Cardinal Richards. The order to make an inventory of church goods is looked upon as a mistake by all except the most violent of the anti-clericals, and is believed by some persons to be the beginning of a real conflict between church and state.

Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.—Burke.

TERRORIZED WINNIPEG

Doings of Mysterious Highwayman of Jesse James Type.

Held Up Six People, Entered Six Small Stores, and Disposed of Five Revolvers All in an Hour and a Half—Got $50 From One Clerk and Smaller Amounts on Street Hold-Ups—Police Have No Clue.

Winnipeg, Jan. 15.—A desperado of the Jesse James type terrorized the north end of Winnipeg Saturday night, when, in the course of an hour and a half, he held up at the point of a revolver six people and entered a similar number of small stores, in one of which, at least, he secured from the clerk $50.

He started operations about 5 o'clock, when he entered Zimmerman's pawnshop on Main street, and asked for cartridges. He returned at 6, when Zimmerman was alone and asked for a 38 calibre revolver. When he got a revolver he started to load it. Zimmerman, suspecting he intended to try and hold him up, seized it.

He then went out and repeated the plan at Weir & Co.'s hardware store, where there was only a clerk at the time. He took from him $50.

On Maple and other unfrequented streets he then held up six people. From one man he got $15, from another $5, and small amounts from others.

He entered several other stores and bought more revolvers, apparently to rob, but there were too many people in.

He then went to a pawnshop and got rid of his revolvers, five in number. At the pawnshop he gave the name of Fred. Johnson, Albion Hotel, Winnipeg.

It is thought he got away on a freight train. The police have apparently no clue.

NOTED BANK ROBBER.

O'Connell, Who Escaped Many Years Ago, Brought Back to Prison.

New York, Jan. 15.—The Hamburg-American Line steamer Amerika arrived Saturday night, bringing among her passengers as a prisoner in charge of Capt. Sauermann, Charles F. O'Connell, the famous bank robber, who escaped in 1890 from Clinton Prison, at Dannemora, N. Y., where he still has eighteen and one-half years of a sentence to serve. O'Connell is now 46 years of age. He has just been released from a German prison, where he served thirteen years for a robbery committed in that country following his escape from Dannemora. O'Connell snatched $2,500 from the paying teller of the Fifth National Bank at 23rd street and Third avenue, on Sept. 10, 1883, and escaped, but the same afternoon took $8,450 from the Commercial National Bank, in Wall street, and was captured. He escaped from Dannemora, the only prisoner who ever accomplished that feat, two weeks after his imprisonment. Re-captured, he got free again and surrounded in his flight at Plattsburg, was shot in the leg. In a hospital, convalescing, he made a rope of bed covers and escaped a third time, reaching Canada, where he robbed the Bank of Quebec of $3,000 and the Bank of Montreal of $7,000, and fled to Europe.

He stole $24,000 in his usual manner in Baden, Baden, and subsequently the banker whom he had robbed caused his arrest in Frankfort-on-the-Main, where he was living expensively and was known as "the American millionaire."

Safeblowers at Peterboro.

Peterboro, Jan. 15.—Burglars broke into Ald. Robert Hick's office Saturday night and knocked the knob off the safe. A heavy charge of nitro-glycerine was inserted and the safe blown. Sixty dollars in bills and silver was secured. The front portion of the premises was badly shattered. Mr. Hicks, who lives near by, heard the explosion and looked out of his window, but seeing the lights burning in his office supposed everything was all right.

Manager Roth Committed For Fraud.

Montreal, Jan. 15.—Max A. Roth, the manager of the Canadian Finance Co., was Saturday committed by Judge Desnoyers to stand his trial on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences by means of a "fake" telegram to Sylva Naud, who had borrowed money from the company.

Mr. Lowes Wins.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 15.—Ex-Senator McClelland, chairman of the board of appraisers, rendered his decision Saturday in the case of the four horses belonging to W. R. Lowes of Brampton, Ont., that were seized at Niagara Falls for undervaluation. After searching investigation and hearing both Appraiser Hill and Collector Brendel, who raised the question and had the horses seized, the chairman decided on all points in favor of Mr. Lowes and the horses were released.

To Regulate Insurance.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—United States Senator Dryden has revised his bill contemplating government control of insurance, and will reintroduce it in the Senate to-day. He has followed very closely the investigation by the New York legislative committee, and now expresses the belief that his bill will correct practically all of the insurance evils exposed by the New York inquiry.

CHAPTER I.

THE YELLOW MANUSCRIPT.

Two men sat and smoked in a small room in Shaftoe street, Bristol. It was an untidy room, and through the pungent incense of ship's plug, which one of them was smoking, there struggled another and more unpleasant odor, the musty spirituous smell of a badly kept anatomy museum. Human skulls and arm bones littered the tables, monstrosities in wide mouthed bottles jostled other stuffed and moldy monstrosities on the shelves, and a couple of bloated serpents twined themselves into slimy knots in a glass case in one corner. And where there were none of these things there were books—books everywhere—even in the corners of the deep armchair in which one of the men (he of the ship's plug) was sitting. Their sharp edges made dimples in the comfortable roundness of his figure, but he was excited, and if they hurt him he did not seem to notice it.

He was a big man, red faced and heavy, and the hair growing in a close mat down over his wrists gave a suggestion of burly outdoor strength strangely incongruous in such a room as this. His dress, which was that of a captain in the merchant service, bore out this appearance of incongruity.

Presently he removed the pipe from his mouth and, leaning forward, tapped the other man's knee with the stem.

"Can we do it, doctor?" he asked anxiously. "The gold must be there; enough of it to make us both millionaires, most likely. The point is—can we lay our hands on it?"

At this question the other man rose from his chair and walked over to the glass case where the serpents were. For fully five minutes he watched their slow, purposeless contortions without speaking. Then he returned to the table, reached for the tobacco jar and rolled himself a thin and very tight cigarette. Now, whether it was that Dr. Tring did not share his comrade's excitement or that his leathery brown face was too thickly seared with deep, permanent lines to allow any passing emotion to affect his expression it is impossible to say, but the fact remains that even Captain Nicholas Colepepper's sailor's eye was unable to read anything, whether of encouragement or the reverse, on the shriveled, chartlike face of his friend.

The doctor took a long pull at his cigarette, drew the smoke deep down into his lungs and kept it there for about half a minute; then he spoke, and with each word the imprisoned smoke crept furtively in broken spurts from his mouth and went to join forces with the heavy clouds which the captain was blowing with impatient energy from his pipe.

"Captain Colepepper, sir, you ask me whether we can raise that Spanish gold (a whole shipload of it, if your story is true) from where it now lies, imbedded deep in the ooze of the Atlantic. I answer you that I don't know."

The captain had evidently expected a more encouraging reply, and the vicious way in which he bit at his pipestem showed how much he was disappointed.

"You've thought over what I told you?" said he.

"Yes. I've thought it over."

"And you don't think it can be done? Man, it's bound to be a million at least! And it's there, I tell you, just waiting for us to take it."

"I don't go so far as to say that it can't be done," replied the doctor with some hesitation. "It may be, Colepepper, it may be. But I don't like to commit myself until I'm sure."

"Oh, come, that's better!" exclaimed the captain with returning animation. "If you say it's possible at all, that's enough for me. If Dr. Tring says a thing can be done, then Dr. Tring and Captain Colepepper between 'em will do it."

"Umph!" said the doctor shortly.

"A million of gold—or two millions, maybe," went on the other, mouthing the big numbers as though the very manner of saying them would make them bigger. "We shall be able to do things with that."

"No doubt," said the doctor dryly, "if we get it, but it seems to me that if we try we're more likely to lose the little we have and our lives, too, perhaps."

"But the manuscript, doctor, the manuscript!" It's all down there as plain as the rule o' the road at sea."

"Who was this Nicholas Colepepper, and where did you find his log?"

"I found the log in a lumber chest down at our old farmhouse in Devonshire, and the Nicholas Colepepper who wrote it was an ancestor of mine. I expect," added the captain meditatively, "I'm called after him in a way, as my name's Nicholas too. But, for the matter o' that, my grandfather's name was Nicholas. There always has been one in the family, you see."

"And this Nicholas the First—what was he?"

"Pirate," replied the captain shortly. "He doesn't say so himself, of course. Calls himself an honest buccaneer in his log, but I expect pirate was about the real size of it."

"Yes," said the doctor. "The law was not so squeamish in those days as it is now. I don't fancy you need be afraid that you are doing an injustice to your ancestor's memory. Piracy was an eminently respectable calling in the time of good Queen Bess."

"Of course it was!" agreed Captain Colepepper excitedly. "And, don't you see, that's just what makes me so cocksure that the story is true!"

Dr. Tring nodded, and, toying absently with a human thigh bone which was lying on the table, smoked for a little time in thoughtful silence. Captain Colepepper meanwhile fidgeted incessantly in the big chair, and with fumbling fingers cut another fill of plug and rammed it into his pipe with so much unnecessary violence that the shining black clay was in imminent danger of breaking under the strain. All of which is merely an evidence that the captain's agitation was overpowering, for he loved his cutty, and would have grieved for a month if he had broken it.

His action in filling his pipe was, however, apparently just as unconscious as the doctor's in playing with the thigh bone, for when he had done he did not light it, but laid it on the table, and, resting his elbows on his knees and his chin in his hands, leaned forward and anxiously watched his companion's face. His whole attitude betokened an excitement the suppression of which was actually painful.

Dr. Tring's face, however, betrayed nothing. He might have been engaged in deciding what he would have for dinner, so utterly calm was his expression. It was a terribly anxious moment for the sailor, for on his friend's decision rested everything. Excellent seaman though he was, Captain Colepepper knew well enough that without the other's assistance he could do nothing. He could fit out a ship, it is true, and take her to the very spot where the galleon with all her precious freight had foundered; that much he knew he could do, but that was not enough. And for the rest he relied absolutely on the scientific skill of his friend Dr. Tring. If Dr. Tring said "No," then the Spanish gold must stay where it was, and Captain Colepepper would spend his life in the sailing of ships and die at last a humble merchant captain. If Dr. Tring said "Yes," Captain Colepepper would cheerfully spend every penny he had in the world in fitting out a vessel in which to make the venture and would be content to die in the end a pauper, if only he could first have a fair shot at being a millionaire.

The captain spread the yellow manuscript out on the table.

Meanwhile the suspense was slowly driving him frantic. Beads of perspiration were rolling unheeded down his nose and dropping on to his beard. At last he could stand the strain of inaction no longer, and, throwing himself back in the chair, began, utterly unconscious of what he was doing, to whisper strange sailor oaths beneath his breath.

These turgid mutterings had the effect of rousing Dr. Tring to speech:

"Have you got your respected ancestor's log with you?" he asked.

For answer the captain produced the stained yellow sheets from his pocket and handed them across to his companion.

"Read it to me again," said the doctor. "I want to get a clear grasp of all the details."

"The whole of it?"

"No. Only where he tells about the plateship."

The captain spread the yellow manuscript out on the table before him and read as follows:

"From the log of Nicholas Colepepper, Esq., master of the snow [brig] Lucky Venture.

"THURSDAY, iij February, 1591.

. . . "The night had been a thick one, and mayhap our lookouts, being somewhat tired of their task, had not been overspry in their watch. Three weeks of peering through the weather for a vessel that never heaves in sight dulls the fresh glances of any mariner's eye, and we had been lying hove to or standing on and off for the galleon for five days over that time. So when dawn sicklied over the waters, and the great ship was spied bowling along good five miles to windward, I was at first minded to shoot the fellow on the foreyard for keeping such lubberly watch, but remembering that we should presently need all the hands we could get I anointed him with a few shrewd blows from a calker's mallet, lying handy, and set the watch to trim and make sail, that we might get all the pace out of our light little snow of which she was capable.

"The Spaniard's lookout was smart enough. His sail trimmers were hard at work when first we espied him, so he must have known of our presence before we knew of his. Now, it is the custom of the yearly plateship to sail only during the day and to remain hove to during the night hours, but this fellow must have been under weigh all through the darkness, having been advertised of our snow's presence, probably, and so from this departure from custom we judged that he feared us, and our lads took heart accordingly.

"A chase to windward is always tedious work, but as we sailed better and faster on every point than the Spaniards, 'twas only a matter of time, and we could tell the hour to a nicety when we should be able to bring them into action. The thing that vexed some of my men was the disparity in numbers. We had been at sea, off and on, for two years, and had lost half our number through wounds, scurvy, calentures and other sickness, and so could muster but a poor 83 all told, and many of them half disabled and brought scurvy rotten from their bunks by the rustle of preparation. The don was a 1,000 ton galleon newly out of port, with all her complement hale and sound, and with well nigh 500 men fit to carry arms.

"As we rose her hull above the plain of ocean we saw it was pierced for ordnance innumerable, for pieces both great and small; but, though this was somewhat discomforting, her lowness in the water was such that fears were swamped as they rose to the surface, for there was surely yellow ballast enough in her holds to make us all rich men for life, even supposing that none of us was killed, and as out of our small 83 a third, or perhaps a half, might lose the number of their mess during so hot an engagement as the one whereon we were entering promised to be, there would be the greater share for the survivors. So all were eager for the cast of fortune's dice box, which might bring them their death or might render them independent of mariner's trafficking for the remainder of their natural lives.

"The don was ablaze with banners and ancients [ensigns], and on the ample belly of her forecourse was depicted the head of St. Catherine, her patroness, with all the gauds and embellishments of the master painter's art. She was replete with carvings and gildings, with high fore and after castles, with close quarters and with all the Spanish devices for naval fortification, and in good sooth she was as brave a ship as ever breasted Atlantic or lured honest English buccaneer to plunder.

"Thus far had I writ before we came within shot range. Our fellows, as is always their wont, had set a cask of strong ale abroach in the waist and were feasting and making merry, for fear lest the hap of war should take from them other opportunity of doing that same again. The don, seeing that his heels were too dull to give us the slip, triced boarding nettings up to his lower yardarms, opened his ports and ran out the guns, and in fine made all ready for action. He was willing enough to run had chance been given him to do so, but now that he was cornered had no notion of yielding his treasure without a battle. But as this fell out as we had anticipated we were in nowise dismayed nor surprised, but cleared our pipes with a loud voiced drinking song, worked round to windward of him and held on to within musket range without throwing a shot.

"The don had been burning powder for a good half hour before our culverins and falconets hurtled back their message. Indeed his great ordnance on both broadsides had been spitting away at one and the same time, so that we guessed at the confusion that was raging in his 'tween decks and took comfort therefrom mightily, remembering that one small ball driven home is worth a dozen score of heavy ones which miss their bourne. Owing to the closeness of our approach, the don's gunners could not well depress the muzzles of their pieces, by reason of the narrowness of the gun ports; so that even the few shot whose direction was true had too great elevation and whistled harmlessly over our mastheads or sang through the upper rigging, and save for a cheesehole punched in the main topsail and a lee fore topmast backstay shot in twain we were not a whit the worse for his pelting when at length we began our own.

"Having run up into such short range before I gave the word to fire, we hacked him through and through with our very first broadside, and the groans and yells from his 'tween decks told us that we had made commendable slaughter, but by this time the arquebusiers in his roundtops had steadied down to their work and were browning my gun crews somewhat too cavalierly. So I bade my fellows load up with bar and chain shot, knock out some of their quoins and have at the don's rigging for all their skins were worth, which salute the galleon acknowledged by bowing to us with his foremast head, which had been twice hit by a shot from my main deck culverins. Roundtop and sharpshooters, foreyard and the great bellying course with its gaudy painting came down by the run; the galleon slid up head to wind, in spite of her timoneer's every effort, and we had her at our mercy.

"After this I ran ahead and in a series of short tacks raked her with alternate broadsides, to which she could hardly reply with a gun; for her bow chasers were masked by the raffle of wreckage, and when any of her people sought to remove this they, too, were mown down by our incessant fire. And had the fates permitted me to carry on this game of long bowls, she must perforce have yielded unconditionally.

"But when another half dozen broadsides must have reduced her word was passed that the powder had run completely out, for we had come into action with but a poorly stocked magazine, not having found opportunity to replenish it of late. Forgetful of this, we had been burning the precious grains with feverish haste, and the grinning little powder monkey who brought me the tidings declared that there was not another tub left.

"'Tis truly vexatious when an honest buccaneer finds himself in a strait like this, but there was no help for it. We could not get more powder by mere wishing, and we could not fire shot without it. We had naught therefore but cold steel left to rely upon, but cold steel has laid many a Spaniard low at my hands (and will, please heaven, do the like to many more). So, trusting in that, I sang out, 'Up helm!' and cried for boarders.

"We ran down alongside and threw our grapple. The Spanish gunners poured in a fierce fire to our deserted 'tween decks, but armed with pike, hanger and boarding ax we scaled their lofty upper works and hacked our way through the nettings inboard.

"Flushed with victory and nerved with strength by thoughts of the golden board below, my fellows were not to be resisted, and save for a party headed by the Spanish commandant—who retreated beyond the break of the poop and held the after castle in spite of all our efforts to dislodge them—save, I say, for these few, the whole crew was beaten below, and we thought the vessel our own. But this pestilential handful kept stubbornly at bay, and so, when, tiring at length of their resistance, they called for a parley, we staid our arms for a moment, being willing to make a truce and grant them quarter.

"You agree!" cried the captain.

"But the knave commandant, aping an insolence that would have sat ill on his betters, must needs dictate terms to us—to us, who held his ship and his shipmates' lives at our swords' mercy. 'I yield to pirates on no terms whatever,' quoth he. 'Get you gone, and your lives are spared,' quoth he, 'or stay and press your present advantage and I will rid the world of your thievish hands and minds forever, even at a large cost to myself and my following. And ye have not left my ship before this minute glass hath drained its sand I swear to you on my honor as a caballero that I will send you and the Santa Catarina and myself and my crew skyward in one smoky shower. Beware, accursed English picaroon! A volcano is underfoot! At this instant I turn the glass. If in a minute's time you and your robber band have not made retreat, I fire my magazine,' quoth he.

"His speech was in Spanish, and but few of my lads understood it. For myself, I never thought the fellow would be as good as his threat, and so, unwilling to be worsted by mere bravado, ordered a couple of main deck culverins to be hauled in, loaded, slewed round and trained so as to sweep his defenses. 'Thou truculent braggart,' quoth I, 'down on thy marrow bones and sue for quarter, or I blow thee and thy handful of ironclads out through the stern ports and into the sea!' But scarce had the words left my beard when there came a roar from underfoot, the deck heaved, and we were all shot skyward together.

"Beshrew me if the knave Spaniard had not been as good as his word!

"For myself, I fell into the water amid a shower of other solids, unhurt by twice a miracle, and gained the snow with some trouble, and there I was joined by five and twenty of my fellows, all with their hides more or less singed and dented. The remainder of the crew had gone skyward in pieces that no surgeon, be he never so skillful, could join.

"But worse remains to tell, and surely gentlemen of fortune were never entreated so evilly. The port side of the galleon—that furthest from us—was blown completely out, and she foundered incontinently; foundered, I declare upon my manhood, before we could spoil her of anything; foundered without yielding us a solitary piece of eight, no not a maravedi; foundered in 200 fathoms of water in latitude"—

"Stop!" interrupted Dr. Tring sharply.

The captain looked up from his reading. "We're just coming to the point," said he.

"Exactly!" was the reply, but for the present we will allow the precise latitude and longitude of the treasure to remain a secret, or, better still, commit your bloodthirsty ancestor's figures to memory, and I will do the same, and then you can destroy that part of the manuscript which contains them, and," added the doctor, laughingly, "even in your dreams remember that there may be listeners waiting to steal the secret, if you but whisper it."

At these words Captain Colepepper sprang up, and, seizing the other's hand, wrung it hard for fully a minute, laughing hysterically all the time. It is, moreover, to be recorded that the doctor's leathern face was at last surprised into betraying an emotion; for under that grip he winced with pain.

"You agree!" cried the captain, when his delight allowed him to become coherent.

"Yes," was the answer; "I do. We'll have a try for the Spaniards' gold, Colepepper."

"Hurrah!" shouted the captain. "I thought you would. We shall be millionaires, doctor!"

"Or paupers, captain," said the doctor quietly.

CHAPTER II.

THE FIRST RECRUITS.

The crew that Nicholas Colepepper and Dr. Tring got together for the expedition to raise the foundered galleon came about in this wise:

First there was Alan Guthrie, a young Oxford student, who had been "plucked" on his examinations, was heavily in debt and had been discarded by his father. On the day of his dismissal he was standing on the beach of Weston-super-Mare pondering on his future and reluctantly came to a decision to accept the queen's shilling and go for a soldier. Before seeking the recruiting sergeant he resolved to have a bath. So pulling off his clothes he waded into the ocean, and when over his depth began to swim. As he swam a curious fancy took possession of him—that he had only to go on swimming and his fortune would come open armed to meet him. Giving way to the fancy he swam on, but presently the water grew colder, and, turning, he noticed what a very long way it seemed to the beach. He pulled on, but made no headway. His heart sank; he was being carried out to sea. Still he struggled, but at last, overcome, with a despairing cry, he fought the waters that were mastering him.

Now, Dr. Tring and Captain Colepepper had chartered a vessel to take them where the treasure lay and had fitted it with various ingenious engines of Dr. Tring's invention for coping with the enormous difficulties of a dive which would be far bigger than anything any one had as yet dreamed of, but they had got no farther than Bideford before their crew, learning of the purpose of the expedition, mutinied to a man, and the order was given to 'bout ship for Bristol, where the crew left in a body. Dr. Tring and Captain Colepepper, having cooled from their disappointment, were out for a row with fiddle and flute practicing duets and heard Alan Guthrie's cry. Pulling in the direction from which it proceeded, they found him about to sink and hauled him aboard unconscious. As soon as he came to himself and learned of their intended expedition they found no difficulty in enrolling him as their first recruit.

Then the captain's daughter, Dolly, took it into her head that she must go on the expedition, but met with a flat refusal from her father. Both Dr. Tring and Alan Guthrie pleaded in her behalf, but the captain was obdurate, avowing that they must not be hampered with women.

One morning the captain, the doctor and the first recruit were sitting in the captain's room at Bristol, smoking and wondering where more men, reckless enough to embark with them, were to come from. An organ grinder had taken up his position in front of the window and was commencing to grind out "The Last Rose of Summer" at a pace so funereal that the homely old tune sounded as though it were a dirge, and had the three men been fanciful they might have taken this dismal wail as an ominous commentary on the doctor's last words. It may be, perhaps, that some such thought did occur to Dr. Tring. Anyway, his distress was acute.

The man dawdled slowly through the "Rose," and then started another tune, and this time he elected to add his own voice to the other torture:

"'Ere ha sheer 'ulk lies pore Tom Bow-ow-ling,
The darling of bower cre-e-e-ew."

"Oh, this is too much!" exclaimed the doctor and started for the door.

"Steady, doctor; listen a bit," said Captain Colepepper, getting up from his chair and going toward the window. "This fellow's pipe seems familiar to me somehow or other. Hanged, though," he added after a scrutiny of the singer, "if I know where I can have seen the man himself before."

The organ grinder was going steadily on:

"'Is fawm was hof the man-li-hest bea-u-tee,
'Is 'art was key-ind a-and sor-or-or-oft.
Faithful berlow Tom did 'is deu-u-tee,
And now 'e's gawn alor-or-or-oft,
And now-ow 'e's ga-aw-awn alorft."

"Strange!" muttered the captain. "I know the voice to a letter, but that thing can't be the man."

The second verse was being shouted at them, and the words were being driven into their ears with a force which made the window panes rattle.

—"wor-ord depar-ar-ted,
'Is vir-chews wa-as so-o ra-a-are,
Is fr'en's was ma-any hand treu 'ar-ar-ted,
'Is 'Enrietta was key-ind and fair."

"That settles it!" exclaimed Captain Colepepper, rushing toward the door. "Tom Jelly was the only man who ever changed Poll to Henrietta in that line."

"Well," said the doctor, "if the individual is a friend of yours, Colepepper, I hope you'll use your influence with him for our benefit. Much more of his melody will be mentally dangerous—to me at any rate, and even Guthrie looks ruffled."

But the captain had got outside by this time, and the suggestion remained unanswered. The other two, watching from the window, saw the organ grinder turn round as soon as the door opened and grin expansively the moment Captain Colepepper's burly form appeared on the threshold. The recognition was mutual, and the two men exchanged a horny handshake. Then the observers saw that the captain was endeavoring to drag his acquaintance indoors, while the other offered a bashful but yielding resistance.

The itinerant musician was a square built man, with an enormous black beard which covered nearly the whole of his face. He had lost one arm at the shoulder, and the left sleeve of his coat flapped loosely. He wore small gold rings in his ears and a high crowned hat of black felt was pulled down well on to his head.

"Come along, Tom, come along!" Captain Colepepper was saying in his cheery bawl. "You've no call to be shy. Never mind your rig out lad. Unship your torture box and stow it down here in the gangway and then come into my stateroom. Why couldn't you have just knocked at the door and asked for me?"

"Why, you see, gents all," said the man, with bashful hesitation, "I hardly liked. If there'd been a back door, it would have been all right. But I tacked about and couldn't find one, and it's hardly the place for the likes of me to come pounding at a big brass knocker when I wasn't expected, specially when I was wanting to ask a bit of a favor."

"What! You don't mean to say that you've come here to volunteer for the enterprise, Tom Jelly, do you?" inquired the captain, with obvious amazement. "I thought you'd given up the sea for good."

"With permission," said Tom, with a grin, "I'd like to change my mind."

"You're a good lad, Tom Jelly—a good lad!" roared the captain delightedly. "Sit down and tell us why you didn't turn up before. Been thinking the matter over?"

"Only just heard about it, cap'n," said the man, sitting on the extreme edge of the chair which Captain Colepepper pushed to him. "Me and 'Enrietta trudged into Bristol day afore yesterday and brought up at our old moorings. We went to the Admiral Blake for a chat and a smoke and a drop of ale in the evening and heard tell of how you'd got a wonderful scheme on 'and for weighing the dollars from out of a craft which foundered after a fight with a pirate some years ago—how many they didn't seem to rightly know at the Admiral Blake. But everybody said it was a mad idea that nobody but a fool would believe in and that you and the doctor 'u'd never get a single soul to join you. Now, the doctor—no disrespect meant, sir—I didn't know, never having heard of him afore. But Cap'n Colepepper I'd sailed with, boy and man, nigh on five and twenty year, and I knowed he was too good a seaman, in a manner of speaking, to put to sea in dirty weather without seeing a good chance of weathering it all safely. So, gentlemen all"—Tom lifted the glass of beer which the captain had handed him—"here's 'ealth and success."

The beer vanished into some aperture hidden among the thick jungle of black hair, and the glass was set down empty on the table.

"This is a very different sort of trip, Tom, from any other we've had together," observed Captain Colepepper. "Are you sure you know what it is you are offering to join?"

"I know, cap'n, I know; they told me all about it at the Admiral Blake, but I says to them, I says: 'There ain't a man in the merchant service that knows how to handle either square rig or fore and aft like Cap'n Nich'las Colepepper. At either seamanship or navigation show me the man that can beat him,' says I. 'I'll freely own,' I says, 'that he's learned his experience atop of the ocean and not inside it, but if he's made up his mind to try a trip below the waves, instead of above 'em, in the ord'nary way, as you tell me he has, then you may stake your shoes on it Cap'n Colepepper knows what he's about.' And that's just what I says to 'em, sir."

The captain had let his pipe go out and his screwed up eyes were twinkling with pleasure under the heavy thatches of their brows. Dr. Tring, however, not being the recipient of the eulogy, had leisure for criticism and kept looking rather pointedly at the new arrival's empty left sleeve, wondering to himself, perhaps, whether half a recruit was better than no recruit at all.

Jelly noticed these glances and, turning to the doctor, said earnestly, "I've been at sea with Cap'n Colepepper, sir, since I lost my wing, and, though folks think there's only half of me left, some of 'em have found out I'm worth ten dead men yet."

"That's a solid fact, doctor," commented the captain.

"Which being so," continued the seaman, "I'd just like to sign on now for self and 'Enrietta."

"For self and what?" roared Dr. Tring.

"Self and 'Enrietta," repeated the man stolidly.

"Quite so," assented Captain Colepepper; "for himself and Henrietta. That's all right, doctor, isn't it?" And then, seeing his friend's look of bewilderment, he burst into a roar of laughter.

They found him about to sink and hauled him aboard unconscious.

"I forgot," cried the captain, "that you haven't met Mrs. Jelly. Have you got her anywhere handy, Tom?"

"Cruising on and off the end of the street, sir," replied the seaman promptly.

"Give her a hail then and we'll introduce her to the ship's company."

Tom Jelly rose from his chair, betook himself outside, and immediately afterward a leather lunged hail of "'Enrietta, ahoy!" reverberated down the street and brought startled faces to the neighboring windows to learn what the horrible din, to which respectable Shaftoe street was quite unaccustomed, should portend. The hail was echoed in shrill tones from somewhere in the distance, and was followed presently by the appearance of Mrs. Jelly herself.

Meanwhile Dr. Tring had taken advantage of the sailor's brief absence to hold a hurried colloquy with his friend.

"What on earth are you thinking of, Colepepper?" he protested. "We don't want a stewardess."

"A stewardess!" repeated the captain, with a roar of laughter. "Mrs. Jelly a stewardess? Wait till you see her!"

The doctor looked puzzled.

"She is a sailor, sir," the captain went on; "rates as an A. B.; stands her watch as well as any man and better than most. Mrs. Jelly a stewardess! Don't you dare to mention such an idea to her if you don't want to be annihilated. Mrs. Jelly is a— Here she is, though, to speak for herself," he broke off.

Mrs. Jelly appeared in the doorway and bestowed upon the captain a stiff, awkward bow, which seemed to hint that she was not much accustomed to such feminine courtesies. She was a squat, broad hipped woman, with a snub nose and a bristling chin and upper lip. Her visible dress consisted of a drab colored deer stalker cap, a stout double breasted pea jacket, a short blue serge skirt and a heavy pair of man's laced up boots. She had large brown hands and swung them at her side, sailor fashion, with the fingers hooked inward, and her grizzled gray hair was cropped as short as a schoolboy's. Yet, in spite of her uncouth exterior, no one would have been in danger of mistaking Mrs. Jelly for a man rigged out in female attire, for there was an indescribable something about her which wrote her "woman." Perhaps it was her eyes, for they were large and brown and had that look of soft appealing in them which is to be seen in a dog always, in a woman often, but in a man never.

"Well, Henrietta," said the captain, "I suppose you know that this is not an ordinary cruise?"

"Yes, captain," said the woman. "Jelly and me heard all about it at the Admiral Blake, from them as had been told by you yourself, and we settled to sign on, if you'd have us."

"Then you don't want to hear the details over again at first hand?" asked the doctor in some surprise.

"No, sir, thankee," replied the woman. "I'd like to hear what the terms are to be, though. Some said we were to have wages and others a share in the run."

"It's shares, 'Enrietta," interposed Jelly. "Don't bother the gentleman. Let's get signed on and be trudging."

Mrs. Jelly agreed by a nod, and, taking the paper which Captain Colepepper handed to her, added her name to the others. She wrote the signature in a firm, clear hand, and afterward added underneath it her husband's name also, and, having done so, she handed the paper across to Jelly for him to authenticate the document with his mark.

"Now, Jelly, we'll tramp," said the woman shortly, and shouldered her husband's hand organ.

"Stay a minute," put in Dr. Tring, turning to the seaman. "That reminds me that you have not yet explained your possession of this horrible engine of torture."

"That's easy answered, sir," replied Tom Jelly, with a grin. "You see, I was out of a berth for a bit, 'cause I wouldn't ship with no captain as refused to take 'Enrietta along, too, 'cause, as Cap'n Colepepper 'imself 'll tell you, two allus does ship in company. So after we'd been idle for a month or so, she says, 'Jelly,' says she, ''ow far have you ever been from the seacoast?' 'Once or twice,' says I, 'but not often.' I was born in Bristol quay side, sir, and spent all my life in traipsing from port to port, or lying quiet in sailors' lodgings close alongside it. 'Then,' says she, 'supposing we takes a trip inshore by way of a change.' 'That 'ud suit Tom Jelly down to the ground, old lass,' says I; 'only I don't see 'ow it's to be worked. The shotlocker is about empty as it is, and if we started for a cruise in unknown waters like them, we'd soon be finding ourselves 'ove beam ends on to a lee shore.' 'So we would, ye lubber,' says she. 'Them's the very words, sir; you know 'Enrietta's way, cap'n. 'So we would, ye lubber, if you'd got the managing of it. You've no more 'ead on you than a pint of bilge water 'as. Can't we buy one of them grinding organs,' says she, 'and work our passage with that?' Now I take it, gentlemen all, there ain't many women clever enough to plan out a tower like that; blow me, if there is!"

At the chorus of amused assent which the three auditors gave to this piece of brazen flattery Mrs. Jelly looked uncomfortable and muttered something which the others did not catch.

"So you steered inland, Tom," said the captain, with a laugh. "Did the organ keep you going?"

"We lived and traveled like a dook and a duchess, cap'n, and see a sight of things and places. But I must say we did begin to tire of it terrible after a bit and to long for a sniff of sea air and a bite of salt junk. You know how it is, Cap'n Colepepper."

"Yes, Tom," said the captain, with a bit of a sigh, "I understand. I feel that way myself sometimes. Well, we're going to smell the salt again in company, it seems, and I for one am heartily glad of it."

"So be I, cap'n; so be I," said the man, "and so be 'Enrietta. Treas or no treasure, we both of us was bound to sail again under Cap and I says it for the tw now, if the gentlemen's we'll be going. A word w Blake will allus bring u hour or so, cap'n. Come o

He had shouldered his org spoke and Mrs. Jelly ward the door. Mrs. Jelly him, and the strange cou themselves out with all the a ness of bashful and uncouth courtesy.

"Well, Colepepper," said the doctor, throwing himself into the captain's big chair.

THE REPUBLIC'S PERLI

REV. DR. TALMAGE DISCUSSES MORMONISM IN THE U. S.

IT IS NOW A GROWING EVIL

Brigham Young He Describes as One of the Most Corrupt and Most Dangerous Men Who Ever Lived on American Soil, and His Evil Influence Is Bringing Forth Its Baleful Harvest To-day.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 14.—That Mormonism constitutes a real danger to the United States and that it is a growing rather than a decreasing peril is shown in this sermon, the text for which the preacher takes from Isaiah iii, 9, "They declare their sin as Sodom; they hide it not."

The study of the lives of great men has always been with me a passion. Next to reading the works of the great authors and the speeches of the great orators I have always had a longing to know how these leaders of thought looked and lived and acted in their public and private lives. Thus as a young man when I had the opportunity of entertaining in our home Dr. Byron Sunderland, who was to preach in the Brooklyn tabernacle a couple of Sundays, I literally pumped the old man dry of all his reminiscences. Great was his well of information and personal experiences.

Dr. Bryon Sunderland for nearly half a century had been a resident of Washington. He was not only known as the pastor of presidents, but for years he had been chaplain of the United States Senate. Webster and Clay and Benton and Pierce and Lincoln and Conkling and Blaine, all the mighty political giants north, south, east and west, had been his intimate friends or acquaintances. Hour after hour would speed by as the old man talked to me. I remember well the last night we were together. It was nearly 1 o'clock in the morning when I said: "Dr. Sunderland, you have been describing to me many men. Tell me the strongest personality you have ever known." Then the old man leaned back in his chair and told the following incident:

"The scene was not in Washington; it was in Salt Lake City. The man was not Webster or Clay; he was Brigham Young. Many years ago the Mormon church challenged the gentiles to a debate, and some of the leading ministers of the east took up the challenge. Bishop John P. Newman of the Methodist church and myself were delegated to meet the Mormon representatives. The debate took place in the Mormon tabernacle, which holds some 10,000 auditors. The debate had been going on for some days, and we had come to the closing night. Bishop Newman was summing up and making his peroration. With the skill of an accomplished orator he was wheeling his facts into line, and he said substantially: 'Therefore, if this is so and if that is so and if the other thing is so then we are forced to the conclusion that Mormonism stands for nothing else besides licensed libertinism and wholesale fraud!' Ten thousand angry men and women instantly leaped to their feet and began to press down toward the platform. The cry was taken up everywhere: 'Lynch him! Lynch him! Kill him! Stab the heretic's heart! Kill him! Lynch him now!'

"I sat beside Newman at the time," continued Dr. Sunderland. "I did not see one avenue of escape. Suddenly Brigham Young arose and stepped to the front of the platform. He swung his arm out over that cursing, swearing, angry mob and uttered just two words, 'Sit down!' They dropped into their seats as the grain falls before the hiss of the scythe. That was to me the most marvelous scene I ever witnessed. As I came under the leader's spell I realized that he was one of the greatest of men and one of the most dangerous, if not the most dangerous, to American liberties who had ever trodden American soil."

What Byron Sunderland said to me over fifteen years ago was absolutely true. Brigham Young was one of the greatest and one of the most corrupt men who ever lived on American soil.

I have been to Salt Lake City. I have carefully read many of the books written both for the advocacy and for the condemnation of Mormonism, and from the mass of conglomerate testimony into which I have delved I can come but to one conclusion — that Joseph Smith was a crack-brained epileptic, who, with his fits of hysteria, was just the man for a little while to appeal to the ignorant and superstitious people with whom he came in contact. But Joseph Smith could never have created the Mormon church. It needed more than an epileptic visionary to do that. No sooner was Joseph Smith dead (and he died some fifteen years after he had begun to proclaim himself a prophet) than this monster manipulator, this modern Blue Beard, this leprous Frankenstein, this robber of men's gold and of women's morals, Brigham Young stepped forward and gathered together Smith's crazed followers and molded them together into a social organism, of which he was to be the chief blood letting vampire. And all that Brigham Young stood for fifty years ago the present head of the Mormon church stands for to-day, though the claw may have temporarily sunk out of sight in the soft flesh of the tiger's paw.

To show that the Mormon church to- exactly where it did in Brig- 's time I would quote part iew which Irving Sayford nths ago with one of the the hierarchy. Question: "If that is so, why has the Mormon church repudiated the principle of polygamy as witnessed in the manifesto of 1890?"

Answer: "You are under misapprehension. The Mormon church has not repudiated the principle of polygamy. It never will repudiate polygamy. Under the manifesto the Mormon church merely set aside temporarily the practice of plural marriage—laid it on the shelf for the time being—in obedience to the law of the land."

Question: "Then you mean to say as a member of the apostolate that polygamy is just as much a cardinal principle of Mormonism as it ever was?"

Answer: "Yes, sir. And I speak from an experience of fifty years in the church."

Could any testimony be more conclusive that the Mormon church stands to-day in all its principles just where it stood in Brigham Young's time? Now, let us begin to examine more in detail what this leprous social organism is reaching out for in this twentieth century.

First, the Mormon church unblushingly stands for "graft." It represents financial plunder. It is Boss Tweedism parading about the streets in the mud bespattered garments of ecclesiasticism. It is the Tripoli pirates demanding blood immunity pay from all those who come under its churchly shadow. It is the holdup call of the highwayman, demanding that the stage's passengers empty their pocketbooks at its altars. It was conceived with the idea of financial graft, developed with the idea of graft, and it is perpetuated with the idea of graft. The members of the hierarchy are no more philanthropists than the buccaneers of old were philanthropists or that Capt. Kidd was a philanthropist when he raised his black flag over the Adventurer on the Madagascar coast in the latter part of the seventeenth century.

Brigham Young did not elect himself as head of the Mormon church for the benefit of his followers any more than Boss Tweed ruled New York for the benefit of its people. He was a financial robber, pure and simple. He at once commenced to levy his taxes. This tithing system grew and grew until out of the iniquitous system Brigham Young became one of the wealthiest men in America. The world marvels at the few hundreds of thousands of dollars which members of the iniquitous political rings of New York and Philadelphia were able to steal. Why, these men were only babes in the art of financial graft compared to this monstrous adventurer. Some years ago, with the governor of what was then Utah Territory, I was driven about Salt Lake City. Almost everywhere I could see the results of Brigham Young's financial depredations. Two years after his death the Salt Lake Tribune declared that Young had secured from the tithing system of Utah over $13,000,000. Nine million dollars of this he squandered on his family; $4,000,000 he left to be fought over by his heirs. I have been told that at his death he owned one-tenth of all the wealth of Utah. Can any man read an account of such financial dealings and not declare that he was the king of grafters.

What the Mormon church stood for in its financial dealings fifty years ago it stands for to-day. By its tithing system the Mormon church has now an income of at least $2,000,000. Where is it going to? For what means is all this vast amount of money being used? For the spread of the Mormon gospel? Oh, yes. Some of it is spent in that way, just as some of the money of the infamous Louisiana lottery was used for advertising the lottery tickets all over the world; but, without doubt, a vast percentage of that income goes into the pockets of the Mormon leaders.

"But," says some one, "you should not condemn the Mormon leaders like that. They do not compel the members of the church to 'stand and deliver,' as a highwayman gruffly orders his victims to do. These church members do not have to surrender their tithes any more than the members of your church have to give into the collection plates unless they wish to do so. If the Mormon people give to Joseph F. Smith they give of their own free will." Ah, my friends, that is one of the biggest delusions ever sent broadcast over this land. The Mormon victims do not give willingly. They are compelled to give, whether they are willing or not, by the thumbscrews of the boycott and financial ostracism. If you want proof of what I say read today the marvelous investigations of "Mormonism Unveiled," by Irving Sayford, already quoted. Not only does he cite facts seen with his own eyes, but he corroborates with names and dates this one fact—that Mormon excommunication means financial persecution and financial annihilation. If a man in Utah does not give to the church his tenth the church will deliberately start forth to take away his trade. The most fiendish work of the most merciless trust is not more relentless and destructive than this evil institution of which Brigham Young was the creator and of which Joseph F. Smith is now the iniquitous head.

But in this description of the Mormon hierarchy we must also declare that modern Mormonism stands for licensed libertinism and immorality. Many of these long-bearded 'apostles, by their own confession, are living today in open adultery. These gray-whiskered Mormon criminals before the Senate investigating committee not only unblushingly admitted that they were living with plural wives, but they even were photographed with them and with their illegitimate offspring, born since the famous manifesto whereby the Mormon leaders declared they would only cleave to one wife thereafter.

Now, the rank and file of a church cannot be better than the leaders of a church. If you have a corrupt pulpit in time you will have a corrupt pew. Dean Swift in clerical garb means Dean Swift with a debauched congregation. Water by the law of specific gravity cannot rise higher than its source. Yet it is undeniable that there are many of the rank and file who are thoroughly disgusted with the odious lives and false pretenses of those leaders. To these honest ones, who long for better things, we must extend all sympathy.

Let us go and visit Salt Lake City. We stop and look in the city directory to find where the Mormon leader lives. "My," you say, "Uncle Joseph must move quite often to escape paying rent. Why, here are five different houses under his name." "Yes," I say, "he sleeps in one house, eats breakfast in another house, has supper in another house, spends the evening in another house and sleeps in another house. In each one of these homes he has a different wife. When he walks along the street forty-two different children can stop him and call out, 'Hello, papa!' Uncle Joe must have a great memory to remember the faces of all these children. He must have a deep well of affection to love all of his progeny. He must be a financial genius to support all these homes and yet be a 'poor minister.'" Most of us Protestant ministers have hard work to make financial ends meet and support one wife and three or four babies, but Uncle Joe certainly can do wonders. I have more respect for the stag lording it over his herd or the shaggy four-legged beast leading his cattle over the western prairie than for his human libertine walking around and posing as an apostle of God and talking about love. Yes, he has love, but it is the love of a wholesale libertinism which ought to push its devotee out of all decent society.

While writing this sermon there lies before me a list of the domestic menage of the leaders of the Mormon church. Francis M. Lyman, the president of the twelve apostles, has two wives; John H. Smith, an apostle, two wives; Heber J. Grant, apostle, two wives; John W. Taylor, apostle, five wives; Mariner W. Merrill, seven living wives and forty-six children; Matthias F. Cowley, apostle, three wives; Rudger Clawson, two wives. Now, if these men are living in open sin, what are they doing in secret? And if these church leaders, these apostles, are living in such illicit relationship, what are the rank and file of the Mormon church doing to-day? If the truth about the libertinism of the Mormon church could be fully pictured the walls of Pompeii would be looked upon as a picture gallery of virtue and of modesty in comparison. All decency, all purity, all virtue, should rise up in wrath against the sins of the Sodom and Gomorrah of the Utah plains.

There are two means whereby it is possible to overthrow a good woman. The one is through her heart or by her love. That is not what the Mormon leaders can do. Even Brigham Young, with all his powers of persuasion, could not prove to a sensible woman that he could love equally well and at the same time twenty-six wives besides a score or more of affinities. The second way for the Mormon hierarchy to overthrow a good woman is through her religious beliefs. This is one of the ways in which the Mormon church accomplishes its infamies. The leaders of that church promulgate these two doctrines. First they say:

"A woman who is unwilling to marry and beget children is a woman who will have no part in the glories of the celestial life. Therefore it is the duty of every woman to marry, no matter what may be the desire of her heart. Love or dislike of life has nothing to do with the matter. In the Mormon world a woman must be sealed to a man or else she is doomed to eternal death." The second doctrine is like unto the first: "The highest seat in heaven for the good Mormon is for the Mormon saint who takes unto himself the greatest number of wives and rears up the greatest number of children, for on the great day of ascension God will first call up the husband. Then the husband, in turn, will call up his wives. Then the more wives and the more children the man can produce the greater will be his rewards for eternity." Therefore the Mormon church says: "Woman, marry. Woman, get your husband as many wives as you can, for such is the will of God." By thus appealing to woman's superstition we find that husbands have married sisters and even mothers and daughters and had children by them all. Is it not about time for this horrible teaching to end?

"But," again says some one, "the Government has no right to stop the belief of man and woman. Here we have no union of church and state." No, the Government has no right to try to make a Baptist out of a Methodist or a Presbyterian out of a Catholic, but it certainly has a right to stop any teachings that lead directly to crime or which may be used to overthrow a man's or a woman's morals. The Indian Government certainly had a right to interfere and stop mothers casting their children to the crocodiles in the Ganges. It certainly had a right to stop the widow-burning and the Indian Juggernaut. Our Government certainly has a right to forbid the use of the mails for vile literature and for the selling of lottery tickets, and it certainly has a right to stop the crime of polygamy at its source and to compel all citizens to obey the statute of the land. Utah as a state pledged herself to such obedience, but she violated her solemn pledge. The Government has a right, therefore, to enforce the laws and prevent our land from being overrun with the crime of polygamy and with illegitimate offspring. The superstitious teachings of Mormonism are responsible for these conditions. The degradation of women is its object, by fair means or by foul, by the door of sin or by the narrow gate of blinded superstition.

Representatives of Mormonism should be forever debarred from entering our congressional halls or participating in legislation on the ground that they, as Mormons, owe first allegiance to the Mormon hierarchy. Their oath of allegiance to the hierarchy is in direct antagonism to the spirit and purpose of American citizenship. It binds them hand and foot like slaves. Utah to-day is struggling in the grip of this monstrous evil as Laocoon and his sons were struggling in the grip of the deadly serpent. Like a demon, this evil church is casting its malignant eye on every part of our fair land. Beware, O American, lest its blasting breath may yet touch your own home! Are not the Mormons after our own state as well as Utah? With their infamous teaching are they not after every home, every city? Is not even the White House at Washington the throne of power at which they are casting longing eyes?

I beg and plead with all Christian people to be much on their knees in prayer, that God will cut out the cancer of Mormonism from this nation, as he cut out the cancer of slavery. For, mark you, if Mormonism is not soon eradicated and stamped out, there may come a time when God will demand its obliteration at any sacrifice.

A BOTTLE TRICK.

How to Cut the Inclosed Thread and Not Break the Seal.

A very pretty experiment may be made with a sunglass, an empty bottle and a piece of thread. Let the bottle be of clear glass, not colored. In the lower end of the cork fix a bent pin and to the pin attach a piece of thread not long enough to touch the bottom of the bottle. Tie a shoe button or something of light weight to the thread to make the latter hang straight.

Now, having procured a sunglass, which, you know, is nothing but a lens convex on both sides, and having selected a day when the sun is shining and a place where you may avail yourself of its rays, you are ready for the experiment.

You may if you choose pretend that you are going to perform a little feat of magic. If so, tell the spectators that you intend to cut the thread in the bottle without touching the cork or the bottle either. Then let some one put sealing wax on the cork in such a way that the seal could not be broken without detection.

PARTING THE THREAD.

Having made these preparations, leave the room for a moment and go to a window or a door where the sun is shining. There with your sunglass focus the rays upon the thread in the bottle, and you will soon burn it in two with the heat. Take the bottle back to the spectators and let them guess how you performed the feat. Of course they must not know anything about the sunglass until you are ready to give them an explanation.

This experiment will illustrate the passage of the sun's heat through glass without heating it, for you will find that while the focused rays burn the thread in two they do not heat that part of the bottle through which they pass or any other part.

AN INDIAN LEGEND.

Why Birds Love the Trees and Build Nests In Them.

An Indian story that has been handed down and is still believed by many Indian tribes is one about the transformation of leaves into birds. Long years ago, when the world was young, the Great Spirit went about the earth making it beautiful. Wherever his feet touched the ground lovely trees and flowers sprang up. All summer the trees wore their short green dresses. The leaves were very happy, and they sang their sweet songs to the breeze as it passed them. One day the wind told them the time would come when they would have to fall from the trees and die. This made the leaves feel very bad, but they tried to be bright and do the best they could so as not to make the mother trees unhappy. But at last the time came, and they let go of the twigs and branches and fluttered to the ground. They lay perfectly quiet, not able to move except as the wind would lift them.

The Great Spirit saw them and thought they were so lovely that he did not want to see them die, but live and be beautiful forever, so he gave to each bright leaf a pair of wings and power to fly. Then he called them his "birds." From the red and brown leaves of the oak came the robins, and yellow birds from the yellow willow leaves, and from bright maple leaves he made the red birds; the brown leaves became wrens, sparrows and other brown birds. This is why the birds love the trees and always go to them to build their nests and look for food and shade.—Kansas City Journal.

A Clock Problem.

Mr. X., the puzzle expert of an English magazine, has a clock which takes six seconds to strike 6 o'clock. How long does it take, he asks, to strike 12 o'clock?

If you say, as you probably will, twelve seconds, you will be quite, quite wrong. The actual time taken is thirteen and one-fifteenth seconds.

In striking six there are five equal periods of time between the strokes. This gives one and one-fifth seconds for each period. In striking twelve there are eleven such periods, and eleven times one and one-fifth equals thirteen and one-fifth.

Conundrums.

What parts of speech are shopkeepers most anxious to dispose of? Articles.

What is that which we all eat and drink, though it is sometimes a woman and sometimes a man? A toast.

What word is it which has five letters and if two are removed only one will remain? St-one.

Why is the letter E like death? Because it is the end of life.

Why Zeke Laughs.

Once a little black boy named Zeke Bunn
Laughed at everything under the sun.
Said his playmate, Bob White,
"'Tis a laughable sight
To see any one having such fun."

Said Zeke to Bob White, the white boy,
"I have hardly a book or a toy,
But there's no use to cry,
So I laugh because I Haven't anything else to enjoy."

SALARIED DAUGHTERS.

A Plan That Has Proved Successful In Several Families.

Where there is need of her work in the home, and often help has to be hired to take her place, the daughter should be given a regular salary, approximately the equivalent of what she could earn outside after making allowance for board, room rent and the numberless privileges a girl has in her father's home. The salary should be at least equal to what would have to be paid for the same work if a stranger were called in to do it, and the duties should be as distinctly defined and as promptly and efficiently performed. This is a very different thing from an allowance without definite duties.

We know of several families where this plan has worked successfully. In one instance the daughter, while unmarried, became a capable housekeeper and manager, buying all supplies and relieving both parents of care and annoyance, for which she received a housekeeper's wages at the end of every month. Another, whose mother is an invalid, gets a weekly envelope containing the same amount that would have been paid a nurse. Both these salaried daughters were happy, contented and efficient and each had a feeling of independence and self reliance never to be attained under the allowance system or the usual haphazard appeal to father for money to gratify needs or whims.—Independent.

HARD TO EXPLAIN.

This Mother Expresses What Almost All Mothers Experience.

"One thing I never could explain," sputtered a pleasant faced, patient wife and mother, "one thing I'll never be able to explain to my dying day, is the idea everybody in this house has, from my husband and oldest daughter to the cook and the youngest child, that I know where everything is and can put my hand on it in a second without thinking.

"'Mother, where's my cap?' 'Where's the spider, ma'am, we broil the fish on?' 'Where are those poker chips, mother, I had when Baldwin was over here last?'

"It's the same way with the girls. 'Mother, where's my fancy work?' 'Where's the library book I took out last week?'

"If I've heard that question once I've heard it thousands of times. It begins early in the morning, and it keeps up until we're all in bed. I've often asked them how they expected I could tell where everything is dropped from cellar to attic in a big house that's full of things. I do pick up and put away after them as fast as I can, but you'd imagine, to listen to them, that I had a hundred eyes in my head and as many feet as a centiped and could be everywhere at once. I've talked with a good many mothers, and they've all had my experience."—Providence Journal.

LAUNDRY LINES.

Colored goods should be ironed on the wrong side.

When you wish to iron a garment in a short time sprinkle it with hot water, and in fifteen minutes it is ready to iron.

When washing flannels, get rid of as much dust and dirt as you possibly can by shaking and brushing before plunging into water.

Needlework should be ironed on the wrong side on a piece of flannel, and it should be kept long enough under the iron to thoroughly dry it.

Many people never blue their colored clothes in laundering, but no matter what the color may be it will come out brighter if a little bluing is added to the last rinsing water or to the starch.

After using a bowl of cold water starch let it settle. Then pour off the clear water and dry the starch in the oven at night or on the stove. It will be reduced to a hard cake and can be used over again.

The Woman of Tact.

A woman of tact is one who feels that the story told to hurt your feelings is essentially bad form and inconsiderate of the feelings of others. A woman of tact is the woman who is courteous to old people, who laughs with the young and who makes herself agreeable to all women in all conditions of life. A woman of tact is one who makes her "good morning" a pleasant greeting, her visit a bright spot in the day and her "goodby" a hope that she may come again. A woman of tact is one who does not always gauge people by their clothes or their riches, but who strongly condemns bad manners.

Bake Your Sausage.

Henry Ward Beecher once spoke of the frying pan as "the modern image that fell from heaven that all men are in duty bound to worship."

At the risk of dethroning this idol we strongly recommend that sausage be baked in the oven and not fried in the pan. Our selected casings are exceedingly delicate and burst in frying, and the sausages do not present a nice appearance; besides, they are not as well cooked and the flavor is not as good when the sausages are fried. If you want perfect sausages, bake them in the oven.

A Simple Library Paste.

Having noticed many recipes for making "library starch" for scrapbooks, etc., I want to give your readers a very simple one, and the very best I have ever heard of. I have several very valuable scrapbooks, smooth, durable and artistic in appearance, and have had much experience with different kinds of paste. Use common laundry starch, prepared by the same process as for laundry use, only very thick. It will keep indefinitely and grows better with age.—Exchange.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

Wash oilcloths and linoleums with warm water and Sunlight Soap, rinse clean and wipe dry. The colors will be preserved and the surface unharmed.

Common soaps fade the colors and injure the surface. Sunlight Soap cleans, freshens and preserves, oilcloths and linoleums.

Sunlight Soap washes clothes white without injury to the most delicate fabrics, or to the hands, for it contains nothing that can injure either clothes or hands.

Sunlight Soap is better than other soaps, but is best when used in the Sunlight way (follow directions).

The Diplomatic Druggist.

A certain druggist who does not like to answer night calls, especially as he has found by experience that he offends people who call him up at night by his displeased abrupt manner, has devised a scheme by which he does not have to get up and at the same time does not lose customers. In his own words he works it this way:

"I disconnect my bell so that it cannot ring. After waiting some time the person who wants to get in gives it up as a bad job and goes down the street to the next store. This man opens for him, but is naturally very much displeased, and, as I usually do, he shows that he is disgruntled and offends the customer. Early the next morning the customer calls at my store to inform me that my bell is out of order and tells me what a low opinion he has of the other druggist, whom he considers a very impolite man."

Posthumous Libel.

A correspondent of the London Times raises the point that, while a libel upon a dead man may form the subject of a criminal prosecution, yet there is no redress whatever for a libel by the dead upon the living. Thus a testator may so phrase his will as to libel a legatee and injure him to an extent far in excess of his legacy. The writer cites as an illustration the following bequest from an ardent teetotaler to a moderate drinker: "I give and bequeath to A. B. the sum of £50 upon condition that she signs the pledge." Such a condition inserted in a will, he believes, might do the lady legatee an amount of damage for which £50 would be but poor compensation, and he submits that in cases of posthumous libel the executors should be answerable in damages to the extent of the testator's estate.

The Phonograph in the Moon.

Cyrano de Bergerac in his "Histoire Comique des Etats et Empires de la Lune," whose first edition is dated as early as 1650, relates that the genius that guided him to our satellite gave him for his entertainment some of the books of the country. These books are inclosed in boxes. "On opening the box I found inside a concern of metal, something like one of our watches, full of curious little springs and minute machinery. It was really a book, but a wonderful book that has no leaves or letters, a book for the understanding of which the eyes are of no use—only the ears are necessary. When any one wishes to read he winds up the machine, with its great number of nerves of all kinds, and turns the pointer to the chapter he wishes to hear, when there comes out, as if from the mouth of a man or of an instrument of music, the distinct and various sounds which serve the great Lunarians as the expression of language."

PROVED IN MOUNT FOREST.

Every doctor in this town tried his best to relieve Mrs. J. Withom, of asthma; none succeeded. "For years," she states, "I was a dreadful sufferer; nothing gave relief. At times I found it necessary to have all the doors and windows open to get my breath. When in despair I heard of Catarrhozone. I used it and now am perfectly cured." This proves beyond doubt that any case of asthma is curable with Catarrhozone. No remedy so pleasant, none so absolutely certain to thoroughly cure; try Catarrhozone yourself; it's guaranteed.

VOTING AT LARGE

CITY CLERK MIKEL PRAISES THE SYSTEM IN THE MUNICIPAL JOURNAL.

In the Canadian Municipal Journal, of Montreal, W. C. Mikel, City Solicitor of this city, contributes an interesting article upon the experience of Belleville in changing from the ward system of voting in municipal contests to a general vote for municipal councillors. After reviewing the ward system and noting its weak points Mr. Mikel thus writes of Belleville's experience:

"The city of Belleville adopted the general vote system in 1899. Since then, the Council has taken over the management of the Waterworks; purchased, repaired and improved the Gas Works; acquired a Water Power; built about seven miles of granolithic walks; enlarged one park and opened another; increased the grant to the Hospital; extended the gas mains about one mile, and the water mains about half a mile; put in cement piers in a ferry slip; reduced the city's floating debt about $50,000; added largely to the sinking fund; purchased an island of fourteen acres in the Bay of Quinte valuable as a gravel-bed filters for the public water supply, and for a park; and completed a large amount of other public works of a less important character, and the general taxes in the community this year are less than in 1899. The last Government report shows the average rate of taxation of the cities of the Province to be $12.29 per head, while in Belleville it is only $9.65.

"The citizens' confidence in the future of the community has greatly increased and this confidence is spreading throughout the country; manufacturers are coming to the city, railroads are seeking admission, real estate is increasing in value.

"It is needless to say there is no desire in Belleville to return to the Ward System, and it is also a fact that the Councils elected by general vote have looked after the needs of all parts of the community in a fair and equitable manner."

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

PECK'S BAD BOY.

The above musical farce-comedy is billed to appear at the opera house next Friday evening. During the past year this company has appeared in all the principal cities from St. John, N.B., to Indian Territory, and is to play return engagements at each place this season. The comedy quartette is one of the special features of the show, and is said to be worth alone the price of admission. The manager of the company announces his willingness to refund to all not satisfied the amount they paid for admission. The piece is described as a musical farce-comedy, and is from the pen of Gerege Washington Peck, who was at the time he wrote it editor of Peck's Sun, Milwaukee.

SIR GILBERT PARKER WINS.

RE-ELECTED FOR GRAVESEND BY A MAJORITY OF 1689.

Bellevillians will be glad to hear that our gifted former townsman, Sir Gilbert Parker, has been again returned for his old constituency of Gravesend, by the handsome majority of 1689. Sir Gilbert Parker entered British politics in 1900 as Unionist member for Gravesend, with a majority of 738, and is now re-elected by 1,689 as a supporter of Mr. Chamberlain. Sir Gilbert was born in Addington county, this Province, 46 years ago, and at one time studied theology in Trinity University, Toronto. For some years he lived in this city and Trenton, having been a lay reader in Belleville. He removed to Australia in 1883, where he soon turned from journalist to playright. Removing to England, he entered upon a literary career, which has been marked by unusual success, beginning with the publication of "Pierre and His People" in 1892, and continuing with a dozen others, touching the life of rural Quebec, the Canadian Northwest, and other countries. Sir Gilbert frequently visits his native land, and was present at the inauguration ceremonies at Edmonton and Regina last autumn. The banquet to him in this city a few years ago will be well remembered.

Latest Returns of British Elections.

THINGS LOOK SOMEWHAT BRIGHTER FOR UNIONISTS THAN THEY DID ON SATURDAY.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

London, Jan. 15. — The announcement this afternoon of the re-election of Sir George Doughty, Unionist, for Great Grimsby, with a majority of 2,300, an increase of 350 over the result of the last contest in 1898, proved a welcome surprise to the Unionists, who were somewhat panicky after Saturday's landslide.

A number of unopposed returns were made this morning, the most notable being Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, in Stirling district; Timothy M. Healey, Irish Nationalist, North Louth, and Joseph Devlin, Irish Nationalist, North Kilkenny.

Including to-day's returns the result of the elections is as follows: Liberals 45; Unionists 16; Irish Nationalists 12; Labor 7.

The independent Labor party has thus already secured more seats than it had in the previous House of Commons.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

The Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached to a large congregation last evening, telling in a graphic way the story of Cornelius the Centurion, and relating how he had been instrumental, by means of that story, in bringing about the conversion of a semi-infidel and his entire family. The sermon contained a well-thought-out message for people who claim that good living is sufficient without submission to the ordinances of the church. Cornelius was a just man and God saw it, and in order to bring about the Centurion's salvation God sent Peter to him, with the Divine message, as He sends the Divine message to all men to-day in all civilized countries. Would that all men would accept it as freely and unreservedly as Cornelius did. During the offertory the choir sang an anthem, "Beautiful Land," the solo being very nicely taken by Miss Pearl Thompson.

Holloway Street.

"The Christian's Secret" was the subject of the pastor's discourse last evening, and the text was from the 25th Psalm and 14th verse:

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them His covenant."

Whilst the offertory was being taken Mr. M. O. Gordon sang a solo, "Jesus My Shepherd Is."

Christ Church.

The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, officiated at both services yesterday. In the evening the subject of his discourse was "St. Andrew a Missionary." The text was from St. John, 1st chapter, 40th and 41st verses.

John Street.

Rev. A. H. Drumm preached at both services. In the evening the words of his text were:

"It is appointed unto man to die, and after that the judgment."

During the service Mr. Cameron sang a solo entitled, "The Evening Prayer," from Elijah, and Miss Gowsell sang "The Lord is Mindful of His Own."

Bridge Street.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. Prof. Doxsee occupied the pulpit in the morning, and in the evening Rev. Bruce Hunter. The latter preached a very acceptable sermon from the text 1st Peter, 4th chapter and 10th verse:

"As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God."

Two anthems entitled, "Rock of Ages" and "Great and Marvellous," were rendered by the choir, solos being taken by Miss Vermilyea and Mr. W. A. A. Chown.

NARROW ESCAPE FOR MR. W. H. VANTASSEL.

LIVELY RUNAWAY ON FRONT ST. THIS AFTERNOON.

A lively runaway occurred on Front street shortly before 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The runaway horse, attached to a buggy, belonged to Mr. J. McDonald, of Point Ann, and in its wild run collided with a rig driven by Mr. W. H. Vantassel, who was driving along the street.

Fortunately Mr. Vantassel escaped injury, although his buggy was badly wrecked.

The force of the collision caused both horses to fall.

Mr. McDonald's horse sustained some injuries.

The animal ran out of the yard in rear of the Queen's Hotel.

The York County Loan

JOSEPH PHILLIPS DEMANDS DETAILS OF THE CHARGES AGAINST HIM.

Toronto, Jan. 13.—Mr. J. E. Jones, on behalf of his client, Joseph Phillips, the president of the York Loan Co., will demand from Crown Attorney Curry full particulars of the charges made against Mr. Phillips.

"So far we are in the dark as to what the Crown alleges, and we want these particulars before we are asked to plead or elect," said Mr. Jones to The Star this morning.

Mr. Jones is framing his demand to-day, and it will be served on the Crown Attorney either to-day or on Monday. Mr. Curry will be asked to enlighten the defence as to the nature of the charge, what means were employed in the alleged defrauding of the Government, whether it was in the reports to the shareholders, or whether it is merely a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. Phillips also wants to know the names of the persons he is alleged to have defrauded, and the amounts in each case. In addition to this comes the point of the associate companies concerned, and whether the City Realty Company and the Southern Light and Power Company are involved in the charges.

"We want to tie them down to some definite charges," said Mr. Jones. "The accusation is now too broad and general for us to either plead or elect."

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

No matter what the weather is, there will be good ice for the match to-morrow between the Bankers and Hardware Co. teams. Both are making a strong bid for the Corby cup, and the game will be a stubborn one.

The local juniors are going to Port Hope to-night with blood in their eyes, and will give the husky Ports a run for their money. The home team is in fine condition.

The Port Hope intermediates claim they should have won the match at Peterboro, and say that two of the Petes' goals were scored on off-side passes. The teams will play a double schedule, and the Port Hopes have not yet given up hopes of winning the district.

Efforts were made to have the date changed for the game between Picton and Belleville O.H.A. juniors next Friday night, but Manager Boulter, of Picton would not consent, consequently the match will take place as per schedule. The Picton boys are fast and light, and the exhibition put up by them and the local juniors should furnish plenty of excitement.

"Reddy" McMillan, who was out of the game with a broken collar-bone, has recovered and is again chasing the puck in the Pro. league.

Twenty-one Canadian players are figuring on New York hockey teams. It's taking the Yankees a long time to learn the game.

On Tuesday at the Clairmont Rink, New York, the Crescents of New York defeated the N.Y.H.C. by a score of 2-1. "Herbie" O'Flynn, formerly of Madoc, figured at cover point for the losers.

Arthur Sixsmith, captain and manager of the Pittsburg team, will be unable to play in the games with the Canadian Soo at the Smoky City. Sixsmith states that he has played his last game of hockey. He goes home from the copper country with a broken rib, a badly smashed toe, and almost scalped.

In the senior O.H.A. series on Saturday night, Berlin beat St. Georges by 8 to 5.

Ottawas beat Wanderers by 8 to 4 on Saturday night. The Stanley Cuppers are apparently as good as ever.

Fifty O.H.A. games are scheduled for this week, and will be played—if the weather man is good.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. MISTAKEN IN AGREEMENT.

Guelph Printers Strike Because They Thought 8 1-2 Hours Work Saturday Violated Their Agreement.

Guelph, Jan. 15.—A strike over a very trifling matter occurred amongst the printers of The Herald and The Mercury on Saturday afternoon. Last October a new agreement was entered into between the bosses and men, in which practically all the demands of the latter were granted. An eight-hour day was to go into effect at the first of the year, providing no abatement of the eight-hour day was entered into elsewhere in Canada (in event of which a similar modification should be conceded here), and in April a further increase in pay was to be made, in a number of places in Ontario, the same conditions applied in Guelph.

The men thought, however, that they were entitled to an eight-hour day on Saturday, and without referring the matter to the proper authorities for consideration went out on strike for the purpose, if possible, of gaining their desired end. W. S. Dingman, Stratford, representing the smaller city daily publishers' association, has had correspondence with President Lynch of the International Typographical Union, in which the latter supports the local union. The notices as to the hours of labor were posted up in the offices on Saturday afternoon, and the men quit work on the instructions of the president of the Guelph Union.

The bosses say that no demand had been made for the eight-hour day on Saturday, and that the agreement provides that in event of any differences the question of dispute should be referred to arbitration, and hence the action of the men was unwarranted.

The Hamilton Printers.

Hamilton, Jan 15.—The printers and newspaper proprietors will meet this morning at 8 o'clock, and it will be settled then whether there is to be a strike or not. The job printers have been granted an increase from $12.50 to $14 a week, and the bosses are willing to give the "ad" men the same, but the employers have refused to give the machine operators an increase. The machine operators get $12.50 as the minimum, and want another dollar a week. The employers are firm in their refusal.

The Printers' Strike at New York.

New York, Jan. 15.—The New York Typothetae reported Saturday: That the end of the second week of the printers' strike finds the members of the Typothetae better equipped to carry on their business than at any time since the men walked out.

At the office of Typographical Union No. 6 it was stated that the situation remained unchanged.

Mayer After the McCurdys.

New York, Jan. 15.—It was reported Saturday that Attorney General Mayer will bring suit against Richard A. McCurdy, former president of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., to recover part of the moneys paid to him as salary. It is authoritatively said that the increase which Mr. McCurdy got a few years ago from $100,000 to $150,000 a year was not legally authorized. It was also reported that the Attorney-General would probably bring an action against his son, Robert McCurdy, and his son-in-law, Lewis E. Thebaud, to recover at least in part commissions that were paid to them.

Funeral of Dr. Harper.

Chicago, Jan. 15.—The body of William Rainey Harper, late president of the University of Chicago, was placed yesterday in a vault of Oakgood Cemetery. The final resting place, however, will be on the university campus, where it is planned to build a memorial chapel and crypt. The floral tributes were numerous and included wreaths from President Roosevelt, Emperor William of Germany and many other distinguished persons.

FOUR PERISH IN FIRE

Half a Household Die In Flames at Portage la Prairie.

H. A. Brazil's Residence Destroyed, With Three Children and an Aged Aunt of His Wife's—He Succeeded In Saving His Wife and Three Children From the Flames—Man Burned to Death In New York.

Portage la Prairie, Jan. 15.—A holocaust occurred early yesterday morning, about four miles east of town, when the home of H. A. Brazil was destroyed by fire and three of his family, besides an aged aunt of his wife's, were burned to death.

The household consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Brazil, six children and an aunt of Mrs. Brazil's, Catherine Quinn.

All were sleeping in the second-storey except Brazil, who was asleep downstairs.

About 4 o'clock he was awakened by one of the children yelling "Fire!" He jumped out of bed, but as he could not see any fire in the house he rushed through the shed to the stable. When he tried to re-enter the house he was driven back by a cloud of flame and smoke.

He succeeded in saving his wife and three children, but the others perished.

It is not known what started the fire.

Flames Baffle Firemen.

New York, Jan. 15.—As the firemen were about to rescue him, J. A. Hart, an insurance agent living on the top floor of the four-storey apartment house at 68 West 96th street, which was destroyed by fire early yesterday, was overwhelmed by the flames and burned to death.

Run Attired in Night Clothes.

Indian Head, Sask., Jan. 15.—The general store of Crawford & Co., the oldest and finest in town, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss will reach a total of nearly $25,000, about half of which is covered by insurance. Several tenants who had apartments in the block had narrow escapes and saved nothing of personal effects but what they were able to don hurriedly.

Two Babes Burn.

Traverse City, Mich., Jan. 15.—While Mrs. Geo. Bedder of Thompsonville was busy in the barn at her home Saturday, the house in which she had left her two young babies alone caught fire, and both of them lost their lives.

Apron Caught on Fire.

Kingston, Jan. 15.—Miss Cora McNally, daughter of Michael McNally, North Burgess, was badly burned while working around the stove. In lifting a pot from the stove she used her apron, which caught fire, and the young lady's clothing was enveloped in flames. Alone at the time she ran out doors, and her mother hearing her cries, caught her and rolled her in the snow. She was badly burned.

Every Bone Broken.

Port Arthur, Jan. 15.—A German working for the Pigeon River Lumber Co., in the camps, met with a horrible death on Saturday. He was rolling logs on a skidway, when the logs started down an incline without warning. He was crushed into a jelly, and every bone in his body broken.

Two Went Through the Ice.

Laconia, N. H., Jan. 15.—Hand in hand, Edward La Planta, 15 years of age, and Florence Barlow, 14 years, skated into a hole in Lake Winniesquam Saturday and were drowned before the eyes of several companions.

Two Lives Lost In Storm.

New York, Jan. 15.—A tragedy of Saturday's storm, in which two lives were lost just outside New York harbor, was reported yesterday by the tugboat Eugene or Moran. The Moran was towing two scows out to sea, when outside Sandy Hook bar the hawser parted and the scows went adrift. One of the scows immediately capsized, and one of her crew was drowned. When the Moran attempted to pass a line to the other barge, a heavy sea swept a man from the deck of the scow. He also was drowned.

Sixty Taken From Wreck.

Atlantic Cnt, N.J., Jan. 15.—After spending 24 hours in terrible anxiety lest they be wrecked and swept into the sea, the passengers and crew, to in all, of the Clyde Line steamer Cherokee, bound from San Domingo for New York, which went aground on the Brigantine shoals Friday were rescued late yesterday afternoon and landed at the inlet here.

Takes Overdose of Poison.

Toronto, Jan. 15.—As the result of simply changing overcoats with a friend, Eddie Wall of 199 Seaton street is lying in the General Hospital in a critical condition from poisoning. On Saturday night Wall and a friend, W. Reeves of 295 Sherbourne street, changed overcoats for no especial reason. Wall's coat contained a bottle of whiskey. In the pocket of his friend's coat Wall also found a bottle with some sort of poison, made up of banana oil and acid. Forgetting that he did not have his own coat, he took a drink and shortly after went into violent convulsions. He was taken to the General Hospital, where he is now lying in a very low condition.

Stabbed Eleven Times.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 15.—The Corean War Minister, who is staying at the Hotel De France here, had a narrow escape from assassination Saturday at the hands of a young Corean, said to be the Minister's interpreter. The would-be assassin stabbed the Minister eleven times with a knife.

Tariff War is Certain.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—Secretary Root and Secretary Shaw frankly admit that they have been beaten in their efforts to avert a tariff war with Germany, and that unless Congress steps into the breach the country can only learn by dire experience the opportunity which it has missed.

At 65, Cuts His Throat.

Napanee, Jan. 15.—Charles Wallar, aged 65, residing at Mink's Bridge, three miles from here, committed suicide Saturday night by cutting his throat. Deceased leaves a widow and several children. He has been demented of late.

WITTE WARNS THE DOUMA.

Any Tampering With Privileges Granted Means Breaking Up.

London, Jan. 15.—Although the Russian situation has apparently greatly improved, the latest news from there is disquieting. There are many indications that the Government has decided on a full reactionary program with the virtual abrogation of the concessions made in the Czar's douma proclamation. Such a policy can, of course, result only in a renewal of the struggle on a scale of violence as yet unapproached.

A St. Petersburg correspondent, telegraphing Saturday evening, says the Conservative newspaper Slovo, which has close relations with the Emperor's brother-in-law, the Grand Duke Alexander Michaelovitch, announces that at the last conference of high personages of the empire at Tsarskoe-Selo, which was presided over by the Czar, Count Witte declared for the maintenance of the autocracy in full force. If the douma sought to transform itself into a constituent assembly, he said, it would cease to be a national representation convoked by the Czar and become merely a revolutionary meeting, which would be dispersed.

Count Witte declared that he is convinced that the Manchurian army will loyally enforce the restoration of order. The Emperor is reported as having been impressed by Count Witte's confident report.

The independent community, however, especially the financial section, regards the immediate future without confidence.

STRANDED ON RIVER ISLAND.

But Runaway Couple From Gananoque Don't Wait For Rescue.

Kingston, Jan. 15.—To-day M. Parland telephoned from Gananoque stating that the soldier and the young woman who disappeared from the International Hotel there on Sunday night had just been discovered on Leak Island, three miles from Gananoque. They had been exposed ever since on that uninhabited island.

Some people who were going to Gananoque saw the man, who made signs for help. It seems that the man and woman started out in a boat owned by Mr. Munro. The ice was forming, and they could not get across the river, but managed to reach the island.

A message at 3.30 said: "A relief party went to Leak Island, but the birds had flown to Grindstone Island." A fire was smoldering, and the party will likely be sent on by Chief Ryan.

Lake Tie-Up Predicted.

Sault Ste. Marie, Jan. 15.—Captain Thorn, organizer for the Lake Pilots' Protective Association, which is affiliated with the Longshoremen's Association, says that every boat belonging to the Lake Carriers' Association will be tied up next summer unless the latter association recedes from the stand it took at its Detroit meeting this week not to engage mates belonging to any labor association. The longshoremen will assist the pilots by refusing to handle freight for any Carriers' Association boat.

Nogi at Tokio.

Tokio, Jan. 15.—Gen. Nogi, who arrived here yesterday from Manchuria, was given a popular reception similar in enthusiasm to that accorded to Admiral Togo.

WHAT DO YOU CARE?
YOU'VE GOT YOUR HEALTH

GREAT NATURES DO NOT DESPAIR AT DISAPPOINTMENT—THEY LOOK FOR SOMETHING ELSE TO DO.

The broad-gauged man of to-day does not get blue just because things don't always come his way unless there is something the matter with him. If he "fails down" on one proposition he immediately starts to look up another. He always looks forward and keeps on hustling. A man with his health and faculties has plenty of opportunities, and the man who gives up or even feels like it has either a small nature or some physical weakness.

Dyspepsia certainly puts the best of man out of condition for work of any kind. You cannot blame the dyspeptic for getting blue. The very nature of his disease is most depressing and calculated to deprive him of ambition, energy and hope. There is hope for him, however, certain and sure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are recognized throughout the length and breadth of the land as the one cure that's safe and sure. Their unbounded popularity—resulting from the thousands and thousands of cures they have effected, prove beyond the shadow of a doubt their greatness as a cure. Wherein lies their greatness? In the very fact that they are Nature's own simple remedy. They do the exact work in exactly the same way that the digestive fluids of the stomach do, because they are composed of exactly the same elements and possess the same properties. They relieve the weak and worn-out stomach of its burden of digestion and permit it without let or hindrance, to rest and grow sound and well. The stomach will get well quick enough in its own natural way if it is let alone. That is what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do. They not only let it alone themselves, but make the food taken into the stomach do the same.

You can satisfy yourself of the truth of this statement by putting the food you would eat into a glass jar with sufficient water and one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The process of digestion will be taken up and carried out just as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids would do it. Their action is natural and they cause no disturbance in the digestive organs. In fact, you forget you have a stomach when they begin to do their work, so mild and natural is the operation. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c a box.

MR. BALFOUR DEFEATED

Patrick O'Brien, Kilkenny.
John Edward Redmond, Waterford.
Ald. Michael Joyce, Limerick.

How They Stand Now.

By A. P. A.—Although but sixty seats are now filled out of 670 required for the new Parliament which meets at Westminster Feb. 15, the composition of the House as shown by the results declared up to midnight is as follows: Liberals, 39; Unionists, 14; Laborites, 6; Nationalists, 7. This includes twenty-four candidates who were unopposed and the two candidates elected at Ipswich Friday.

The returns for Grimsby which were polled to-day will not be declared before Monday, and the elections at Cambridge University, which commenced to-day, will continue until next Thursday.

Balfour Admits Gravity of Defeat.

Mr. Balfour Saturday night addressed a gathering at the Conservative Club. He acknowledged the gravity of the disaster, but predicted short life for the Liberal Government. He urged the Unionists to continue to work for the party and the future reversal of Saturday's results.

Mr. Thomas Gardner Horridge, who defeated Mr. Balfour in the election for the Parliamentary representation of the eastern division of Manchester, was called to the Bar in the Middle Temple in 1884 and was created a King's Counsel in 1901. He is the son of John Horridge, of Bolton, and has long identified himself with the Liberal policy in England.

To-day's Voting.

Seventy-three constituencies will vote to-day, including twenty in London, and all those in Leeds and the other important centres in which the seats of members and former members of the Cabinet, and of a number of prominent men of both parties are involved.

Hamar Greenwood.

Hamar Greenwood, who heads the poll at York, and so effects a Liberal gain, is a native of Whitby, who went to Toronto University, and afterwards taught school outside the city. He went to England to "see the country," became a temperance speaker, then a Liberal orator, and two years ago Liberal candidate in rather a remarkable way. Headquarters offered Sir Henry Cotton, an old Indian official, worthy but prosy, to the York Liberals. Sir Henry went to York to be seen and heard. Greenwood was sent with him, to enliven the meeting. It was a case of love at first sight—for Greenwood.

Mr. Greenwood is a brother of Mr. W. H. Greenwood, managing editor of the London (Ont.) Free Press.

EARL EATS OFF TIN.

Governor-General Proposes J. R. Booth's Health in Panniken of Tea.

Ottawa, Jan. 15.—The finale of the Canadian forestry convention, which took the form of a trip to J. R. Booth's limits on the Madawaska was a delightfully pleasant experience.

Leaving Ottawa Friday night on a palatial Grand Trunk train with Intercolonial dining car attached, the run to the limits was made in the night. The pleasure of the trip was enhanced by the presence of Lord and Lady Grey and Miss Sybil Grey.

On arrival at the limits, shantying was seen in all its phases, and a genuine shanty fare enjoyed, there being no frills, vice-royalty eating off tin plates with the rest. The pannikens were filled with tea, and his excellency proposed the health of J. R. Booth, which was drunk with enthusiasm. Mr. Booth, in reply, was reminiscent, and told of buying the immense limit 51 years ago for $45,000. He had not a dollar, but the Bank of British North America financed him, and since then he has cut from one to one hundred and fifty thousand logs every year since.

R. L. Borden and others also spoke. On the way home a meeting was held on the train, at which votes of thanks were tendered the Grand Trunk and Mr. Booth.

RUPTURE IS COMPLETE.

Relations Are Formally Severed Between France and Venezuela.

Caracas, Jan. 11.—(Via Port of Spain, Trinidad, Jan. 15.)—The Venezuelan Government, having continued to abstain from renewing relations with France, through M. Taigny, the French charge d'affaires, Mr. Russell, the American Minister yesterday (Wednesday) afternoon, delivered a note to Venezuela on behalf of France severing relations between the two countries.

The archives and interests of France remain in the hands of Mr. Russell.

M. Taigny has been recalled.

Communication by way of the French Cable Co.'s line is prohibited, and despatches must be sent by way of the Island of Trinidad.

Roundabout Cable Communication.

New York, Jan. 15.—The Commercial Cable Co., announced yesterday that it had been advised by the Venezuelan Government that telegraphic communication with Venezuela is open by way of Trinidad and Amacura. Despatches are forwarded between those points daily.

Pilots to Honor Him.

Quebec, Jan. 15.—The Quebec Corporation of Pilots will assist at a solemn mass for the dead to be celebrated in the St. Roch's Church on the 16th inst., in memory of the late Hon. Raymond Prefontaine.

Encouraging.

He (just accepted)—You say you were never engaged before? She—Yes. He—How is that? I thought all women always had three or four engagements. She (guilelessly)—Well, I presume I shall too. You see, this is the first chance I have had.

Satisfaction.

"Do they, indeed? I was beginning to feel that I had failed to make any impression whatever."

'Tis An Awful Avalanche.

Liberals and Laborites Continue Sweep of Britain.

Take 40 More Seats From the Unionists on Monday—Tory London Has Followed the Example of the Country—Lord Hugh Cecil Among the Fallen—Only One Unionist Gain—Big Vote Polled

London, Jan. 16—(C. A. P.)—With but two days' polling over it now seems certain the Bannerman Government will be sustained by one of the largest majorities in history. Yesterday's returns duplicate, and even surpass, the tremendous Liberal and free trade sweep of Saturday, taking forty seats from the Unionist column and giving twenty-nine to the Liberals and eleven to Labor. Against this the Government lost but one seat. The net gains, therefore, to date, total sixty-one, equivalent on a division to a majority of 122. Thus the nominal majority of seventy, with which the Unionists went to the country has been wiped out, and in addition the Government has fifty-two towards the eighty-two admittedly needed to be independent of the Irish party, while less than a quarter of the whole seats are yet filled.

Former Ministers Fall.

Among the fallen are two former Ministers, Walter Long, who was defeated by 2,692 at Bristol; while Gerald Balfour, like his brother, went down at Leeds by 1,069. Arnold Foster, survives at Croyden, but with a greatly decreased majority.

On the other hand the new Ministers are being strikingly successful. Augustine Birrell carried the former Tory seat of North Bristol by 2,942, while Herbert Gladstone and Jas. Bryce increased their majorities by over 4,000.

Big Vote Polled.

An exceptionally large vote was polled, and the Liberal majorities are abnormally large, in especial contrast to the vote of 1900, when the Unionist majorities over the war issue were likewise exceptional. The alliance between Liberalism and Labor was again effective.

Of the eleven Labor members returned, none were opposed by Liberals, but a number who opposed Liberals were defeated.

London, historically almost as Tory as Toronto, returning only eight Liberals out of sixty-one members in 1900, yesterday returned but six Conservatives in twenty-two seats. A significant feature of the contest yesterday was the fate of the Unionist free traders. Lord Hugh Cecil, son of the late Lord Salisbury, and regarded as the most brilliant member of the Cecil family, was overwhelmed at Greenwich. He was openly attacked by Mr. Chamberlain, and was opposed by a tariff reformer. He secured 2,356 while the Chamberlain candidate secured 3,565. The split gave the Liberal an easy win.

Bowles Defeated.

Thomas Gibson Bowles, whose personal attack on Chamberlain was the feature of the campaign, was second in King's Lynn, but secured 1,154 votes, as compared with 772 for the tariff reformer, A. K. Rollitt, who ran on the same ticket, got 1,991. At Islington the tariff reformer, Hunt, got 870, and Bowles' son was elected as a free trade Conservative also, Lord Hugh Cecil's brother, Robert, not being opposed by the tariff reformers. Goschen and Seeley, free trade Unionists, were defeated at Bolton and Lincoln.

One Unionist Triumph.

The announcement yesterday afternoon of the re-election or Sir George Doughty, Unionist, for Great Grimsby, with a majority of 2,300, an increase of 550 over the result of the last contest, in 1898, proved a welcome "pick-me-up" to the Unionists, who were somewhat panicky after Saturday's landslide.

Standing of the Parties.

The parties now stand:

Liberals	96
Unionist	26
U. Free Traders	3
Laborites	16
Nationalists	18

Death to Protection.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman at Glasgow interpreted the returns as death to protection all the time. He promised that the Government would seek to relieve the unsatisfactory condition of the people in other ways, by reforming the social, not the fiscal system.

Balfour's Worries.

The tide is running so swiftly against the Unionists that an unexpected difficulty is being experienced in finding a safe seat for ex-Premier Balfour. Some of those whom it was expected would resign their seats to Mr. Balfour refuse point blank to do so, while in other cases it is seen that the issue is so doubtful there will be the risk of subjecting the former Premier to a second defeat. Nothing, therefore, has as yet been decided.

Mr. Balfour himself seems to be giving way to irritation. In a speech at Nottingham last night, in which he criticized the new Government in a biting manner, he said: "The language used by one member of the Cabinet would do credit to a bargee. It rather belonged to a 'slanging' match between rowdies, quarrelling over their cups, than to a Minister with great responsibility, and in the case of one of whom I am thinking, of great abilities."

PHILLIPS AGAINST THE CITY.

The Law's Uncertainties—Judges Differ.

Honors would appear to be "easy" in the now celebrated Lot Suit, or rather, is not the City the loser, though it has won the last trial? What will be the ultimate result of another appeal to the Court of Appeals, now threatened, is problematical.

Let us review this strangely intricate case, and what do we find? That four judges have decided in favor of Phillips, viz., Judge Anglin, who granted the injunction; Chancellor Boyd, Mr. Justice McMahon, who sat in the Divisional Court, and Mr. Justice Magee, before whom the second trial was held.

On the other hand, four judges have decided in favor of the City, viz., Judge Street, Judge Meredith, Judge Falconbridge and Judge Britten.

Judge Street, who presided at the first trial, and dismissed the action brought by Phillips, was the Judge who delivered the last judgment of the Divisional Court, also against Phillips. To the lay mind, it appears incongruous that a Judge should sit in review on a case in which he had already expressed an opinion and given judgment. In the last case, his brother judges, Messrs. Falconbridge and Britton, simply concurred, giving no judgment in writing.

Now for another fight in the Court of Appeals, chances being equal, four judges for one side and four judges on the other.

Costs, what about them? The result as to costs appears equally strange. Mr. Caldwell, who was made a party to this suit, he being the first purchaser of the lots, was lucky. He escapes scot-free, as the judgment stands. As we understand it, his costs, whatever they may be, are to be paid out of the city treasury, and properly so, for the tangle in the transaction was not of his making, but of the City aldermen, who, to say the least of it, pursued an extraordinary course in the whole affair. The costs, which the City has to pay, go to City Solicitor Mikel, who as we understand it, incurs no expenditure, other than expenses in attending Court. He being the salaried Solicitor of the city, why should not whatever costs were incurred, presumably by the city, be paid to the city? That is what is puzzling the taxpayers.

Verily, law is an uncertain quantity, and plays strange antics with suitors. It appears extraordinary that the wording of an Act of Parliament cannot be made plain enough to be understood and interpreted alike by any two Judges.

Dan O'Connell once said no Act of Parliament was ever passed that a coach and four could not be driven through. How much more uncertain is the result of a suit of the character in question, where equity is considered. In all such cases, judges may honestly differ. Here we have a case in which four judges decide one way, and four another. What the next decision may be when the case goes to a higher court, we will let the reader know when judgment is delivered.

Moral: Never go to law!

Under the circumstances, with judgments both ways, should not litigation be ended, once and for all, by a mutual compromise of some kind? Let's, in the interest of all parties, have an end to it. No matter which ultimately wins, the taxpayers will have to suffer to a greater or less extent.

The Tax Collector's notice that poll taxes must hereafter be paid to him, under penalty of warrants being issued, marks, if carried out, the climax of a peculiar state of affairs in this city. The Intelligencer was, sometime ago, informed by a city official that there were, in this city, about 300 men who were legally compelled to pay a poll tax of $1 per head. This tax, we were informed, had never been collected, the reason given being that, in the sending of notices, etc., through the post office, the tax collectors would be compelled to pay more in postage than the one per cent. they received on their collections would amount to. Consequently, as no poll taxer payer (or non-payer) felt called upon to hunt up the tax collector and hand him the dollar, the law in regard to the matter became a dead letter. It would appear that Ald. Marsh, the new chairman of the Executive, proposes to have the poll tax collected. If he succeeds, it will mark, as we said before, the end of a peculiar state of affairs, which was pointed out in these columns before, but never, up to the present, acted upon by any member of the Council.

Isn't it just awful to think how some horrid men poke fun at the little foibles of the ladies. Listen to the following, written by a Western Ontario editor: How glorious is the human form divine! How fearfully and wonderfully made, especially women's! Recently I had occasion to visit Madam's artistic shop in a certain city. Whilst waiting for the proprietor I heard a conversation like this, between a saleslady and a customer: "Hips?" queried the girl; "well I guess so. You've got to have them with tight-fitting skirts and there ain't a lady in a dozen who doesn't. Gracious! You just see the way I sell them. Here they are, all sizes, looking like great pin cushions. You wouldn't like to wear them? I should think not, but there is a lot a lady will do to look well. Now, you wouldn't believe it, but all last summer in that sweltering hot weather I was selling these hip pads, yes, and the ladies have been putting them on and wearing them. Hot? I don't think. But what are you going to do when you look like a bean pole without them. The only people about here who don't wear them are those funny little bicycle ladies, who look like parlor matches dressed up. I guess they never look in anything but a hand-glass and they know there's a little ridge just below the waist and they think they have hips. Don't they look funny, though? Oh, yes, I believe in wearing them. I'd wear them myself if I needed to, but we shopladies generally have pretty good—you'll take a pair? Well, I thought so. You'll find them a great improvement, ma'am."

The following from the Montreal Witness shows that human life is not held so cheaply in the Metropolis of Canada as some courts appear to think it is: "The case of Mrs Curtis, whose husband was killed by a wire of high voltage, while he was attempting to rescue another man from the same fate, is to be considered at a meeting of citizens in the parlors of the St. Lawrence Hall on Wednesday, at four o'clock in the afternoon. It will not be forgotten that Mrs. Curtis was left with seven children, the youngest only three weeks old, that a jury awarded her eight thousand dollars' damages, and that that verdict was confirmed by the Court of Review, but reversed by the Superior Court. An endeavor will be made on Wednesday to take the case to the Privy Council, both for Mrs. Curtis' sake, and because such an appeal would be in the public interest. As the matter now stands at Montreal, the Light, Heat & Power Company can place its wires as it pleases, no matter how menacing and dangerous they may be, and the public has no redress in case of death or injury. The attendance at the meeting on Wednesday should be numerous and influential."

Canada's own Sir Gilbert Parker is one of the few Unionist candidates who was triumphantly returned to Parliament. It is a significant fact, remarks the Hamilton Herald, that Sir Gilbert, unlike most of the Unionist candidates, came out straight for tariff reform. He did not hedge in the least—and the electors of Gravesend sent him back to Parliament with an increased majority. Mr. Balfour, whose exact position on the fiscal question nobody understood, was soundly beaten. John Bull likes a man with clear-cut convictions and the courage to express them.

NOT TOMFOOLERY.
(Hamilton Herald, Ind.)

Referring to the recent massing of ten thousand school children in Montreal and their solemn obligation to respect the Union Jack, the Toronto Star says: "Only ten thousand children in the populous city of Montreal have lined up and made this promise. What about the rest? Are the rest disaffected? Do they refuse to promise? Is a fever of sedition epidemic among the children of the land—or what the mischief's the matter with Canada that our people must resort to these massed and assembled exhibitions of tom-foolery?" It is not tomfoolery in Quebec, where the flag of the Empire is being supplemented by a flag which should have no place in the British Empire.

THE ROOT OF NEURALGIC HEADACHE

Is an irritable condition of the nerves caused by cold. Relief comes quickly from Nerviline, the great pain reliever of to-day. "I consider Nerviline a magical remedy for neuralgia," writes Mrs. E. I can also recommend Nerviline for stiffness, rheumatism and muscular pains." In use nearly fifty years; try Nerviline yourself.

WESTPHALIAN WITCHES.

All the Victims Who Died at the Stake Had Red Hair.

Soest, in Westphalia, Prussia, was the Salem of the European witch burning era, and, by the way, the witchcraft delusion lasted for three or four centuries longer there than it did in the colony of Massachusetts Bay. The judicial tribunal before which all Westphalian witches were forced to appear was called the vehm-gericht and was composed of the most superstitious set of bigots in the province. The trees are still standing under which this witch trying congress regularly met on the commons of Soest, and the records of their proceedings are still to be found in the archives at the town hall.

One of the most noticeable things in these queer old records of the days of bigotry and blind superstition is the fact that the pages upon which are written the proceedings of cases in which the accused were condemned to the stake are all adorned with locks of the culprit's hair. The individual hairs of this queer collection of tufts exhibit all the variations usually noticed in such assortments, being long and short, coarse and fine and straight and curly. In one very characteristic feature, however, that of color, all the locks have the same general appearance, being uniformly red.

It is passing curious, to say the least, that in a country where red hair does not predominate all the witches executed during a period covering several hundred years should have had red hair.

THE TRAMP PROBLEM.

How Count Rumford Solved It in Bavaria in 1790.

A remarkable experiment was made in Bavaria in 1790 in an effort to solve the problem of the unemployed. Count Rumford, an Englishman, after an adventurous career in America, settled in Bavaria, won the confidence of the elector and obtained permission to apply Cromwellian methods in ridding the state of all its tramps, beggars, thieves and undesirables. On New Year's day four regiments of cavalry were distributed throughout the state, and at a given hour a "drive" was made of all the undesirables. Over 10,000 were placed under arrest, including 2,600 in Munich alone.

These derelicts were afterward set to work in factories which had been specially established for their reception, and Count Rumford superintended the work of their reformation. Some trouble was at first experienced with the raw army, but by kindness, exhortation and encouragement, by the public distribution of special awards for merit, the best results were achieved, and in a few years the thriftless were converted into good citizens.

Count Rumford secured a great hold upon these people. On one occasion when he was reported to be dying a multitude of poor people marched in procession, silently and with bowed heads, to the principal church in Munich to offer prayers for his recovery, despite the fact that he was a foreigner and a Protestant.

PELICAN ISLAND.

Home of All the Pelicans of the East Coast of Florida.

In that long, narrow lagoon on the ast coast of Florida known as Indian' iver there is a muddy islet three or four acres in extent. Originally it doubtless did not differ from hundreds of similar neighboring islets, but, for some reason past finding out, this islet, and this alone, forms the nesting resort, the home, of all the pelicans of the Indian river, if not, indeed, of the east coast of Florida. The brown pelican, unlike its white cousin, nests normally in low trees and bushes, and there is evidence that when the original pelican colonists landed on the islet which now bears their name it was well grown with black and red mangroves, in which the birds placed their scaffolding of sticks. Exceptionally low temperature and high water—perhaps also excessive use by the birds, which sometimes build as many as seven nests in a single mangrove—have killed tree after tree, until at present only three serviceable trees remain. Still the birds come back, the impelling motive which prompts them to return to this particular spot being evidently stronger than that which induced them to nest in trees.—Frank M. Chapman in Century.

Two Kinds of Ambition.

Men have two kinds of ambition, one or dollar making, the other for life making. Some turn all their ability, education, health and energy toward the first of these, dollar making, and all the result success. Others turn them toward the second—into character, usefulness, helpfulness—life making, and the world sometimes calls them failures, but history calls them successes. No price is too great to pay for an untarnished name.—O. S. Marden in Success Magazine.

We should be careful about taking ings as they come. Many a man has r into jail just that way.

GETS PLENTY OF LIGHT.

One Hotel Guest Who Travels Prepared For Emergencies.

"I called on a friend at one of the New York hotels the other day," said a man, "and found him in a room that was far, far away from daylight. There was one electric light, which did not make the apartment lustrous. We had some papers to look over, and I instinctively moved over near the air shaft window.

"'I can do better than that,' he said, going to his satchel and taking out an electric bulb. 'I carry this around with me for just such occasions,' he laughed. 'That one does well enough for transient guests who are not in their rooms except to sleep, but sometimes I need more than sixteen candlepower, and I carry a thirty-two.'

"He unscrewed the sixteen, and in a jiffy had on his thirty-two. The current was there, all right, and we had no more trouble about too little light. Later he showed me a large gas tip which he carried along for hotels that used gas instead of electric light. This needed a pair of pliers in addition, but he had them in his small box, and he told me it was a mighty poor quality of gas and a powerful low pressure that wouldn't respond with the goods when he put on his accommodation tip. There is nothing grafty about that little scheme possibly, but just the same he is getting something the landlord is paying for."

ST. PETERSBURG.

The Terrors of Its Climate In the Spring and Autumn.

"There is something repulsive in the climate of St. Petersburg in the early spring and autumn," says a writer, "when the thermometer often falls 30 degrees in a few hours, when the roads are ankle deep in snow broth or mud, when the winds blow raw and cold from every quarter of the compass and the quick moving droskies shower the abominations of the roads impartially upon noble and peasant. It is no consolation to the visitor to know that the Neva is sealed by ice early in November or late in October. Long indeed before the frost king has stalked down to the latitude of St. Petersburg the lordly river is completely blocked. Great ice sheets from stormy Ladoga float down the current. They crash against the mighty buttresses of the bridges, cling to the banks and gradually accumulate until the whole length of the river, which unites the greatest lake in Europe with the gulf of Finland, is completely choked. The ice is reared higgledy piggledy at every conceivable angle. It is a strange sight, this broad stretch of water, impassable and icebound while the temperature of the surrounding country is often many degrees above freezing point."

Example.

One watch set right will do to set many by. One that goes wrong may be the means of misleading a whole neighborhood, and the same may be said of example.

The good things of life are not to be had singly, but come to us with a mixture.—Lamb.

When rheumatism is torturing the body the sufferer wants relief quick. He does not want to be told that he is suffering from uric acid poison in his blood when perhaps he knows all the time that rheumatism has been in his family for generations, that he is predisposed to it, that he got wet through or chilled through the other day and that at once his old enemy began operations. He does not want to take a lot of medicine into his stomach to drive that awful pain out of his leg, but he feels as if he wanted something to go right to the spot. This is where Tuck's Bone Oil comes in. It is a powerful, penetrating oil that goes right to the spot, goes quick and safe and sure. It acts on the seat of pain, and if used according to directions will cure rheumatism. It has done it for hundreds of others; it will do it for you. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle, or sent prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Company, Limited, Smith's Falls, Ontario.

RHEUMATICS,

Found the Saint's Day.

An Italian newspaper gives an account of an amusing lawsuit which has taken place lately in a Russian city in which German is the prevailing language. One man sued another to recover the sum of 50 rubles, the debtor having faithfully promised to return the money on St. Henry's day. But having failed to do so for a long time the lender discovered that the Russian Orthodox church includes no such saint as St. Henry, and the judge before whom the case was tried was much puzzled as to what verdict he should give. Happily the idea occurred to him that, saint or no saint, All Saints' day included even the most doubtful, so he gave judgment that the 50 rubles should be returned next All Saints' day.

THE GREATEST WOMAN.

A Question, a Prize Answer and a Few Words of Comment.

Some time ago 200 clubwomen in one of the central states were asked the question, "Who is the greatest woman in history?"

The question certainly is not a new one—one wonders sometimes how many centuries old it really is—and the answers included names of women whose commanding intellect, personal charm or self sacrificing labors for humanity have made them famous the world over. Yet the prize answer held the name of none of these. This is the way it read:

"The wife of a man of moderate means who does her own cooking, washing and ironing, brings up a large family of girls and boys to be useful members of society and finds time for her own intellectual and moral improvement is the greatest woman in all our history."

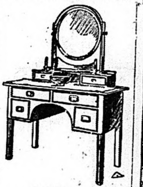
Probably many a tired housewife, reading the answer, has thought grimly that the woman who does her own housework, brings up a large family and "finds time for her own intellectual and moral improvement" deserves to be called the greatest woman in history. Possibly she is even guilty of a passing wish that the writer of the paragraph in question might try for herself and see how much time she would find for intellectual and moral improvement. Yet, although provocative of possible irritation, the prize answer has comfort too.

In the natural course of things to be the "greatest" woman in history must be a solitary glory, but one may fall short of such distinction and yet make the world the richer for a life of toil not forgetful of ideals. The comfort lies in the fact that more and more the work of the house mother—rich or poor, provided only that heart and hands give glad service—is taking the first place in the world's honor list.—Youth's Companion.

BOUDOIR FURNITURE.

A Modern Reproduction of an Old Time Dressing Table.

Adaptations and reproductions of furniture in use during colonial days meet with much favor in this age, though the originals are naturally preferred when it is possible to obtain them. Boudoir furniture in particular is sought, and the simple, artistic dressing tables of the eighteenth century are duplicated in many a modern collection of furniture. These tables possess a style of their own, and when, as in the accompanying illustration, they are fashioned from mahogany in a rich golden brown with a soft, dull polish that brings out the fine grain of the wood they are exceedingly handsome. With dresser and bedstead to match in this beautiful wood a bedroom cannot fail to be attractively furnished.—Brooklyn Eagle.



FOR THE BOUDOIR.

Electricity In the Home.

Let the housewife rise up and call electricity blessed, says the Chicago Tribune. Benevolent are its uses in the home, if an electrical oracle be correct. By its aid spring cleaning may be abolished and houses kept ten times cleaner than now under the "cyclical system of displacing dirt and dust." Colonel R. E. B. Crompton of Great Britain predicts that electric power will soon supersede the toils of the housemaid, motors driving machinery for washing dishes, cleaning flats, roasting and grinding coffee, chopping meat, kneading dough, doing the laundry work, cleaning metal effects, polishing silver and jewelry, cooling the refrigerator, pressing clothes, rocking the baby—in brief, doing all and more than the ten fairies on a woman's hand can ever be expected to achieve.

Stove Care.

Put a quantity of stove polish into a dish; add equal parts of water and turpentine and a few drops of varnish; mix this well together and apply with a small paint brush; let the polish dry and then rub briskly with a stove brush. This will give a glossy polish that will last from one spring until the next. This should not be used on the top of a cook stove that is in use every day, for the odor would be rather offensive when the polish was first put on. It is an excellent polish for stoves that are not used throughout the summer.

Lisle Thread Stockings.

Lisle thread stockings should be washed in tepid water tinted with a little blue, and soap should only be used for the feet. Rinse in clear water, allowing a piece of ammonia the size of a bean to every gallon of water. Dry quickly in fresh air, but not in the sun. If this is impossible, roll up tightly and wring in a clean cloth, letting a fold of the cloth come between each fold of the stocking.

Atherton's Abduction

By EPES W. SARGENT

Copyright, 1905, by K. A. Whitehead

Atherton gasped as the porter carefully assisted a young woman to descend the parlor car steps. He had always been told that Grace Belding was a ravishing beauty, but he had grown accustomed to Mabel's exaggerations. This girl was one in a thousand.

He glanced down the long train. No one else was leaving from the parlor cars, so this must be she. With bared head he approached the girl.

"Is this Grace?" he asked, adding by way of explanation, "I am Arthur."

"None other," she assured him brightly as she put up her cheek for him to kiss.

For a moment Atherton was nonplused. It had been something of a liberty not to have addressed her as Miss Belding in spite of the fact that she was his sister's dearest chum. But she had always spoken of him in her letters to Mabel as Arthur, and he had unconsciously fallen into the habit of calling her Grace.

This ready acceptance of the situation and the proffered kiss were rather a surprise, but he decided that western girls, with their freedom from convention, were the right sort after all.

The pleasant ceremony performed, it was but the matter of a moment to get her trunk from the baggage room and rope it behind the seat of the buckboard. She was standing regarding the spirited pair with an appreciative eye.

"What splendid horses!" she cried when he had helped her to a seat and the well matched team struck into their gait.

"Best in this county," declared Atherton proudly. "They'll get you home in no time."

"I had a horse once," she confided, "that could get us there in three minutes."

"Twenty miles in three minutes is pretty fast speeding," he demurred.

"Twenty miles! Your sister wrote the house was only a mile from the station."

"That's her idea of a joke," he explained. "She wrote Bishop Tolliver once that we were only a mile and a half from the station, and the poor old man walked eight miles before he gave it up."

"ARTIE ATHERTON," SHE CRIED, "YOU HAVE ABDUCTED MISS GRACE MAYNARD!"

"I'm sure," she said, "I do not mind a twenty mile drive behind such horses and"—

"In such company," he said boldly, filling in the bashful pause.

"And company," she assented, slipping her arm confidingly through his. "Do you know, I am so glad I was asked to come? I never had a brother, you see, and I've always wanted one."

"I am a model brother," he assured her. "I can refer you to my sister or to a dozen girls who have promised to be sisters to me."

"Such foolish girls to be content with a brother!" she said, and Atherton's subjugation was made complete.

It was a glorious drive through the cool, fresh air of the forest road. After they left the station they almost immediately entered the virgin forest, and Arthur was sorry when the familiar landmarks began to appear.

He thought regretfully of the active fashion in which he had declaimed against the addition of Grace Belding to their camp party and sorrowed over the fact that he had put an emphatic veto upon her being invited to camp for the maple sugar season. He wondered if Mabel had told Grace and whether she was seeking now to disarm his aversion.

But there was something genuine about the girl's desire for his friendship, and he immediately put from him the suggestion. By the time they turned from the road into the drive on their camp property friendship had been cemented.

With a flourish he pulled up at the door, and Mabel came running down the steps. To his surprise neither gave any evidence of recognition.

"Didn't Grace come?" asked his sister anxiously.

"This is Grace," he explained, wondering uneasily what the matter could be.

"Is this Amy?" asked Grace, looking uncertainly from brother to sister.

"I am Mabel Atherton."

"I suppose you are visiting here?" suggested Grace. "Can you tell me where Amy can be?"

"Do you mean Amy Maynard?" demanded Mabel.

"Of course," was the surprised answer.

Mabel sat down upon the steps, shaking with laughter. "Artie Atherton," she cried at last when her laughs ceased, "do you know what you have done?"

"Delivered Miss Grace Belding to you in accordance with my contract," he declared, with no ring of conviction in his voice.

"You have abducted Miss Grace Maynard, that's what you have done. Amy was telling me the other day that they were expecting a cousin to come and live with them."

"Then this is not Arthur Maynard?" asked Grace, blushing at the thought of her display of affection.

"A very penitent Arthur Atherton," he admitted. "It is all Mabel's fault. If she had come to the station herself she could have saved you all this trouble and embarrassment."

"If you had verified your suspicions, as you should have done," defended Mabel.

"That's so," he admitted wonderingly. "I merely asked her if she was Grace because she was the only one who left the train from the parlor cars."

"When you said you were Arthur," put in Grace, "I, of course, supposed that it was all right."

"I'll drive you back right after supper," he promised.

"No, you won't," declared Mabel decidedly. "I'm glad you did bring her here. The Maynards went over to Spring lake this morning. They are to be gone three days. I saw them when they drove past. They thought their cousin would not arrive for a week."

"I telegraphed them," explained Grace.

"They are outside of the delivery limit and there are all sorts of delays. You will stay right here until they come back," declared Mabel hospitably, remembering that it was the death of her parents which brought this girl to the Maynards' protection.

"That's a good girl," said Atherton approvingly as he gave his sister a hug. "I'll go and put up the horses and come back with the groom to take the trunk up."

He was glad to escape for a moment and to accommodate his mind to the new conditions. That he did so was evident that evening as they sat upon the steps of the cottage enjoying the moonlight over the placid waters of the lake.

"Remember," he warned as the girl rose to go in with Grace, "you have promised to be a sister to me."

"A promise made through error," she pleaded.

"It makes no difference," he insisted. "You have accepted me, and I shall insist upon your keeping your pact or"—

"What terrible fate befalls me?" she laughed back.

"I'll tell what happened at the station," he said impressively.

"If you are going to turn blackmailer as well as abductor," she smiled, "I am afraid I shall have to be obedient."

"I'm both, under the circumstances," he admitted, "only the next time I hope to make the abduction more permanent."

Even in the moonlight he could see the red stain her cheeks and brow, but she smiled back bravely at him. "I think," she said, "that you have done very nicely for a novice."

But there was that in her tones which told him more.

Where Beecher Got His Sermons.

Wherever he went Beecher continued his study of life through observation. Nothing else was half so interesting. To him man was the greatest study in the world. To read human nature, to place the right values upon men, to emphasize the right thing in them, to be able to discriminate between the genuine and the false, to be able to pierce their masks and read the real man or woman behind them, was an accomplishment which he regarded as one of a clergyman's greatest weapons.

Like Professor Agassiz, who could see wonders in the scale of a fish or a grain of sand, Beecher also had an eye like the glass of a microscope, which reveals marvels of beauty in the dross and common things. It had a magnifying power which sees the miraculous and beautiful in the commonplace. He could see beauty and harmony where others only saw ugliness and discord, because he read the hidden meaning in things. Like Ruskin, he could see the marvelous philosophy, the Divine plan, in the lowliest object. He could feel the Divine presence in all created things.—Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

An Old Master.

The Rev. Russell Day, an Eton master of the last century, was very strict, and to gain his approval in "saying lesson" was almost an impossibility, at least the author of "Memories of Eton and Etonians" says he found it so. "Little Day," or "Parva Dies," as he was generally called, never prompted a boy, and at the very first mistake, or if the boy forgot a word, he was dismissed at once with:

"Write it out, my friend."

As this same writing out took twenty minutes at least, most of the boys were in the habit of writing it out beforehand in preference to spending a long time trying to learn it and then being called upon by "my friend" to write it out at the first breakdown.

Mr. Day used to suffer from gout or neuralgic pains, and there is a story that once having ordered a boy to "write it out" and then having a sudden twinge he followed it up with "twice, my friend," and when the boy showed some surprise he continued, as another twinge came on, "and once in the Greek character!"

WOMAN'S INTUITION.

Try to Flavor This Sixth Sense With Sound Judgment.

Woman has heard altogether too much about her intuition, her wonderful sixth sense that enables her to jump in the dark and arrive at the very spot to which men are feeling their way inch by inch with a lantern—her flash judgment that no amount of patient investigation could improve on.

Women have been patted on the head so much for the gift of second sight that they have come to presume on it, to count their judgments infallible because they did not work for them and to shirk all patient plodding because they can arrive so much quicker at a jump.

As a natural consequence the woman who is given to this habit has a judgment that is utterly untrained and unworthy.

Not one woman in fifty can show a well balanced mind which judges independently of her own prejudices and desires or a proper sense of proportion to help her separate the trivial from the important. The feminine estimate of anybody or anything must be corrected because of so many side influences that half the time it is worthless. An occasional inspiration or coincidence that lands her in the center of a bullseye will not make up for this.

Women have every faculty of arriving at sane, impersonal judgments, and when the world gets tired of praising them for inspirations which they do not possess they may shake off the mental slovenliness and develop these faculties to their normal power. Woman's intuition will be just as valuable.

They will reach what they have in view by a rational, logical process rather than by shutting their eyes and jumping hopefully.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TO HOLD THE SKIRT.

A Homemade Fastener That Is Simple and Satisfactory.

A homemade skirt and waist fastener, proving more satisfactory even than the elaborate ones sold for goodly prices in the stores, may be made from a couple of dress hooks and the safety pins from a discarded pair of side garters. These are the little pins used to fasten the garters to the corset and having a separate slide on one side through which the elastic passes. They are preferred to the ordinary safety pins because of this slide, which prevents the hooks from slipping out of place.

Sew the dress hooks to the inside of the skirt band, one on each side of the center of back. Pin the safety pins in the waist as high up as it is desired to lift the skirt band and fasten by slipping the hooks into this little slide in the pins. This will hold the skirt securely in place, and if the pins are fastened to the substantial part of the clothing the waist also will be held down snug and trim.

Each skirt will need a pair of hooks, but only one set of the pins will be necessary, as these may be transferred from one waist to another. By this method of fastening there is no sewing, no fussing and no sagging of skirts.—Ladies' World.

DRESS HINTS.

Do not allow dust to accumulate on hats and bonnets, for this rapidly makes them shabby.

To be well gloved is one of the most important conditions of the woman who aspires to be well dressed.

Hats when traveling should be pinned on tapes at the side of the boxes or else held in position by crumpled wedges of soft paper.

To have her gowns made with two skirts, a plain short one and a longer trimmed one, is the fancy of one woman. She says there is economy in it.

Hats need a special kind of care if they are to preserve their freshness. Once badly crushed or soiled, they will seldom present a good appearance again.

Do not invest in feathered or flowered hats for ordinary wear. If such luxuries can be afforded, they should be of the best possible quality and worn only on suitable occasions.

Candle Grease Accidents.

Candle grease is a peculiar thing. It has an individuality all its own. When a candle is being carried about in the dark it has a quiet little way of teasing one. Hot drops trickle down on one's fingers unexpectedly and there is a great to do, but almost before the exclamation is out the wax has congealed to white, most innocent looking drops clinging to the fingers that don't hurt at all. But sometimes the hot drops find their way to the garment and congeal most comfortably in the meshes of some woolen weave or a cotton or silk fabric. Then there is much distress. There is an instant remedy for this. Bathe the spot with alcohol, rubbing the goods upon itself gently, then rinsing with more alcohol. It may be remembered that wax dissolves quickly in alcohol.

Polish For Silver.

Every one who has tried this recipe for cleaning silver is much pleased with it. I keep a little box of it near the dish that has soap to wash dishes and when a tarnished spot comes on any piece I rub it up each time, and in that way my silver is bright all the time and no dreaded cleaning up. It is so cheap one does not need to be so sparing of it. Five pounds of paris white, an ounce of carbonate ammonia and an ounce of magnesia are the ingredients. Mix in an earthen dish with soft water and dry in small boxes for two or three days. Apply with wet cloth or sponge and polish with cotton flannel or chamois skin. It will keep the windows as clear as alcohol and make work lighter.

A Poser.

"There, my son; that will do for this time," sternly interrupted the long suffering parent. "I don't know who was the first man to invent wrestling nor how many mickles make a muckle nor how many is many nor how few is few nor how a sailor smokes his hornpipe nor why Good Friday never comes on a Tuesday nor why rabbits can't add, subtract and divide as well as multiply, nor why an owl should hoot and not howl nor the answer to any one of the many other foolish questions that your abnormally developed bump of inquisitiveness incites you to propound."

"Yes, but, father, I don't want to ask any silly questions. This is a most important one. Please, do you think when a stout man is self contained he has more room inside of himself to contain himself in than a thin man has or is himself so big that he is just as tightly crowded inside of himself as the thin man is and how much of himself is it that is self contained and how much is on the outside doing the containing, and"—

"Clarence, go to bed this instant!"

Personal Beauty.

If either man or woman would realize the full power of personal beauty it must be by cherishing noble thoughts and hopes and purposes, by having something to do and something to live for that is worthy of humanity and which by expending the capacities of the soul gives expansion and symmetry to the body which contains it.—Upham.

A Man of Action.

Hicks—There isn't a man in town who can keep the conversational ball rolling like our friend Gayrake. Wicks—Nonsense! He never says anything worth listening to. Hicks—No, but he does a lot of things worth talking about.

He who feels contempt for any living thing hath faculties that he hath never used, and thought with him is in its infancy.

End of His Dream.

"I thought you said you were going to have a den in your new house."

"Yes, I did expect to, but after it had gone so far that we couldn't change things my wife discovered that she would need another closet."

A great lie is like a great fish on dry land; it may fret and fling and make a frightful bother, but it cannot hurt you. You have only to keep still and it will die of itself.

Snobbishness In Dogs.

A dog fancier once took exception to Professor Huxley's assertion that "one of the most curious peculiarities of the dog mind was its inherent snobbishness, shown by the regard paid to external respectability. The dog who barks furiously at a beggar will let a well dressed man pass him without opposition." He said that, in fact, only dogs of well dressed persons act so. Dogs accustomed to men in rags bark, not at beggars, but at persons clothed in sleek broadcloth.

Scotch Judges.

Before a Scotch judge may take his seat on the bench he must conduct a probationary trial to the satisfaction of his brother judges.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

What is a sign of age in others is, of course, a sign of sense in you.

Some people think they have done their duty if they express a willingness to do it.

Some people in time grow almost famous for hearing of things that never happened.

The average man will stand without hitching a great deal better than if he is tied to a pole.

There is one thing sure—in a home where there is always enough cooked for company they always have it.

How severe a young man is with the love affairs of a widower, and how severe an elderly man is with the love affairs of a young fellow!

The jealousy of the children when mother cuts the pie isn't anything compared with that they feel in later years when father divides it.

One Way to Get a Persian Carpet.

A woman who accompanied her husband up the Khyber pass in Afghanistan tells how she saw a fine Persian carpet and coveted it. An assistant to their host went out and returning said: "My head man says the owner of the carpet is a wicked old man, who will not sell his carpet at any price, but he has gone for the night to sleep in a little village close by, which is beyond British boundary. He wants to know if he shall make a hole in the wall of the mud hut and steal it while the old sinner sleeps. Shall he walk in at once and kill him and take it? He will do whichever memsahib likes." Memsahib, however, discovered that she could live without the carpet after all.

Robin Redbreast.

The country people of England, as well as of several other countries, have an idea that the red of the robin's breast was caused by a drop of blood which fell upon it at the crucifixion. According to the story, the robin, commiserating the condition of Christ, tried to pluck the crown of thorns from his brow, and, in doing so, got its breast wet with the blood flowing from the wounds. The color became permanent, being transmitted from generation to generation, and thus, according to the legend, the robin is a perpetual reminder of the sufferings of Christ.

CATARRH

The only Sensible Treatment.

How absurd to think of curing catarrh with tablets, tonics and blood purifiers. These so called cures (?) go first to the stomach, then into the intestines, mix with the food and the excretions, are taken up by the blood, and eventually an infinitissimal part may reach the nose. If you had an acute attack of indigestion, would you put the medicine up your nose and expect to be relieved. Vice versa, how can you cure catarrh by dosing the stomach?

Japanese Catarrh Cure is an aromatic, antiseptic pomade. It is inserted in the nostrils, melts at the temperature of the body, and reaches every part of the afflicted tissues. It soothes and heals inflammation, kills the germs of catarrh, clears the head, stops all discharges, and sweetens the breath.

Japanese Catarrh Cure is sold by druggists everywhere, 50c.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE LAND OF ANNIE LAURIE.

(Cy Warman.)

Where the mists of London come not
  To obscure the Scottish sky,
Where they call a maid a "lassie"
  And they all say "dee" for die,
In my hands I hold the heather
  And my feet are in the ferns
Of the land of Annie Laurie
  And the home of Robbie Burns.

Now I put the hills behind me,
  And o'er the ocean gray
I gaze out toward the Occident
  With tear wet eyes to-day;
To earth's mainland—America—
  My tired spirit turns
From the land of Annie Laurie,
  And the home of Robbie Burns.

It is said that fish makes excellent brain food. At all events fishing certainly stimulates the imagination.

Analyzing the transactions of some of those Montreal and Toronto loan sharks, it begins to dawn on us that Shylock was a comparatively decent citizen.

As the end of the Rand gold reef is said to be in sight, it looks as if the Boers may be getting their Legislatures when there is no longer anybody to make laws against except themselves.

The worst feature of this absence of winter weather is that the real January article may be expected to pay an extended visit in April.

The Toronto News, whose editor wrote a two volume book in laudation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, is evidently beginning to estimate his ideal Premier at his true value. That he is a marvellously pleasing orator is beyond question, and that he can utter meaningless phrases, in choice language, is also beyond doubt. An illustration of this is given by the News. Commenting upon the Premier's speech at the banquet given in honor of those who had been considering the best mode of preserving the forests of the country, the News says: "To the pious aspiration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that Canada, Great Britain and the United States shall some day be united as one race at the head of civilization no one should say nay. We do not know exactly what it means, but it has a splendid sound. If the Premier will peer once more into the future and give us details of the arrangement he will gratify curiosity and stimulate efforts to reach the desired goal. The ruler of the new state could be known as his Majesty the President, the legislative body as Parliagress, and the language spoken would, of course be Anglo-American-French. There would be a good deal of water in this merger, and with the kind assistance of our good neighbors some wind. But it will be a grand affair—when it comes."

The Mail and Empire gives a very good answer to the News' query as to what Sir Wilfrid Laurier means when he orates. It may not be very polite to call the Premier a "wind-bag," but it's true. The Mail says, and says truly: "In the British elections the Liberals are citing Sir Wilfrid Laurier as against preferential trade, while the Unionists are quoting him as having declared in favor of the proposition. Anyone who has time to waste can find in the multifarious speeches of the Ottawa wind-bag arguments in favor of, and against, almost everything that has ever been suggested of a political character."

The invoice of supplies sent to the Panama Canal commission officers on the isthmus for their equipment indicates that the British officers engaged in the South African war were not the only lovers of luxuries. The list includes such necessary things as work tables for women, standing collars, turn-down collars, silk pocket handkerchiefs, tan shoes, suit cases, quadruple silver plated cutlery, severals cases of 5 o'clock tea sets, 500 umbrellas, 100 shaving sets, twenty dozen ladies' night robes and thirty dozen dress shirts. The nature of the work of making the Panama Canal has evidently been much misunderstood, at least in Canada. The general impression has been that heat and disease made the work costly, slow and hard, but, judging from the supplies ordered, it appears that digging the big ditch is simply a pleasant bit of recreation. We may expect to hear, in a short time, of picnics on the site of the canal, and many important social items will doubtless be wired northward as the work progresses. All work and no play evidently makes the ditch diggers dull boys but such supplies as ordered should make those in charge of the separation of continents more contented with their lot.

The money extortionists of Montreal, who have been obtaining interest and money under false pretences, have been committed for trial. A man named Naud borrowed money from the company, and was afterwards induced to pay two dollars for nothing, according to the Judge, the company threatening to sell his furniture and using a bogus telegram to frighten him. A few months in jail will do the extortioner good.

A libel suit against the Hamilton Herald resulted in the mulcting of the publisher of $200 and the costs. The verdict, under the circumstances, was a strained one. The facts are thus reported: "John Lottridge, of Middleport, sued The Hamilton Herald Printing Company for $1,000 damages for alleged libel at the Assizes to-day. The article complained of was published last March, and stated that John Lottridge, who had been tried for the murder of Treasurer Heslop of Ancaster Township thirteen years previously, was arrested for horse-stealing in Carleton county. About three months later The Herald published a retraction and apology stating that the Lottridge arrested for stealing horses was Isaac Lottridge, not John. This did not prove sufficient for John Lottridge, and his solicitors, McClemont & Bicknell, brought action against The Herald. The defence was that the item in question had been published in good faith, without malice, and the confusion of the Christian name of the Lottridge who was arrested with that of the Middleport man was excusable, in view of the fact that County Constable Hamilton, of Carleton, was in the vicinity of Middleport, tracking the horse-thief, Isaac Lottridge. The Herald had paid $10 into court as satisfaction of the damages suffered by the plaintiff. The jury gave the plaintiff a verdict for $200.

A NOTEWORTHY INCIDENT.

Mr. Hays Declares for Nationalization of Canada's Shipping Ports.

Toronto, Jan. 16.—Last night, in an address to the Canadian Club, General Manager C. M. Hays of the Grand Trunk Railway declared his belief that it was in the interests of the country that the ports of Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and St. John should be free ports. The Government should, he said, take them all over, and make them free in the sense of imposing no dues.

Whiskey His Fate.

Smith's Falls, Jan. 16.—Augustus Sabraw, a fisherman and trapper, met an awful death in a fire which destroyed his home Saturday night. He lived alone in a small shanty on the river bank, three miles from town. About 8.30 neighbors noticed a blaze and found the place enveloped in flames, and lying on the floor inside they could see Sabraw, but could not get near him. The house completely burned up. Both legs and both arms were burned away from the body, and the face and head were gone. Besides his charred remains there lay a large whiskey bottle empty.

Big Waterways Congress.

Washington, Jan. 16.—The National rivers and harbors' congress convened here on Monday. One thousand members will attend the sessions. At least 300 commercial organizations in all the large cities of the country and twenty state governors will be represented in the congress. The object of the congress, which is composed of nearly all the important commercial bodies of the country, is to secure larger appropriations for public waterways and harbors.

Butchers.

The bulk of cattle offered as butchers' consisted of mixed loads, no straight loads of good cattle being offered. MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, Jan. 15.—(Special.)—Cables from Liverpool on Canadian cattle came steady at 10½c, but London advices were easier at 10½c, and Glasgow noted a decline of 1d with trade bad. There has been a better demand for Liverpool and engagements have been made at 30s. Shipments from St. John and Portland last week were 1410 cattle, 597 sheep. Receipts to-day were 500 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 25 calves, 120 hogs. The butchers were out strong, but trade was low, owing to the small supplies and the advanced prices demanded for them. Prime beeves sold at 4¾c to 5¼c per lb. Good cattle, 3¾c to 4½c, and the common stock, 2½c to 3c, with several large bulls at 2¾c to 4c. The milch cows were a poor lot and there seemed to be little demand for them. A very fine large calf was sold for $25; the others at $3 to $5 each. Sheep sold at 4½c and lambs, at 6c per lb. There continues to be a very strong undertone to the market for hogs and prices scored another advance of 25c per cwt., which is due to the continued small supplies coming forward and the keen competition between packers for the same sales were made at $7 to $7.25 per cwt., weighed off the cars. Cables from London and Bristol on Canadian bacon were strong at an advance of 1s to 2s, but even at this rise packers claim there is no money in making shipments.

armchair, "I don't think that even after a debauch of lobster salad and toasted cheese I could have dreamed of such a quaint couple of recruits as Nos. 2 and 3. The man was odd enough. But the woman! You seem to know her, though?"

"Yes," said the captain. "Henrietta and I are old acquaintances. She sailed with me two years in the Hope and four in the Brothers Jones."

"As a woman?" queried the undergraduate.

"Lor' bless you, no! As a deckhand, and a rare good one she was, too—always ready for duty at sea, and nimble with her fingers, and always to be relied on ashore. She liked her jaunt now and then, did Henrietta, and would take a glass with the rest of them, but she never got drunk, to my knowing, and never outstaid her leave. Jelly wasn't so reliable. He's a weakminded chap and a bit soft in his upper story, I often think, and sometimes he'd get led away and go on the mad rampage till his money was done. It was in one of those flings that he lost his arm, got run over in the street at Montevideo and had the fin so badly crushed that they were obliged to amputate, and it was after that that Henrietta took him in charge. He, like the rest of us, thought her a man then. She was sailing under the name of Henry Vere and was as smart a seaman as ever wore breeches. But after the pair had been close chums for about a year she let out her secret and they got married. I had them both with me for other voyages afterward, but her sex was always known to all hands."

And the strange couple bowed themselves out.

"Then she discarded the breeches?"

"No; served in her old rating, doctor, and rigged herself out man fashion as before."

"By the way, Colepepper," said the doctor, "now that you've accepted one woman Miss Dolly will have a new argument against you, and a pretty strong one too. She'll expect you to reconsider your veto, you'll find."

"Yes, and why not?" put in the undergraduate quickly, and then, as he caught the doctor's eye fixed quizzingly upon him, he blushed furiously.

"Young man," said Dr. Tring enigmatically, "your two years at Oxford have not quite spoiled you."

CHAPTER III.

THE EUREKA'S CREW.

The ketch Eureka, with eight of a crew on board, was working her way down the Bristol channel with a fair wind and a strong ebb tide. She was almost on an even keel, for the red wavelets of the great estuary had not enough force in them to disturb the smoothness of her advance, and this was perhaps fortunate, for of the small crew of eight three at least were raw enough landsmen to be thoroughly thankful for the respite from the tossing which was to come.

The smart looking officer who was pacing her deck and keeping a bright lookout at passing craft was another man from the cheery, burly Captain Colepepper of Shaftoe street, Bristol. The outward form was the same—the heavy thatch of eyebrow, the fringe of sandy beard sprouting from the throat, the neat blue clothes, the shiny boots; nothing was altered there save that in place of the felt hat of private life his well brushed hair was covered by a "cheese cutter" cap, embellished with certain cabalistic symbols in gold lace. But the manner of the man inside the clothes was totally different. On shore he had been jovial, easy going, nonassertive; afloat he was grave, strict and a trifle imperious. There he had bowed to Dr. Tring in everything; here there was small doubt as to which was commanding officer. Down below, it is true, the captain unbent somewhat, but even in their flute-violin duets it was the doctor who took to playing accompaniments now. Captain Colepepper could not, even in his recreations, submit to playing second fiddle when he felt the planks of a ship under him. The doctor knew this and was content to follow the other's lead without ever venturing to encroach upon the air himself.

That the ketch rig had been chosen for the Eureka was due to the special nature of the work which she would be called upon to do. Captain Colepepper argued that a ketch, though in the matter of speed not be compared with a cutter of the same tonnage, was a better sea boat in heavy weather, and was, moreover, far handier for a small crew to work. One reason for this, he explained, was that the sail spread was more divided, and the main boom was in consequence much lighter and more manageable—no small advantage when the crew was small or unskillful. And of a truth the crew which Captain Colepepper had under him was, with the exception of the two Jellys and Dr. Tring (who knew something of everything, and therefore, of course, of seamanship), the veriest set of landlubbers that ever drove a respectable merchant skipper to desperation.

One, for example, whose only recommendation was that he did not funk when he was told where the treasure lay, had been a German waiter, and, by his own admission, a failure even at that. Hans Spiedernichel was what he called himself, and he enlisted almost on the moment of sailing. He had been employed in a hotel at Bath, had heard the enterprise (which through Captain Colepepper's advertisement had come to be pretty well known) discussed among the customers, and being at the time out of conceit with the occupation of waiting had posted off to Bristol to see if he could get another berth.

Cain Laversha, the other recruit, was quite a different sort of person, but from the point of view of effective seamanship likely to be even less useful than the self confident little "Pafarian."

Captain Colepepper had, as has already been said, put an advertisement into several papers asking for volunteers, and, as it was to a misreading of this advertisement that the enrolling of Cain Laversha was in the first instance due it had better be given in full:

A FOUNDERED GALLEON.

A Spanish plateship, containing specie to the value of a million and a half sterling (£1,500,000), was sunk in action with an English vessel A. D. 1591. Her whereabouts is known, and it is proposed to regain the treasure. Assistance wanted, both pecuniary and physical. For further information apply in person between the hours of 11:30 a. m. and 5:30 p. m. at 103 Shaftoe street, Bristol.

Now, this advertisement had brought many applicants to 103 Shaftoe street, all of whom were quite ready to pick up the plums if they lay ready to their hands on the pavement, but none of them (with the two exceptions of Laversha and the German waiter) had daring enough to make one of the bold party who meant to gather those plums by the simple method of going down to the place where they were growing. Schoolmasters, scavangers, clerks, sailors, men out at elbows and men with balances at their bankers one and all drew back in dismay when the details of the scheme were explained to them. The lower class applicants made no secret of their fright, while the more respectable ones—the schoolmasters and the literary failures, for instance—generally endeavored to conceal their tremors by losing their tempers and saying rude things to the two promoters about the criminal madness of their scheme. This, however, is by the way.

Cain Laversha arrived one night after dinner, about a week after the enrollment of Tom Jelly and his wife. He entered the room and looked uncomprehendingly round him. The doctor asked him to sit. He did so, mopped his face for some time with a brown and yellow cotton pocket handkerchief, and then said, "Phew!" That was the first sound he had uttered, and apparently the exertion was too much for him, for the handkerchief was again called into active use, and it was some time before he felt sufficiently relieved to lay it across his round knees and proceed to business. When he did, he spoke with a strong Somersetshire accent:

"I come about this yer," he said, drawing a much doubled newspaper from a side pocket of his coat and unfolding it gingerly. Then, running his eye laboriously over the advertisement columns, he marked a certain spot with a broad black fringed thumb nail, and added, "This yer advertizment."

Then, as though it had dawned upon him that more explanation was needed, he drawled out: "I bain't able to gi' 'ee no pecun'ary azziztance. All the money's locked up i' the varm, an Abel 'e zez I shain't dra' out a thrippince of mun. But I be a main good hand at physickin 'osses, an sheep, an' beasts, an the like, zo I'll come ez that."

"Whatever are you driving at?" queried the doctor, completely puzzled.

The man stared heavily for a minute and then offered the paper which he still held marked with his thumb. "It zez physical 'ere, zur, in the advertizment. I zeed un a month agone an' been figurin of un out ever zince. I'll go wi' 'ee, zur."

At this unexpected reply, Miss Colepepper had a severe fit of choking, and the undergraduate was moved to take up the poker and commit a noisy assault upon the fire.

"But," said Dr. Tring, with difficulty controlling his features sufficiently to allow himself to speak, "you've mistaken the case, my good man. We don't want a veterinary surgeon, and other medical assistance I am qualified to render myself. That word 'physical' in the advertisement meant—let me see—it meant that we want strong arms. We want sailors, in fact."

"I come about this yer," he said.

The visitor slowly extended first one of his huge brown fists and then the other, examining each in turn, and then after another application of the yellow and red bandanna delivered himself as follows:

"Then I'll come wi' 'ee ez zailor. I be strong ez a draft heifer, an can pull a roap wi' any man. Yes, zur, I'll come wi' 'ee ez zailor."

"I'm afraid," said the doctor, rather impatiently, "that our enterprise will not be anything in your line. You see, we're not going on the surface of the ocean only, but we intend to navigate our craft underneath it as well."

The visitor nodded gravely three or four times, receiving without the least trace of surprise this piece of information which had startled so many before him. His countenance remained as impassively wooden as it had been before.

"I doan' zee ez 'ow that matters, zur. I never bin on the water in my life, zo I be just ez much at home underneath un ez I should be atop. I be a wonderful man to zettle down, zo they zay. A year come next Martinmas I went into Taunton for a fortnight an in four days the strangeness had worn off altogether. Think of that now, zur!"

Miss Colepepper's choking attack became acute again at this point and necessitated remedial measures on the part of Guthrie.

"It's wonderful how some people can adapt themselves to circumstances," pronounced the doctor with perfect gravity. "Then you have thought this matter out thoroughly and are quite certain you wish to join?"

The farmer waited a minute or two to collect his thoughts. "I zeed un in the paper we get of Zaturdays," he declared at length slowly, "night after our Alderney calved it were, an that must be zummat about a month agone now, zur. I showed un to Abel, an Abel 'ee zez, 'Cain, thou be a blamed vool.' Tarrible 'ard mout'ed man, be my brother Abel, zur."

"Well," said the doctor, seeing that he paused for comment, "and so you worked it out by yourself and decided to venture?"

The farmer nodded. A faint, a very faint, smile flickered about his large plain face and its hamlike coloring deepened a trifle in tint.

"Me an Zusan Pierce. She was desprit zet on it, was Zusan. It's her," he added, turning slowly round so as to face Dolly—"it's her I be keepin comp'ny wi'. She's book learnt is Zusan, an she zez, 'Cain, thee go an make fortun' an then come back an thou shall marry I for thee pains.' Tarrible clever wench is Zusan, miss—'er I keeps comp'ny wi'."

"Ah!" said the doctor. "Woman at the bottom of it! Might have guessed that. Well, I can't decide this matter all on my own responsibility. You stay here, Cain What's-your-name, while I go and discuss with my partner in the other room."

The farmer slowly nodded his large head, and then, when the doctor had gone, turned round again to Dolly. He did not speak. He only looked at her. But it was a most businesslike stare, and his little pig's eyes wandered over her from hair to slipper. People always did seem to have a confoundedly rude habit of staring at Miss Colepepper, thought Guthrie angrily; but, to tell the truth, she seemed rather to like it than otherwise. On this particular occasion, however, after she had been gazed at fixedly for five speechless minutes, she did have the good taste to blush, and, turning away, began to examine one of the doctor's skeletons. Observing this sign of grace in the lady, Guthrie suddenly realized that the ordeal had been really somewhat a cruel one, and so he concluded that it was time to draw the farmer into conversation.

"Mr. Cain," he began—but the man interrupted him with a wave of one of his huge hands.

"Just Cain, if 'ee please, zur," he said. "Abel, 'ee be maister now, an zo 'ee be the maister in our varm."

This was disconcerting, and it was now Miss Colepepper's turn to come to the rescue. She plunged, therefore, into the topic of chickens and the enormous difficulty of rearing them (a subject of which she afterward confessed that she knew nothing), and very soon she managed to work the farmer up into quite an animated conversation. Before three minutes had passed he had given her an invitation to come down and stay a month at the farmhouse and assured her that, though Abel was a hard mouthed man to most of his species, he knew what was due to his betters and would behave as though it were Queen Victoria herself who was visiting him. In fact, Cain almost became voluble, which after events showed was a wonderful testimonial to Miss Dolly's powers.

When Dr. Tring returned, he brought his partner with him. Captain Colepepper looked at the farmer, said nothing for about a minute, and then, turning to the doctor, remarked shortly in an undertone, "No sailor, doctor, and never will be; but he'll do to turn that crank of yours."

"Then you think we had better accept the gentleman's offer?"

"Yes."

And thus Cain Laversha's name was written under that of Tom Jelly, and the ketch Eureka added another and surely the strangest specimen of all to her collection of nautical curios. No, Captain Colepepper was not proud of his crew.

But the captain, the doctor, the undergraduate, the two Jellys, the waiter and Cain Laversha made up only seven of a crew, and just now it was stated that there were eight. Who, then, was the other?

It was Miss Dolly Colepepper. As Dr. Tring had prophesied that she would, she claimed to benefit by the precedent which had been set up by their acceptance of Mrs. Jelly; if one woman was eligible, their arguments, she declared, fell to the ground. And so they might do as they pleased about giving her permission, for she meant to go! At this declaration her father fumed, the doctor demurred argumentatively, and Guthrie, with the mistaken daring of inexperience, ventured to support her application. She, in return, snubbed the undergraduate, laughed at the doctor and kissed her father, and that was the end of it. The opposition, though thoroughly disorganized, of course made a show of further resistance, but the young lady had her way, and perhaps, if the truth had been spoken, neither her father nor Dr. Tring was in his heart sorry that his authority was thus derided. And, as for the undergraduate, he was openly and shamelessly glad.

After all, Captain Colepepper remarked jesuitically to the doctor, Henrietta was a woman, and, as Dolly said, sh was accepted; so—

And then the sailor had the grace to blush, for his ally was actually laughing at him.

CHAPTER IV.

A JUGGERNAUT OF THE OCEAN.

The Eureka was rounding the island of Ushant and entering the bay of Biscay. So far wind and sea had both been on their best behavior, and the exhilaration which comes from the breathing of the strong, pure sea air had obviously laid its hold upon the two youngest members of the crew. Guthrie, with the ready hope of youth, had almost forgotten that less than a week ago he had walked by the seashore of Weston-super-Mare and had groaned aloud at the thought of the "shilling a day and pipeclay" which he had determined to face. Now his troubles were behind him, and before him he saw only hope and fortune. The Flat Holme light, which had beckoned him out westward, had been the true beacon after all.

As for Miss Dolly, she had no troubles, and so, having nothing to forget, she could afford to enjoy the happiness of the moment. And this, to tell the truth, she did thoroughly.

Dr. Tring, who was standing by the mainmast, smoking cigarettes in endless relays, watched the pair with an amused smile. The undergraduate was a complete novice in the matters of the sea, and so Miss Colepepper, who, as her father's pupil, could have given points to Mrs. Jelly herself in the knowledge of things nautical, was explaining the mysteries of "knots, bends and splices," and illustrating her lesson with deft manipulations of sundry pieces of rope end. Guthrie watched the nimble fingers admiringly and tried to copy, but his success was not overpowering, and when a particularly painstaking effort ended ignominiously in the production of a "granny," Miss Colepepper did not take the trouble to conceal her scorn.

"Doctor," she cried, throwing away the rope with a gesture of mock despair, "come here. My pupil is no credit to me. I shall have to resign the post of schoolmistress and hand him over to you."

"No," put in the culprit quickly, in low tones, "don't threaten to do that. I'll be diligent."

Dolly answered him with a glance, but said nothing; for the doctor, who had come up in obedience to her summons, was standing close behind her.

"Well, young people," said he, "enjoying yourselves, I see. Umph! No harm in that. This yachting weather's very pleasant, isn't it, Guthrie? Feeling all right, I suppose?"

"Rather!" answered the young man enthusiastically. "Why did I never go to sea before? A sailor's life seems to be all pleasure."

"No, not all, young man," answered Dr. Tring grimly. "There are such things as storms, you know, and," he added quietly, "every sailor isn't quite so lucky in his company as you seem to find yourself. And, talking of storms, I fancy by the look of the sunset that we're in for a stiffish blow tonight. The Eureka is dropping rather bigger courtesies to the waves than she did an hour ago. We shall have her shipping it green a bit presently, I expect. Isn't that so, Colepepper?"

"Yes," said the captain, who had joined the group, "you're right, doctor. It will be a case of 'all hands shorten sail' in another half hour if I know anything of the signs of the weather. Well, we shall have a chance of seeing how the Eureka behaves in a sea."

"Your watch all fit for duty, Colepepper, or has the tumbling found out the landsmen?"

The crew had been divided into watches immediately on getting clear of the crowded navigation of the Severn. The captain had taken the starboard watch himself, and had under him the farmer, the German waiter and Guthrie. Dr. Tring, who was officer of the port watch, had Jelly and his wife—either of them, in the matter of present usefulness, worth all the captain's trio put together. Miss Colepepper, though she had pleaded hard to be treated just like any other member of the crew, had not been appointed to either watch.

"The German is completely bowled over," replied Captain Colepepper gloomily. "Henrietta brought me word just now that he's down in the fore peak sick as a Dover to Calais tripper, and groaning like a small earthquake."

"Ah, he's a bad bargain, I'm afraid—a weakling; never make a sailor! And that un-Cainlike Cain—is he, too, stricken of the plague?"

"No; he's all right as regards the stowage of his holds," replied the captain. "He's far too phlegmatic to let a little jobble of sea upset his internal economy. But he has no sea legs whatever, and he showed me so plainly that he'd just tumble overboard at the very first good roll that I ordered him below out of harm's way. He was no good that I could see on deck, and I didn't want to have to dirty the first page of my logbook by entering, 'Hand lost overboard when abreast of Lundy.' So, to prevent accidents, I sent him below."

Captain Colepepper looked at the farmer.

"Then are you going to let him stay there for the whole of the run?"

"More or less, doctor, yes. He'll never make a sailorman. He's too fat and bulky. It would take at least a couple of years to teach him how to use his weight on a rope. No; he'd never make a deckhand. So it's no use to try. But, all the same, I don't mean him to be a passenger. He'll have to turn to as cook and earn his salt that way. He'll know a trifle of that trade to start with, I dare say, and we'll soon drum the rest into him. Duff twice a week, boiled beef, hot and cold, tea and spuds is about the outside of our menoo, and it don't take much brains to rig up that. Keep her away another half point, Henrietta!"

"Keep her away it is, sir," squeaked Mrs. Jelly, who was at the tiller.

"So," continued the captain, turning to Guthrie, "as we've got a lame watch of it already, you'll have to do double duty, my lad; so mind you set to work and learn how it's to be done. May as well begin now. Go aft and take a trick at the helm. Henrietta'll teach you in half an hour how to steer a course, if you keep your wits about you."

With a brisk "Aye, aye, sir!" the young man went aft, and the captain called out to Tom Jelly to reeve an earring through the third cringle on the mainsail and then to unstop the reef tackle and overhaul it.

"It's going to be dirty, doctor," he said, "so we'll just get her snugged down at once, to be ready for it. Dolly, my lass, your place will be below for the next 48 hours or so, I'm thinking; so you'd best be seeing about getting out your needlework and novels in preparation."

"Mayn't I stay on deck, then?" asked Miss Colepepper in a tone of disappointment.

"No, Dolly. We shall have the seas breaking over her tonight, maybe, and I don't want you to get an arm broken or anything of that sort. Besides, if you were washed overboard, you would never have the spending of those Spanish dollars, would you, now?"

Dolly laughed. "Counting your chickens, dad," said she. "Well, I suppose I must go, but it's a shame, if there's going to be fun."

"Plucky!" muttered Dr. Tring beneath his breath. "But Colepepper's right."

Throughout the day the glass had been falling steadily, and that a heavy gale was approaching there could be no doubt. But the wind rose gradually, and there was plenty of time to put the ketch into dirty weather trim before she was pressed. About two hours after sundown the first black squall from the northeast struck her, but by Captain Colepepper's foresight she had already been eased of her top hamper, and under main trysail and a small jib only she was ready for it. This first squall soon exhausted itself, and there was a momentary lull, and then it came on to blow in real earnest. The sea rose fast, and the bluff bowed ketch was perpetually drenched with spindrift. She coursed over the watery ridge and furrow slantwise, with a fringe of yeasty surge bubbling and boiling round her forefoot, now creaming far away below the bobstay, now churning right over the stemhead.

Guthrie, who had been sent forward as a lookout, at first took his station alongside the bowsprit bitts, but as again and again sheets of solid green sprang over the weather bulwark, squirting down the collar of his oilskins and cutting his face and eyes like a sleet storm, he was driven to execute a short retreat. Floundering across the slippery deck, he fetched up against the fife rail of the mainmast, and, jamming his shoulders in between a couple of halyards, recommenced his scrutiny.

Beyond the dim outline of the Eureka's hull there was little to be seen.

Beyond the dim outline of the Eureka's hull and rigging there was little to be seen. There was faint suggestion of hoary wave crests with deep valleys of ink between them. All else was blotted out by the rain, which was not falling perpendicularly, but driving straight along in thin sheets, like so much solid plate glass. Looking to leeward he found was comparatively easy. He did not see much, it is true, but the process of trying to see did not hurt. A glance over the weather bow was a different matter; for there he met the full force of the storm, and the driving rain and drifting scud stung him like nettles. An older hand would not have minded it, perhaps, but Guthrie's skin was still tender and smarted painfully under the unaccustomed assaults of the ocean. Dr. Tring was certainly quite right when he declared that a sailor's life was not all pleasure.

However, despite the discomfort, the young man tried to do his duty to the best of his power; swinging his glance round from the sickly glare of green which streamed from the lantern in the starboard shrouds to the warm red which traced its course through the spray mists on the weather bow, and so on, pendulumlike, backward and forward. It was a painful experience, and from the point of view of the ship's safety not, he thought, particularly

That pain in the Back is Kidney Trouble

GIN PILLS WILL CURE IT

A strain or severe cold, or a dozen other causes may have started it—but the Kidneys are at the bottom of it. Backache (especially in the "small" of the back) means Kidney Disease. Plasters and liniments give some relief, but they never cure. Lots of people with swollen hands and feet, are treating themselves for rheumatism, when, in fact, their sick kidneys are causing the pain and swelling. GIN PILLS cure that pain in the Back every time, because they cure the Kidneys.

OTTAWA, March 17th, 1905.

I had the honor of being appointed assistant artist to the chief artist of London "Black and White" to accompany him three years ago to China to help him get pictures of the Boxer Uprising. That is a hard country on the kidneys. I came back very much troubled, and have been so ever since. My attention was called to Gin Pills; I have taken two boxes, and can positively say that I have never felt better in my life.

H. MANLEY.

If you have tried plasters, liniments and doctors, save your money and try GIN PILLS, FREE. Write us your name and address, and in what paper you saw this offer, and we will send you a free sample box of GIN PILLS. These famous Pills for Sick Kidneys are sold by all druggists at 50c a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50.

Women

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Hit the Right Spot.

When a woman gets all run down, feels tired and out of sorts it is pretty hard to tell what part of her peculiar organism is causing the trouble.

She takes different medicines, but they do her little good. They don't hit the right spot.

It is useless, for example, taking a stimulant to heal inflammation or correct an irregularity.

Whit the exception of Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women, no compound remedy for the female sex exists to-day. By compound remedy we mean one containing the alterative and tonic medical ingredients necessary to regulate and strengthen every organ of the female system.

And that is just what these tablets do.

In taking the ordinary remedies you may miss the very ingredients your system requires. These tablets contain every ingredient. They go to the weak spot wherever it may be.

It is not necessary to guess at the cause of the trouble and perhaps take the wrong medicine half a dozen times. It is not necessary to even know exactly the cause of the trouble.

Dr. Hugo's remedy contains something for every organ of the female system; something for the stomach to help indigestion—for the bowels to cure constipation—for the nervous system to tone up the nerves—for the liver and kidneys to make them active in carrying off impurities—something for the uterine system to stop all drains, allay inflammation and make women regular.

The tablets are sure to go to the right spot and get there the first time.

The remedy is now recognized beyond doubt or question as the best adapted to the special needs of sick and run-down women, no matter what the cause.

Bovril in the Chafing Dish

BOVRIL is the greatest adjunct to chafing dish cookery. It adds a piquant, delicious flavor to all vegetable, fish, game and meat dishes.

BOVRIL gives a high nutritive value to everything in which it is used, as eight pounds of prime beef is concentrated in four ounces of BOVRIL.

Here is a recipe which should appeal to all chafing dish votaries:

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

AGRICULTURAL.

Australian Dried Milk.

Australia has adopted the system of drying milk, which is said to have been very successful in London, England. The milk is dried between steam rollers and sold as a powder, from which nothing but water has been extracted and to which nothing but water requires to be added to make wholesome, clean and sterile milk. A leading medical officer is reported to have said that the adoption of dried milk at some of the asylums for consumptive patients and in general hospitals has proved a success.

Manure Wasted in Small Heaps.

A farmer asked Prof. W. P. Woods at a recent meeting how great he considered the loss of fertility through the practice of taking manure to the fields and leaving it in small heaps in the fall to be distributed in the spring as compared with carting and spreading it in the spring, and the reply was that experiments fairly reliable had concluded that the loss was about twenty per cent.

The Fresh Air Cure for Cattle.

The cattle on the Dominion experimental farms at Nappan, N.S., that have developed tuberculosis are not to be slaughtered. Doctor Rutherford, veterinary inspector-general, has recommended that experiment be made, in the hope of eradicating the disease by the fresh-air cure. The herd, consisting of sound and diseased animals to the number of about fifty, will be separated and housed under the most approved principles of sanitation. It is hoped by introducing some treatment that is beneficial in the case of human beings to effect a cure. From a scientific point, the experiment is of great value.

Long-keeping Cream

How to produce cream that will remain sweet for two weeks without being either doctored or pasteurized was told by C. S. Pope. It is accomplished by thorough cleanliness, by milking into a specially made pail, covered with two thicknesses of cloth, between which is a half inch layer of sterilized absorbent cotton. The milk is then separated, the machine being thoroughly washed and scalded twice a day. The cream tests 67 1-2 per cent., and Mr. Pope gets equivalent to forty-five cents a pound for butter and is saved the trouble of making it. This is about double what creameries get.

Vitriol Rotted the Stump.

A correspondent states that he removed a troublesome tree stump from near his house in the following manner. With an inch auger he bored a hole in the centre of the stump, ten inches deep, and put into it about one-half pound of oil of vitriol, and corked the whole up tight. In six months the whole stump and roots, extending through all their ramifications, were so rotted that they were easily eradicated.

POULTRY DEPARTMENT.

Poultry Keeping With Least Labor

The first question to decide when one starts into the hen business is what kind of stock he will handle. I have tried most breeds and have conclusively found that for me the Barred Plymouth Rocks meet the requirements. They are large, and bring a good price for poultry when you wish to dispose of them, as they will weigh, alive, when fully matured, from eight to ten pounds. I have sold some that weighed 12 pounds and laying hens, too, and some for 13 cents per pound at the house. There is a class who buy these large fat hens for poultry in preference to any other kind.

The hens are very docile and easily managed, not requiring a fence over three feet high, and are as hardy as any breed there is, and very easily broken up when sitting. When you take their laying qualities into account, I think they will make as good record as any of the smaller breeds. I have had them lay 171 eggs each on an average from 42 hens, and some of them must have gone beyond the two hundred mark. A profit was made on their eggs, besides what poultry I raised, of more than $1.50 each. The profit on the whole, eggs and poultry was something over $100.

The House.

From my experience, I would have each room in the henhouse arranged for about fifty hens, 15x15 feet, and divided something as follows: An alley on the south side of about 3 feet in width or wide enough to run a wheelbarrow through handily, if you wish to have the hens separated off when you go through. I would have as many of these rooms, at least, as I had of flocks of fifty hens, all rooms connected, as far as I had space to extend them.

I make my partitions for the alley four feet high by taking a three foot strip of common fence wire, and laying each end on a strip of board four feet long, and nailing a lath securely over these ends, cutting this strip about three feet shorter than width of room, leaving a space for a gate, at the entrance, of the same material. It will be seen that when this partition is set up there will be a space of one foot at the bottom This is for the nest boxes, feed, water dishes, etc. This partition can easily be rolled up if one wishes to have it all in one room.

Conquest of the Red Lice.

I set the roosts on the northern side I make what I call "bench roosts," and this is where the "red louse" problem comes in. They are a regular hen "bed bug," and leave the hen in the morning and cling to the roosts during the day. If the roosts are attached to the walls in any way, they will take possession of every crack and cranny in the building, as I have had them do before I knew that there was such an insect in existence. I knew that there was the common "hen louse," and kept them down by the "dust bath" and sulphur. They used to say that if you wished to dry up the old sow that you must take the pigs off. So I concluded that I would take the hens off, and let the lice dry up, and I didn't keep any for about two years, and thought that I had got completely rid of the vermin.

Some time after I began keeping hens again I found that where the roosts lay on the bearings that there were hundreds of them huddled together, and that they were working into the walls again. So, by studying their habits a little I came to the conclusion that, if there was no communication to the walls, that they would cling to the roosts indefinitely. I carried a roost into the field during warm weather which was infested with them, and laid it on the damp ground. I examined it often and found that where, in the first place, they were all through the roost in the cracks, then they were all huddled together in bunches on the under side, like chickens on a cold day. They had made no effort to migrate. So it is in the henhouse, they will hang to whatever dry place they happen to be, rather than to cross any place where there is moisture or dampness. So I devised these "bench roosts". Since I have used them, I have failed by close searching to find any signs of the lice in any of the walls of my buildings, or about the premises, except a few which occasionally will get on the roosts, and there they will hang till I scald them.

or kerosene, as I find that hot water is just as effectual. I make these roosts by taking two pieces of 2x3 joist eight feet long and nailing a strip of board two feet long on to each end for legs, as two feet is plenty high enough for roosts for large hens I then nail across these strips of board eight inches apart, or small poles four feet long, for roosts. I prefer to have these roots in two pieces of four feet each as they are easier to handle. These are large enough to roost about fifty hens comfortably. I set these roosts not nearer than 18 inches from the walls and put a board about one foot high, 18 inches from the front side and across one end. This is to prevent the hens from scratching the droppings over the floor. I leave the rest of the floor space for scratching purposes, which should be plentifully supplied with straw or other litter, and don't fail by any means to have in the most sunny place as large a box as possible for loam and coal ashes, renewed occasionally, and don't forget to throw a shovelful or two over the droppings often. It is well to put some sulphur in the dusting boxes, as it assists in cleaning the body lice from the hens.

Loam and Coal Ashes

thrown over the droppings often prevent heating and also all odor from arising, and the whole is in just the right condition for the crops in the spring Also there is enough moisture to prevent the red louse from going to the floors and so migrating all over the buildings. If there are any, they are all in the trap and very easily disposed of. It is evident that by this method there is a vast amount of labor saved.

No Need of Fussy Work.

Many theoretical writers tell us that it is absolutely necessary to sweep and clean up after them most every day. If this was the case I never would keep a hen. Be sure and give them as large a yard in summer as your premises will permit, and all the green stuff at your disposal thrown into the henhouse.

Don't think you must have any particular best time to clear out under these roosts during the summer, but when it is convenient throw or wheel it out and pile it up compactly, and you will have a compost better than any fertilizer which you can buy. When you do this, put under the roosts good coating of fresh loam, and when you renew the roosts give them a good scraping and scalding.

For Nests

I use boxes with covers large enough for three or four hens or more to go on at once, with a hole cut in one corner large enough to admit a hen, four inches from bottom, to prevent the eggs from rolling out, and put some fine sweet hay in, and set in some convenient place on the floor or in front of the wire partition spoken of, and it is all ready for biddy to occupy. My hens are very neighborly and social, and I have taken out a dozen eggs from one of these nests by ten o'clock in the morning. Hens won't break their eggs it shell material is well supplied.

For Building the Yards

for the hens I take the large mesh wire, three feet wide, and have it cut in lengths, of about 16 feet, and lay each end on a narrow strip of board covered with a lath well nailed on, and as many of these lengths as I wish. Where I commence, at the opening and at the corners, I drive down a stake sufficiently strong to hold the wire for the season, and at all the intervening places where it is necessary I use little stakes not any larger than a bean pole. To these stakes I tie these sections with rope, yarn, or some strong twine, and drive a small wire nail at top and bottom, bent over to keep it in place, and if there are any loose places at the bottom I cross-stake the lower strand with little sticks about ten inches long, split from a shingle or any straight-grain piece of wood. I never use staples, as the nails are so much easier to loosen when I wish to roll these sections up to lay away for the winter.

For the Small Chickens

I use the same kind of sections, only I take a strip of the same length, one foot wide, of fine mesh, and tie it on the edge of the coarse mesh with strong twine, and these I afterwards transfer to larger yards. It is readily seen that these fences can be put up and removed at short notice.

No Drugs

The plan which I see that some have of mixing vitrol and other poisonous drugs with the hens' food reminds me of a good woman who had charge of some young people who were camping out for a few days. When it came time to retire she had a good dose of "aconite" prepared for each one, to prevent them from taking cold. Dosing hens with drugs to keep them from being sick is just as sensible as it is for people to be dosing with drugs continually. When such medicine is used for hens or people it is likely to put them on the ailing list, so don't lose your hens with drugs.

A little cayenne, but not very often, during cold weather, may warm them up some. Give them a variety of grain, good wheat, corn and other grains, and a good mash of cracked corn, shorts and middlings once a day, all that they will eat up clean, mixed with milk, if you have it, and as dry as it can be stirred up; if no milk, then it is necessary to use some kind of ground meat with the mash. They must have a plenty of grit, oyster shells, etc., and a plenty of clean water, renewed often. If these essentials are strictly complied with the hens will need no medicine Neither need one stand by with a broom and dust pan to get good results.

Working for Results.

I have been obliged to leave out a lot of the non-essentials, but by adhering to what is strictly essential I have obtained results which I think will compare favorably with many who have spent more time with their hens. I started the first of January with about eighty-five hens and three roosters. I sold the most of my two-year-old hens the first part of the year and during the summer. I have now (October) forty-five one-year-old hens and thirty-five pullets, and enough more young stock to make the whole worth about $10 more than at the first of January. They have laid 745 dozen eggs. I have sold $165 worth and $42 worth of hens and chickens, besides what eggs we have used at home and for setting twelve hens. The hens are laying nearly enough now to pay for their keeping and the pullets will commence by the middle of November, as they always have, when they were a few days over six months old. I don't want them to lay earlier than that, for they don't get their growth before that age and their eggs would be small.

To make the hen business successful requires as much good sense as any other business requires, which no amount of unnecessary fussing will accomplish. There are many other things, which I haven't mentioned, which may be necessary to look out for, which I will leave till another time. So, my farmer friends, if you have a little time to spare, and a good place to keep them, by all means keep a few hens, for the profit on them will help meet a good many necessary bills, besides the eggs and poultry for home use.

SUN AND SNOW.

Sometimes Help the Hair to Go.

In any changeable climate the hair is apt to become brittle and to break off stubby here and there. This makes a hair-dressing almost a necessity, especially to ladies. In using a hair dressing why not get the best one that combines with it the efficiency in killing the dandruff germ, the germ that eats the hair off at the roots, causing what is called falling hair, and in time baldness. Newbro's "Herpicide" is that kind of a hair dressing. You have no idea how delightful your scalp will feel, and how stylish your hair will appear, after an application or two of Herpicide. It is certainly a wonderful innovation as a scalp antiseptic and hair-dressing. Sold by leading druggists Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. PROFIT IN PHEASANTS.

The Prince of Wales pheasants are a new breed and resemble the Reeves pheasants, with plumage golden spangled. They are very hardy and prolific breeders. A hen will lay up to fifty eggs in a season. The pheasant industry is growing fast. The meat far excels any kind of game in delicacy and flavor. It costs no more to raise pheasants than to produce chickens. Chicken meat sells for fifteen cents per pound, pheasant meat sells from $1 to $2 per pound in the open market. A fortune can be made in a short period to breed pheasants by the thousand. — Fred Sudow, Hyde Park, N.Y.

Answers to Correspondents.

Urine Thick.—Please publish remedy for thick, yellow water in horses. (Powdered Barbadoes aloes, 4 dr.: powdered calcium root, 2 dr.: powdered gentian, 1 dr.: sufficient quantity Venice turpentine; mix and make into a ball. Give this and let horse be walked and not driven next day—repeat in a week if necessary. Saturday is a good time to give a ball to horse, not needed on Sunday.)

Shoats Dead.—Did you ever hear of hogs or pigs dying from ringing them with ordinary rings to keep them from rooting? I have every reason to believe that I have lost 100 shoats from this cause. I think blood poison resulted from rings. They were copper-colored.—F. (You do not give any symptoms or state any facts. We have never known a lot of pigs to die from rings. We would not like to ring a sow heavy in pig, but that has no reference to blood poison.)

For Scratches.—Please publish a remedy for scratches on horse for internal use and outward application, together with directions for use. (Powdered Curacoa aloes, 6 dr.; powdered gentian, 2 dr.; sufficient quantity syrup; mix and make into a ball. Give this, and feed bran mashes only for 24 hours; walk horse, but do not work him for 48 hours. Clip hair out of heel, rub in some of the following ointment night and morning—always rub heels out with dry bran, sacking or rough cloth before applying ointment: Boracic acid, 2 oz.; glycerine, 2 oz.; vaseline, 2 oz.: mix.

Pig Diseased.—I purchased a young pig this fall, and he is not at all active. The trouble seems to be in his hind quarters; sits down on his hind quarters most of the time. Appetite good, and in every other way in good condition. When he steps down or up, it seems an effort only with the hind legs. Can I do anything for him? (Give him a dose of epsom salts dissolved in a quart of hot water and mixed with milk or slop—2 oz. if he is half-grown, 3 oz. if three-fourths, 4 oz. if full grown. Mix five drops of sulphuric acid in slop once a day for five days. Be careful in handling and using the acid.)

Out of Sorts.—Ten-year-old gelding, bought 15 months ago, at that time was in beautiful condition, fat as he could be. He has not been used hard, once or twice a week for light driving, as I have five other horses, which do all the work. In May I began pasturing him all or part of the day. During the summer he became poor, and now, while in the stable, he is still poor. Always has had better feed and less work than the other horses, though they are fat and he is poor. Present feed, all the corn fodder he will eat and 21 ears of corn a day, at three feeds. Last winter, oats, corn fodder and hay. Coat does not seem in bad condition. Always slightly lame in left fore foot. Would Fowler's solution be good to fatten him? Weight when in good condition about 1150 lbs. (Give him 3 oz. of spirits of turpentine, 8 oz. of raw linseed oil; mix and give as a drench; repeat next day, skip a week, and give two doses 24 hours apart. Get his teeth attended to. Feed shelled corn and oats morning and noon, and give four quarts of bran and a pound of oil meal at night. Mix in morning feed some worm and tonic powder. Weigh him and record weight.)

Kicking.—Mare, 13 years old, fine-blooded animal, sound, used for light driving, six years, gentle and true, on Nov. 9 kicked violently, with copious discharge from vagina, on drive of a mile. Finally threw herself, and was returned to stable. The next day the same. Reduced feed to hay, and was not used until the 19th, when she behaved well until passing a double team, the same trouble, not so severe, and under whip brought to stable. Nov. 21, drove the mare about 13 miles, and no trouble. Nov. 22, same drive and result. The 24th and 26th, short drives all right. Had put mare on feed of four quarts of oats a day, with hay. Not used until the 30th, when after driving a mile and return, near stable, passing a double team, she kicked again continuously for an eighth of a mile, with like discharge, and under whip could hardly be controlled. Since then not used, and only fed hay. Have ordered kicking strap. Can the offensive discharge be controlled? Is it simply heat, or possibly inflammation of uterus? Horsemen near by say it is heat, and will likely continue and become worse with age.—G. (Use injection powder. Give a ball as follows: Powdered Barbadoes aloes, 6 dr.; powdered gentian, 2 dr.; a sufficient quantity of syrup; mix. She should have been used with a kicking strap after the first attempt to kick.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

A small portion of orris root put into the ordinary washing water will impart a delicate perfume to the clothes.

Two potatoes grated in a basin of warm water will give better results than soap in washing delicate flannel or woollen goods, ribbons, etc.

To keep the color of parsley, dip it for a minute or two in boiling water, then shake off the water and chop fine for soup or sauce.

Moist hands are ruinous to light-colored gloves. A good remedy for the trouble is to bathe them frequently with a mixture composed of two ounces of cologne and one-quarter ounce of tincture of belladonna. After this is rubbed well into the hands they may be sprinkled with talcum powder.

A new idea in celery and apple salad is to grate the apples, which should be tart and firm, into a mayonnaise dressing. The celery, shredded and crisp, should be served on chilled lettuce leaves, with the apple mayonnaise poured over.

A little thin, cold starch rubbed over windows and mirrors and then wiped off with a soft cloth is an easy way of producing most shining results.

Piano keys can be cleaned, as can any old ivory, by being rubbed with muslin dipped in alcohol. If very yellow, use a piece of flannel moistened with cologne water.

The possessor of very brittle nails should rub them at night with cold cream or vaseline, or, if they go to the other extreme, and are soft and tender, wax and alum will harden them.

Good Listeners.

In conversing with one's friends nothing is so chilling as an apparent lack of attention and sympathy. It might be added that nothing is more vulgar were not the listener's indifference common to the majority of our most cultured people. If when one is addressed she will remember to incline the body slightly forward an attitude of rapt attention will soon be unconsciously assumed and, whether really worthy of it or not, new recruits gained for the always popular, as rare, class known as "good listeners."

A Tough Problem.

The following letter received at this office has been referred to the Lancaster Literary society: "I married a widower and went to live in the home where he had lived with his first wife. I find a number of her clothes in a closet—to wit, one brown dress skirt, two petticoats, three pairs of stockings, one pair of slippers and a black silk waist. How shall I dispose of them in a way that will be satisfactory to her relatives and the neighbors?"

GUELPH PAPERS PRINTED.

Strike Is Still On, But Is Now Down to Formalities.

Guelph, Jan. 16.—The strike of the printers is still effective, though both papers were published as usual yesterday, with the exception that the size was reduced. Nothing of bitterness has so far developed. The Herald heading a few humorous remarks with "Everybody's Out But Father." The strikers are pursuing an energetic campaign, with the aim of adding to and solidifying their ranks. Provincial Organizer James of Toronto is here, and is trying hard to settle the matter.

The whole trouble now appears to hinge on a formal acknowledgment by the printers that they went out through a misunderstanding, and the reimbursement by the publishers of any costs up to $20. The men have decided to leave the whole matter of hours, acknowledgment and costs to President Lynch of the International Union. They offered to go back to work, but the publishers wanted the whole matter adjusted first, and the latter, in turn, have appealed to Mr. Lynch to enforce the agreements entered into, and also to observe the provisions of the constitution.

Hamilton Printers' Strike Settled.

Hamilton, Jan. 16.—The printers on the three local papers walked out at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, but returned to work at 1.30. Both sides gave in, and a compromise was patched up. The trouble was caused over the pay of machine operators, who had been getting $13.50 a week and a bonus of eight cents per em. They wanted $14.50 and a bonus of nine cents. The hand printers asked for an increase from $12.50 to $14 a week, and the employers were willing to give that much. According to the terms of settlement, both machine and hand printers will get a minimum of $14.25 a week. The job printers got an increase from $12.50 to $14. The agreement will last for a year.

"Gazette" Strike Ends.

Montreal, Jan. 16.—Both the job office and newsroom of The Gazette are "open shops" for the first time in thirty years. The Gazette job-room strikers held a meeting yesterday morning and decided to accede to the demands of the management for an "open shop" and return to work. All the men except those whose positions had been filled during the strike returned to their work at 1 o'clock yesterday. Twenty-nine had gone out, and from twenty to twenty-three will now be taken back and the rest as soon as positions can be found for them.

Rev. Mr. Wilson in Peterboro

Peterboro Examiner: Very large congregations attended the services at George Street Methodist Church yesterday, when anniversary sermons were preached by Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., of Belleville, a former pastor of George Street. Rev. Mr. Wilson is an eloquent and forcible speaker, and his earnest discourses were listened to with close attention. In addition to being anniversary Sunday, the day was marked by the first appearance of the lady members of the choir in their new gowns of black and white.

HER SKIN WAS YELLOW.

"I had only to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills to appreciate their merit," writes Miss Annie S. Bryce, of Woodstock. "My system was out of order. My blood was weak and thin. I had a nasty, murky complexion. My skin was hard and dry. The first box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills made a complete change. I felt better at once. Healthy color came into my face. In about three weeks I was cured." SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

HOCKEY.

Juniors Made a Fine Showing in Port Hope.

The local juniors made a fine showing in Port Hope last night, and though they lost by 4 to 3 they had the big Ports going at the last, and, with five minutes more play would surely have won. There was one change in the team, Spangenberg going on at rover and Weller going to left wing. The change was a good one, and the boys played good fast hockey and, with fast ice, would surely have won. The soft, sticky ice prevented any attempt at combination, and in the first half the superior weight of the Ports handicapped our lads, the half-time score being 3—1 in favor of Port Hope. In the latter part of the second half the condition of the Belleville boys stood them in good stead, and, during the last part of the game they played the Ports to a standstill, but the latter bunched on their net and succeeded in holding the score down to 4 to 3. Waghorne, of Toronto, was a very strict and impartial referee. The Belleville lads have no kick on him at all. The team last night was:

Phillips, goal; Pepper, point; Connelly, cover; Spangenberg, rover; Allen, centre; Burke, right wing; Weller, left wing.

The Port Hope team was the same as played here.

The standing of the clubs in this district now is:

	Won.	Lost.
Cobourg	3	0
Port Hope	1	1
Belleville	1	2
Picton	0	2

The locals have not yet by any means given up hopes of winning the district. Both games they have lost were played on foreign ice, and it looks very much as though Cobourg, Port Hope and Belleville will win all their home games. Then, if the three clubs named beat Picton both at home and abroad, there will be a three-cornered tie. Of course, if Cobourg should happen to beat Port Hope both games the above combination will be badly smashed, but good judges who have seen both teams perform do not look for that. In the meantime, the locals are hoping for good ice, and they will then, playing as they did last night, trim any team in the district on Belleville ice. The match next Friday, with Picton, promises to be fast. The Pictons are sore on Belleville and will surely win if they can, and "Sandy" Burrows' boys can't afford to lose. So there is pretty sure to be something doing.

SPORTING NOTES.

The hockey match, scheduled for to-night, between the Bankers and Hardware Company, is called off.

Toronto News: It is gratifying to be informed that the lifting of the puck from one end of the rink to the other has been cut out considerably. That is the case here in Toronto, and it is said to be almost entirely absent from matches throughout the province. This style of play should not be countenanced.

Kingston St. Georges beat Queen's Third by 4 to 1 last night.

Stirling defeated Marmora on Stirling ice on Friday by 12 to 1.

Football has been abolished at Harvard, pending a reform in the game that will be acceptable to the Board of Overseers, according to an official announcement to-day from the university. The discontinuance of the game is a result of a vote taken last week at a secret meeting of the Board of Overseers, when it was decided that intercollegiate football at Harvard would not be permitted until the rules and regulations have been so changed and amended as to remove what the overseers regard as the evils of the present game.

HIS FINGERS CRUSHED.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT WHICH BEFEL A YOUNG MAN AT THE CEMENT WORKS THIS MORNING

Joseph Waymark, a young man who resides in the eastern part of the city, this morning met with an accident at the Belleville Portland Cement Works. Whilst working about some machinery his right hand was caught and three fingers were badly crushed. He was brought to the city where his injuries were attended to. It is impossible to state at present whether any or all of the fingers will have to be amputated.

PROVED IN MOUNT FOREST.

Every doctor in this town tried his best to relieve Mrs. J. Withom, of asthma; none succeeded. "For years," she states, "I was a dreadful sufferer; nothing gave relief. At times I found it necessary to have all the doors and windows open to get my breath. When in despair I heard of Catarrhozone. I used it and now am perfectly cured." This proves beyond doubt that any case of asthma is curable with Catarrhozone. No remedy so pleasant, none so absolutely certain to thoroughly cure; try Catarrhozone yourself; it's guaranteed.

THE ZWICK'S ISLAND FILTERING SCHEME.

THE MAYOR THINKS THAT THE OPINION OF A PRACTICAL MAN IS NECESSARY BEFORE ANYTHING IS DONE.

The Intelligencer this morning had a brief conversation with Mayor Sulman in regard to the proposed Zwick's island filtering scheme.

His Worship said he had read with interest the practical opinions in regard to the scheme, which appeared in this paper on Saturday evening. Since the inaugural meeting of the Council, His Worship said, there had been no meeting of the Waterworks Committee, and he had no idea as to what the intention of the Chairman was in regard to the matter.

"What, in your opinion, would be the best plan to pursue?" the Mayor was asked.

"I think," His Worship said, "that the opinion of a thoroughly practical man would have to be secured before anything definite could be done, and this matter would, of course, rest with the Chairman and members of the Waterworks Committee."

And that was all our Chief Magistrate cared to say in regard to it.

TAX COLLECTIONS

MANY DELINQUENTS ARE PAYING, AND THE COLLECTOR IS ISSUING WARRANTS.

The Intelligencer to-day asked Mr. F. Davey Diamond, Tax Collector, if there had been any noticeable increase in payments since the promulgation of Ald. Marsh's letter warning delinquent tax-payers that warrants would issue if they did not pay up.

The Collector said that a good many people had paid their taxes since the agitation started, and that he was issuing warrants against others. It seems to be up to back taxers to pay up if they wish to avoid trouble and extra costs.

PRESENTED WITH A JEWEL.

FORESTERS HONOR A POPULAR MEMBER LAST NIGHT.

The newly-elected officers of Court Quinte, A.O.F., were last evening installed by Bro. W. A. Mills, of this city, District Chief Ranger. At the conclusion of the ceremony Bro. Wm. Rodbourne was presented with a handsome Past Chief Ranger's jewel, the same being presented by the D.C.R.

Mr. Rodbourne was taken by surprise, but in a few well-chosen remarks returned his thanks to the brethren for their kind remembrance. At the close of the lodge proceedings refreshments were served and an hour spent in social intercourse.

THE FAMOUS GLORY SONG.

MR. ALEXANDER SPEAKS OF UNIQUE CAREER OF A GREAT REVIVAL HYMN THAT WAS USED AS DANCE MUSIC.

Toronto, Jan. 16.—The Glory Song—the far-famed production that was given birth in Chicago, Illinois, and which was one of the pronounced things of the great revival in Wales—has been used as a waltz, and whether this is right or wrong, Mr. Alexander refused to say, but unhesitatingly says "I would not have done it."

Mr Alexander takes the ground that all the oldest and most sacred pieces of music have been converted to march and other purposes, and that it is not strange that it should happen to the Glory Song. He also thinks it has been more free from this than many other productions, and it at once impresses one with its sacredness and its dignity.

Mr. Alexander goes so far as to say that he has heard "Yankee Doodle" played as a prelude or offertory, and so set with variations that the people never recognized it.

The "Glory Song" is a thing, he says, that never gets old, and at every meeting there are many people who have never heard it, and who wish to hear it. For this reason it is sung at every meeting, and if it is not it is an oversight.

The Glory Song made the first hit in Australia, and was printed and sung by the Chinese before it reached England. While it was yet unknown to the vast majority of the English people Mr. Alexander said the people knew it, whom it might least be expected knew the song. Much of the evangelical and mission work in old London is done by the business men, and Mr. Alexander told The Telegram to-day that on one occasion three men went out early in the morning to gether the "bums" and others, who were forced to sleep in the parks, to a prayer meeting. One of them proposed that the meeting be held in the open, and that it be started with a hymn, the Glory Song being suggested. "Oh, they won't know that," one remarked, but the song was started, and in a few minutes all the "bums" were gathered into a big congregation, and all sang the Glory Song, having learned it in other countries. It is now as popular in other countries as it is there, and is printed and sung in 19 languages.

AFTERMATH OF THE DUMMER TRAGEDY.

CHARLES GOW, WHO SERVED A TERM FOR MANSLAUGHTER, NOW BEING SUED FOR DAMAGES.

Peterboro, Jan. 15.—The celebrated Gow case has, it appears, not altogether concluded with the liberating of Charles Gow. Mr. E. R. Edwards, K.C., solicitor for Thomas Hill, has issued a writ against Mr. Gow, claiming damages for the death of plaintiff's son, Thomas Edward, who, he claims, was killed by the defendant.

An appearance has been entered by Messrs. Dennistoun, Peck and Kerr, and the case will be tried at the Spring Assizes, which will be held here on April 23rd.

In the writ the amount of damages claimed is not stated.

The defence of Gow will be that he did not fire the shot which killed the boy, and it is stated that the fact of the jury having found him guilty of manslaughter, for which offence he has just completed his term of imprisonment, will not affect the case in which he will be the defendant at the next Assizes.

It is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the charges under the writ.

PERSONAL ....AND.... SOCIAL.

Mrs. R. Hodgson, a former resident here, is in the city for a month's visit.

The Bishop of Ontario and Mrs. Lennox Mills have issued invitations for a reception this evening at Bishop's Court, Kingston, in honor of the Marchioness of Donegal. In her honor on Wednesday, Mrs. Mills will entertain at dinner.

DEEP LAID PLOT OF FOXY CHINAMEN.

CAUSED ARREST OF AMATEUR SLEUTH TO SHIELD FELLOW COUNTRYMAN.

Montreal, Jan. 15.—At the Royal Victoria Hospital lies a young man, Frederick Herst, who is being operated on for the removal of a piece of shell from his side, received while fighting under the British flag in South Africa. On Saturday Judge Desnoyers honorably acquitted Herst, a Swede by birth, of stealing an overcoat and $12, the charge having been made by two Chinese. The evidence adduced during the trial goes to show that the soft spoken Chinese had a deep-laid scheme to get Herst out of the way, because he knew too much respecting the escape of a Chinaman from the Allan Liner Corinthian at St. John, N. B., some weeks ago.

Herst came over on the Corinthian, and speaking a dozen languages, he was eventually employed to find, if he could, the missing Chinaman, for whom someone was responsible to the tune of $500. Herst followed his man to Montreal, and it was while hot upon the trail that an information was laid against him by the Chinese. Herst was alone and friendless. After his arrest it developed that he was by no means well, and upon examination it was discovered by the hospital doctors that imbedded in his side a piece of shell, received on a South African battlefield was slowly but surely killing the man.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

PECK'S BAD BOY.

The above musical farce-comedy is billed to appear at the opera house next Friday evening. During the past year this company has appeared in all the principal cities from St. John, N.B., to Indian Territory, and is to play return engagements at each place this season. The comedy quartette is one of the special features of the show, and is said to be worth alone the price of admission. The manager of the company announces his willingness to refund to all not satisfied the amount they paid for admission. The piece is described as a musical farce-comedy, and is from the pen of George Washington Peck, who was at the time he wrote it editor of Peck's Sun, Milwaukee.

A Bear Story

Toronto World: Going out on the Tweed accommodation of the C.P.R. yesterday afternoon the winter blackbird was a matter of extreme interest, and some were trying to see him from the car window. Roadmaster Milroy of that road east of Havelock, could not account for the phenomenon, but introduced The World's Editor of the Wild (Dept. B) to one of his section men, Jim Butterill, of Sharbot Lake, who killed a black bear near that station a few days ago. Butterill saw the tracks, and with a companion located the bear in a swamp south of the railway. Next morning they followed him into a hole where he had refuged and shot him. He weighed 125 pounds, was only two years old and sold for $14 an hour after his capture. Butterill has had quite a number of bears in his time and Mr. Milroy says he has seen them trying to put on the coats of section men working on the track.

Educational Inefficiency

Professor McCallum, of Toronto University, has been puncturing the bubble of self-complacency with which we view our educational system. He addressed the Canadian Club of St. Catharines the other night and made some very pointed criticisms of our school system and our lack of progress in educational matters. "Most of our Canadian colleges are merely glorified High Schools," said Professor McCallum. He observed that the self-satisfaction on the part of the Canadian people with reference to our institutions, representing higher education, was most pronounced, and this was also the case with reference to our primary schools. He also remarked that the primary schools were not as efficient as they were 30 years ago, mainly owing to the parsimony of school administrators. Canadians did not realize how far behind they were in educational affairs.

These are sharp words, says the Brockville Times, but there is only too much truth in them. There is a sublime self-satisfaction very prevalent in Ontario, at all events, as to the perfection of our schools and educational system. Apparently, we think them so perfect that there is no need for exertion or for a forward movement. But it is just the same in education as in business. What was suitable last year may not do this year. We cannot stand still. There is always room for improvement, and if we do not keep abreast of the front ranks we shall surely fall behind. Empty boasting about our wonderful educational system and the perfection of our schools will not keep them up to the mark.

NOVA SCOTIA'S DEMAND

Views Presented to Tariff Commission at Amherst.

Vice-President of Canadian Manufacturers' Association Voices a Demand For an Increase in Protection—What It Would Do For the Intercolonial Railway Outlined—U. S. Still Sends Engines and Boilers.

Amherst, N. S., Jan. 6.—The Tariff Commissioners, accompanied by Mr. Logan, M. P., after having spent the afternoon in visiting the principal factories of the town, and obtaining information with reference to several industries, held a sitting last evening.

D. W. Robb, president of the Robb Engineering Co., addressed the commission in his capacity as vice-president for Nova Scotia of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, pressing approval of the efforts to ascertain the tariff requirements of every branch of industry. Amherst is one of the best examples in Canada of what prosperous factories can do for any locality. He pointed out that business passing through Amherst station exceeds that at any point on the railway line except Montreal, St. John and Sydney, and if the commission could be instrumental in developing business over the whole Intercolonial in like proportion the question of its deficits would be solved.

He claimed that protection and the inducement of a reasonable protective tariff are great initiatives in the investment in industries, and a strongly protective tariff would encourage larger investments in Nova Scotian industries.

He emphasized the fact that the present 25 per cent. duty had not prevented manufacturers of other countries, especially in the United States, from selling nearly half a million dollars' worth of engines and boilers into Canada yearly for the last three or four years.

He considered the recommendation of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association for increasing the duty on engines and machinery of that class to 35 per cent. in the interest of the whole country.

FUNERAL OF MR. PREFONTAINE.

Naval and Military Display at Halifax and Montreal.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—The funeral of the late Raymond Prefontaine will be in charge of the Canadian navy. The Dominion is expected to arrive at Halifax on the 22nd. A naval salute of one-minute guns will be fired from the Dominion from the time the body leaves the ship until it reaches the wharf. Seventeen one-minute guns will be fired from the citadel, and the cruiser Canada will also join in firing a salute. Twenty men from the Canada will take charge of the remains at Halifax, and will remain in charge until the body is interred at Montreal.

There will be 100 men from the military at Halifax, and one hundred at Montreal. The two officers and 20 sailors from the Canada will haul the body on a gun carriage from the Dominion to the special train at Halifax, and will do the same thing at Montreal.

A guard of honor will meet the body at Montreal. There the coffin will be transferred to the hearse, and conveyed to the City Hall. En route men of the naval escort will walk on each side of the hearse. As soon as the City Hall is reached the guard will be mounted and maintained while the body is lying in state.

On the day of the funeral, Jan. 25, a thousand militia will line the streets through which the cortege will pass.

TALKS SECCESSION.

MacGowan of B. C. Legislature Makes a Startling Speech in the House.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 16.—Debating his honor's speech in the Legislature yesterday, Premier McBride supplemented the indefinite suggestion as to railways in the speech with the announcement that no legislation would be forthcoming hereafter contemplating land or money subsidies, the Government holding that railway construction should proceed as an unassisted business proposition. That the Government has not solid support in this was evidenced by the attitude of MacGowan (Vancouver), who, in seconding the reply, declared himself convinced of the legitimacy of the land grants properly safeguarded.

MacGowan showed great independence, and incidentally paid his compliments to the federal administration. Ironically analyzing the recent "victories" in the new provinces, he predicted such a victory of graft and corruption would have as reactive effect, spelling annihilation.

Discussing better terms, MacGowan created a sensation by urging an independent provincial demand for better terms from the Dominion, if necessary, by monster petitions to the throne, and, "failing better terms, a dissolution of the unfair ties, binding British Columbia to the confederation of provinces."

MacDonald, the Liberal leader, attacked the Government for destroying the free school system and granting the Kian Island site for Grand Trunk Pacific terminals, challenging the legality of making such a deal by order in council without Legislative consent.

DYNAMITE FOR THE CZAR.

Wired to Ensure His Destruction at Blessing of the Waters.

New York, Jan. 16.—A St. Petersburg despatch to The World says that for fear of an attempt on his life the Czar will not come to St. Petersburg from Tsarskoe-Selo next Friday to take part in the annual ceremony of "blessing the waters" at the festival of the Epiphany.

A quantity of dynamite, packed in two large boxes, was found yesterday hidden under the snow at the point where the Neva River is joined by the Ustiscora River.

In the boxes were electric batteries and ingenious contrivances to cause an explosion whose force would have been disastrous for a short distance. Short wires ran in three directions from the boxes.

The secret police are convinced that had they not found the dynamite it would have been exploded when the Czar accompanied by his kinsmen and the highest nobles approached the Neva for the solemn ceremony of blessing the waters.

McINTOSH BROS.

DETECTIVE JAILED.

Was Hunting Chinamen for Smuggling and "Stop Thief" Cry Went Up.

Montreal, Jan. 16.—Frederick Herst, a young Swede, yesterday underwent an operation in the Royal Victoria Hospital. A piece of shell received in battle in South Africa is being removed from his side.

All last week Herst refused to be operated upon, because he was under indictment for attempted theft, but on Saturday there was a sensation when it was learned that he was the victim of a body of Chinamen, one of whose number he was hunting on behalf of the customs authorities. The Chinaman escaped from the Corinthian at St. John, N. B., without paying the poll tax, and Herst, who knew him, was sent up here to find him. While searching a house the Chinaman raised a cry of thief and had him arrested. He was honorably acquitted and immediately fainted. He speaks nine languages.

FORTY PLUMBERS FINED

$10,600 Contribution to the Provincial Government.

Penalties Ranging From $200 to $500 Inflicted by Chancellor Boyd Upon Members of the Plumbers' Association Who Received Dividends—One Hundred Allowed to Go on Suspended Sentence—Names and Penalties.

Toronto, Jan. 16.—After an important address on the issues of the now celebrated plumbers' conspiracy case, Chancellor Boyd brought the whole matter to a conclusion yesterday morning with the exception of a few scattered threads, when he inflicted fines varying from $100 to $500 on forty members of the Master Plumbers' Association individually charged with conspiracy. In all $10,600 will be paid in to Sheriff Mowat by those thus punished for their connection with the combine. Of the remainder of those charged about 100 were released on suspended sentence.

Method of Assessing Fines.

In his remarks on the method adopted by himself in assessing the fines the Chancellor explained the reason for this discrimination. From his examination of the documents he discovered those who had received sums of money from the association. As far as was possible, therefore, he had levied such fines that these amounts would be handed over to the Crown as a penalty for the breach of the law. The Chancellor was also influenced by the fact that many of the lesser tradesmen had reaped no great advantage from their connection with the monopoly, but had been forced into it by their more powerful competitors.

Erred On Side of Clemency.

However, he expressed the opinion that while he would follow the scale of fines set by Mr. Justice Clute in the first case, yet he felt that the latter had erred on the side of clemency.

In regard to those who had pleaded guilty of receiving bonuses on the contracts for work done for Warwick Bros. and Rutter, the Toronto Bedding Co., the Homewood Sanatarium, Guelph, the Toronto Isolation Hospital and others, the judge decided to allow the culprits to depart on suspended sentence. He did this on the understanding that restitution had been made and that there would be so further recourse to such methods.

Fines Imposed.

His Lordship then imposed the following fines:

W. J. McGuire, $225; G. F. McGuire, $225; G. Clapperton, $500; J. Wright, $500; Henry Hogarth, $400; Alexander Purdy, $500; W. Mashinter, $500; D. Menzies, $200; J. B. Fitzsimmons, $500; K. J. Allison, $250; C. Robertson, $200; F. R. Maxwell, $300; James Fiddes, $250; F. Legrow, $250; W. J. Mason, $250; W. R. Willis, $200; A. Allison, $200; W. Wray, $200; S. Ryding, $200; R. Patterson, $250; W. J. Street, $200; J. Elliott, $250; J. T. Aggett, $250; F. Wallis, $200; J. T. Fullerton, $250; C. E. Pickard, $250; R. W. Wright, $200; J. J. Power, $300; A. M. Bond, $200; S. Wright, $200; W. G. Adams, $250; W. H. Benson, $250; A. Welch, $300; George Wallace, $200; D. McMullen, $200; J. K. Warwick, $250; Edward Forter, $200; A. H. Stinson, $250; D. J. Morgan, $250.

Suspended Sentence.

Those who were released on suspended sentence are:—Herbert Johnson, C. H. Beavis, W. J. Stevenson, A. Malcolm, H. Mahoney, R. Mahoney, J. H. Erwood, J. T. Leudreville, J. J. Graham, John Torpey, J. H. Barry, B. Willett, John E. Knott, C. J. Tomney, Thomas Cools, E. A. Phillips, J. H. Parkes, G. A. McDonald, E. A. James, James Furey, R. Restall, William Clewes, A. Gibson, J. T. Ellacott, J. Monahan, T. E. Hoar, B. Pavan, J. Down, H. Richards, George Moore, John Ross, G. T. Ashdown, Edward Myars, C. J. Hellier, A. A. Earl, E. Butler, W. Boddington, A. T. Passmore, R. G. Leaman, J. J. Lyndon, H. J. Pell, E. W. Aikens, W. Walker, Edward Beird, T. W. Sloane, T. H. Hutchison, E. T. Needham, R. W. Robson, G. T. Mason, W. J. Williams, W. B. Inwood, J. R. Bolan, G. T. Thompson, A. E. Cottrell, J. R. Brown, Neil McMullen, J. Gibbs, A. J. Richardson, W. G. Munns, N. Blumbeigh, Peter Jessamine, William Telford, R. T. Robinson, J. I. Mathews, J. L. Pincombe, T. E. Hoar, J. R. Seagar, and A. McPherson.

His Lordship's Hopes.

In regard to those charged with fraud under section 394 in all of which cases restitution has been made, the judge decided not to inflict any further punishment. The only possible penalty was imprisonment, there being no alternative of a fine. He, therefore, suspended sentence on the emphatic condition that there be no further transgression of the criminal law. The sentence would never be pronounced unless they brought it upon themselves by further transgressions. He did not doubt but that all would outline the blemish on their record and all behave in the future so as to warrant the extension to them of the confidence and respect of their fellow citizens.

The Tack Combine.

Toronto, Jan. 16.—Crown Attorney Curry has practically finished one of the 33 combine cases he has on hand. Yesterday he finished the case for the prosecution. Magistrate Denison stated that he would send the case on for trial.

The evidence yesterday was confined to the admission of a number of agreements dated April, 1901, signed by the Ontario Tack Co., Pillow Hersey Co. and the Montreal Rolling Mills. The trio agreed not to increase their present facilities for making tacks and gave the number of machines both working dismantled in their factories.

Magistrate Denison adjourned the case until to-day, stating that, as in the other cases, he would commit only one man for trial.

Call to Legislative Council.

Quebec, Jan. 16.—It is stated that Mr. F. X. Gosselin, M. P. P., for Iberville, has been called to the Legislative Council to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Hon. Mr. Ouimet.

4th Minister Has Gone Down

Fourth of The Balfour Ministry to Meet With Defeat.

One Canadian Wins and Another Loses—John Burns Defeats a Former Canadian Lumberman and Increases His Vote—Liberals on Tuesday Added 22 to Their Gains, and May Yet Have Majority Over All Parties.

London, Jan. 17.—(C. A. P.)—An unbroken series of twenty-two gains including the triumph of John Burns and the defeat of Alfred Lyttelton, the former Secretary of the Colonies, is yesterday's contribution to the polls.

Yesterday in the great Liberal and Labor landslide fifty-six seats were decided. At the start of the contest forty-three were held by Conservatives—at the finish only twenty-one remained in the fold. Of the residue fourteen were captured by the Liberals and eight by the Labor party. Liberal seats held for twenty years by the Conservatives by large majorities changed their allegiance. Democratic Labor men displaced knights and aristocrats. Thus the varying sentiments merged into a gain to date of sixty-three to Labor, as against the loss of only one.

RIGHT HON. ARTHUR LYTTELTON.

As less than half the total seats are yet decided, it seems not improbable that the Liberals will have a majority even over the Labor as well as the Irish.

Wednesday will decide the personal fate of Mr. Chamberlain, but even the most sanguine Liberals would be surprised at his defeat.

One Canadian Wins.

Yesterday's fight was participated in by two Canadians, one being elected and one rejected. Baker holds Finsbury, a seat gained for the Liberals in a bye-election, but the majority has decreased from 768 to 657. In East Edinburgh Dr. Rankine Dawson carried the Unionist forlorn hope against a Liberal majority of 1,291. He advocated tariff reform and pointed to Canada as an example of the success of protection. He was defeated by 4,174.

MR. J. ALLEN BAKER, M. P.

In striking contrast to the fate of Ministers and ex-Ministers, John Burns, after a hard fight, increased his Battersea majority from 254 to 1,600. Benn, his opponent, was formerly in the lumber business in Canada. The Socialists also worked actively against Burns, alleging he had been faithless to the cause by accepting office.

Great Scene at Battersea.

There was a great scene at Battersea last night after the poll showing John Burns to be elected was announced. Mr. Burns stood on the balcony of the Town Hall on Lavender Hill, where he resides, wildly waving his hat, while fully 20,000 of his supporters were along the hill as wildly cheering. It was a long time before Mr. Burns could get a hearing to announce the figures. Then he exclaimed: "Now, go and tell my wife."

A few minutes afterwards Mr. Burns was escorted, shoulder high, through the Battersea streets by thousands of workmen.

Walter Hume Long, former Chief Secretary for Ireland, who lost his seat for South Bristol Monday, was yesterday elected to the Unionist seat for South Dublin, where the Unionist candidate had withdrawn nin his favor.

Then Cherry, Attorney-General for Ireland, like his two colleagues, invaded a Tory constituency and turned a Conservative majority of 1,297 in the Exchange division of Liverpool to a Liberal majority of 221. On the other hand, Alfred Lyttelton was the fourth ex-Minister to be defeated.

Durham For Tariff Reform.

A ray of comfort for tariff reform comes from Durham, where a Conservative free trader faced a Conservative reformer. Tariff reform received 1,313 votes, and free trade 810.

Labor successes were again a notable feature. Of fourteen candidates in thirteen constituencies nine were elected. Of the nine elected eight were not opposed by Liberals. In Dundee, formerly held by two Liberals, the Labor candidate displaced a Liberal. In Middlesborough an Independent Labor candidate was opposed by a Labor-Liberal, and the latter won. In Stockport, electing two members, the Labor candidate headed the poll, with a Liberal second.

Labor candidates, though unopposed by Liberals, were defeated in two divisions of Liverpool. In Dewsbury a Labor representative opposed the old party candidates, but finished last. In Stockton the Labor candidate was also last, but is blamed for the defeating of the Liberal.

Daily Intelligencer.

Cheek and Impudence.

Such will be the exclamation of most people in Canada, when they learn that Joe Martin has been writing letters to the English papers, in which he denounces Mr. Chamberlain, declaring that "A policy of protection," whatever else it may accomplish, has always been successful in every country where it has been tried, Canada not excepted, in lowering the moral standard of the electorate, and in Great Britain, a decided taint to political life. British statesmen have acquired a great reputation in the eyes of the world for high ideals and a nice sense of honor. May I ask whether the conduct of the Chamberlain fiscal campaign since its inauguration stands that test."

Who in Canada, after reading this homily of Joe's on "lowering the moral standard of the electorate," and "the taint to political life," in Great Britain, will not exclaim, "Well, we have heard of his Satanic Majesty quoting scripture, but Joe's reference to the lowering of the electorate 'bangs Bannager.'"

The richest part of this little episode of Joe's is the publishing of his letter by the London Globe as representing his views as the "Voice of Canada," and as the "True Feeling of the Dominion," by "A Man of Great Influence in the Northwest."

Truly, we have to go from home to learn who our great and influential men are. Joe did well to write to those who know him not.

The Bribery Compact.

Let us hope the agreement entered into by the two parties in Kingston, not to allow any bribery or hiring of teams, at the coming bye-election, will be strictly and honestly adhered to. This agreement is a repetition of what took place in the same city in 1887, between the supporters of Alex. Gunn, now local postmaster, and Sir John A. Macdonald.

When the cabmen found that they were not to be hired they met on the day previous to the election and passed a resolution unanimously in which they pledged themselves to work gratuitously for Sir John and the national policy. This pledge was kept to a man the next day. The Conservatives won by 17 votes.

The same result should follow, only a larger Conservative majority.

Compton Election.

Telegrams from Sherbrooke says: "The Compton Conservatives intend to again protest the election of Mr. A. B. Hunt as Liberal member for the county on the usual grounds. It is also stated that petitions will be presented for the disqualification of Mr. E. W. Tobin, M.P. for Richmond and Wolfe, on the ground that he contravened the election act while supporting Mr. Hunt."

If good grounds exist for protesting, it ought to be done, if for no other reason than to expose rottenness prevailing in all Liberal political contests.

It will be remembered that at the last election trial, Mr. Hunt, in order to avoid further exposure acknowledged bribery, etc., and threw up the sponge. He has been re-elected, no doubt by the same means. If the Grit member, Tobin, has been guilty of violating the law, he should be prosecuted; unless there is absolute proof, the charge should not be made. The accusing of a man of an election crime and then not pushing it to proof, always proves a boomerang.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Those two great Canadian pastimes, hockey and snow shovelling, are "up against it" this year.

Only two months to St. Patrick's day, and no ice cut yet. It looks like artificial ice for ours next summer.

Everything, according to the weather sharps, indicates a continuance of the open winter. As an observing party said to a newspaper man: "When you delve your spade into the ground and bring up a spadeful of earth alive with fish worms, that ought to mean something I think. And that's the way you find it all over the city. There's no frost in the ground yet to speak of, and the fish worms don't seem to be expecting much. A year ago you couldn't find a fish worm if you went down four or five feet, and two years ago it was worse."

The following, from the Municipal World, has a local application and contains a lot more truth than poetry: "No one," the World says, "wants to pay a larger tax bill than is necessary, but on the other hand, the municipality with a low rate is rarely a desirable place to live in. The meaning of a low rate is usually bad roads, poorly kept streets, and an inferior character of public service. By means of municipal organization modern improvements, or rather modern necessities, can be procured in a general way for less than the individual working alone can obtain it. It is a means of economy in securing sewerage, water supply, fire protection and other common necessities. It is not the business of councillors to starve any of these services in order to reduce taxes, but rather to see that the people obtain the best value for the available expenditure upon them. There must be efficiency as well as economy in municipal work."

As regards the above, and its application to Belleville, it may be pointed out that if this city has not a superior public service it is not the fault of the Councils who levy the taxes or the people who pay them. Some people think the work could—and should—be a lot better done for the money expended, and perhaps they are right.

A Rochester minister says that "a man who is happily married can save two dollars for every dollar he saved while single." He is either a bachelor or used to be a spendthrift.

A humane agent in Oshkosh, Wis., has been arrested on a charge of beating his wife. His cruelty is in accordance with the tradition which says that a shoemaker's son is always barefoot and a carpenter's house always leaks.

A New York baker was arrested for trying to carve his wife and eight children. May be they had told him what they thought of his bread.

Well, let's be thankful, even if we have no snow to shovel. We are not called on to run the lawn mower, anyhow.

Judging by recent weather, this ought to be the 17th of March, but there are no shamrocks in sight to-day.

• • •

An overcoat containing a counterfeit dollar was stolen in a Boston church. The theft evidently was committed before the contribution was collected.

That Paris swindler who defrauded students to the amount of 500,000 francs was appropriately named. He was Marco; they were marks.

It is said that John D. Rockefeller is back of a new $30,000,000 rubber company which has been incorporated in New Jersey. If Mr. Rockefeller will devote a little of his wealth to putting real rubber into what are commonly sold as rubber goods, he will deserve to be recognized as a philanthropist.

• • •

In St. Thomas they are discussing the advisability of having city taxes paid at the banks. The bank officials are said to be willing to undertake the work for the incidental advantage they would receive therefrom, but it is not easily seen, suggests the Brantford Expositor, that municipal expenditure would be lessened by the change, seeing that some one would have to prepare and serve the tax slips, and look after the delinquents. Changes readily suggest themselves of a far more serviceable character than this one.

It is hard to see how the Kingston Whig could make a statement like the following, unless the explanation is found in the fact that some people are blessed with altogether too much verbosity. The Whig says:

"There is a smallpox patient in Belleville, and the medical health officer thinks that the salvation of the people depends upon a general vaccination. Now, don't be nervous."

There is no smallpox case in Belleville at all. The city is entirely free from the disease, and has been for quite a long time. Possibly the fact that the Medical Health officer, in a moment of fervent anxiety, recommended a general vaccination may have led the Whig to believe that there must be smallpox in the city. Some people "fly off the handle" quickly. The publication of such a story can do Belleville no good, and may do much harm. Will our esteemed contemporary kindly correct it? We hope so.

There will be a shortage of 50,000 tons in the Montreal ice supply, which is a blue lookout in that city of narrow streets and great humidity in the good old summer time.

The Kingston Whig makes the following comparison, which is not very favorable to this beautiful city. "The amount of Kingston taxes for 1905, remaining unpaid, is $1,800, which includes $460 on the British-American hotel, which is guaranteed by the bondholders. This is a fine showing in comparison to $46,000 due in Belleville."

It seems apparent that, in the British elections, the Liberal landslide has not been entirely caused by Mr. Chamberlain's fiscal scheme, for many ardent free traders have been defeated by Chamberlainites. The probable reason for Balfour's defeat is that the people think the Unionists have been in power long enough and, to use a Canadian rallying cry, "it is time for a change."

Brockville Times: In a letter received by John H. Fulford from his son, Frank H. Fulford, of Leeds, Eng., the latter states that the election campaign now on there is of the hottest variety. Canadian enthusiasm over election matters, says Frank, is not in it with merry old England.

In the Boer war a British private made a gallant rescue. He dashed across an open space swept by bullets and, lifting a wounded comrade in his arms, carried him to shelter. The colonel who witnessed the deed praised the soldier and told him he would be recommended for a Victoria Cross. Later on the soldier was relating the incident to his comrades: "He said something about the Victoria Cross. I didn't think anything about the Victoria Cross. What I know is that I wasn't going to leave Robinson lying out there with all the company's tobacco in his haversack."

The reports presented at the Y.M.C.A. annual meeting, held last night, show that institution to be in a flourishing condition, a matter for congratulation. The Y.M.C.A. is an excellent fixture in Belleville, and does splendid work.

The despatch from Cleveland, in another column, which states that Dr. Osler's age limit theory is blamed for causing fifty suicides in that city during the past year, causes one to reflect that people cannot be too careful what they say or do in this world. Every man is an object lesson to someone else, and may do incalculable harm, unwittingly, perhaps. The worst of the matter, so far as regards Dr. Osler, is that he never advocated a "suicide theory" at all. All he did was to advance the idea that men, as a general rule, did their best work before they passed the two-score mark. Then he quoted, in a humorous way, a book, the author of which pictured a mythical country where men were chloroformed at the age of sixty. The gay and festive U.S. newspaper men immediately gave out to the world that Dr. Osler had promulgated the theory that men should be chloroformed at the age of sixty, and it is doubtful if the talented Canadian will ever be able to live the story down.

Speaking at a political meeting in Kingston yesterday Mr. R. R. Gamey, M.P.P., criticized the timber dealings of the Ross Government, and declared that at the next session of the Legislature an investigation would be held to show that some leading Liberals in Toronto had received large rake-offs, the sum of $40,000, Mr. Gamey said, having been received by Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, the Toronto lawyer, who represented the Government against him in the Stratton case.

Y.M.C.A.'s Annual Meeting Last Night

VERY PROSPEROUS STATE OF AFFAIRS SHOWN—THE NEW OFFICERS—THE ASSOCIATION'S FINANCES.

The annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. was held in the association rooms last night.

The reports from the various departments of the work show 1905 to have been the banner year in every department.

Mr. J. A. Tousaw was re-elected to the Presidency, and the other officers are:

Mr. C. S. Clapp, 1st Vice-President.
Mr. A. E. Bailey, 2nd Vice-President.
Mr. LeRoy J. Chown, Treasurer.
Mr. Jas. H. Reeves, Board Secretary.

The following directors were appointed: Mr. W. K. Baggs, Mr. D. V. Sinclair, Mr. F. S. Wallbridge, Dr. M. J. Clarke and Mr. C. Clapp.

The Secretary's report showed a healthy interest in the work of the association by the young men and boys of the city, over 8,400 having attended gymnasium classes, 1,400 educational classes, and 1,000 Bible classes during the year. About 1,800 attended the men's meetings.

The boys' department increased 110 per cent. in membership during the year. A strong social work has been done.

The future needs of the association were discussed and an emphasis placed on the boys' work, appreciative of the work of the teachers of the educational classes. The chairmen and workers on the committee service, and the President and members of the Ladies' Auxiliary were warmly praised, and thanks extended to the press for the prominence given the work during 1905.

The report of the Treasurer shows the active sympathy of the public with the work being done by the association. Nearly all of a heavy deficit has been wiped out, new equipment has been added and every department has used more and produced more than at any time during the history of this work in Belleville.

CRIPPLING SCIATICA

A SURE AND CERTAIN WAY TO CURE THIS TERRIBLE TORTURE.

There is just one sure, scientific cure for sciatica, rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, headaches—you must drive the pain from your blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Liniment never cure nerve and blood diseases. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills strike straight at the cause because they actually make new blood. Through the blood they conquer the painful poison, soothe the nerves, loosen the muscles and banish every ache and pain. Mr. Thos. J. Eskell, Walkerton, Ont., says, "When I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I had been off work for three months. The cords of my right leg were all drawn up and I could only limp along with the aid of a stick. The pain I suffered was terrible. Only those who have been afflicted with sciatica can understand the misery I was in both day and night. I took six boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills before they helped me, but after that every day saw an improvement, and by the time I had used fifteen boxes, every vestige of the pain had disappeared. I have no hesitation in pronouncing Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the best medicine in the world for sciatica."

Every dose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills makes rich, pure, health-giving blood. That is why they cure headaches and backaches, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, anaemia, heart palpitation, and the ills that afflic women only. But be sure you get the genuine pills with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box. Imitations are worthless—often dangerous. All medicine dealers sell these pills or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Dead Horse Came to Life.

Peterboro Review: A capital story which loses none of its force because it is true is being told concerning a well known local hotelman. A few days ago one of his horses, said to be worth $320, became ill and sank so low that the animal was thought to be dead. The boniface was so sure of this that he sold the remains to a man for a dollar. The apparently dead horse was taken to the dumping ground and there thrown off the sleigh, preparatory to being skinned. Much to the surprise of all concerned the dead one struggled to his feet and showed that it was very much alive. It is alive yet, and the man who purchased the horse for its hide has now a valuable animal. It must have been a great shock to the hotelman when the news was broken to him. Further developments in the case are expected.

HER SKIN WAS YELLOW

"I had only to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills to appreciate their merit," writes Miss Annie S. Bryce, of Woodstock. "My system was out of order. My blood was weak and thin. I had a nasty, murky complexion. My skin was hard and dry. The first box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills made a complete change. I felt better at once. Healthy color came into my face. In about three weeks I was cured." Dr. Hamilton's Pills effect an easy cure. Try these good pills, 25c per box, or five boxes for $1.00, at all dealers.

CALLS IT AN INSULT TO YOUNG CANADIANS.

BANK OF COMMERCE CRITICIZED FOR IMPORTING BANK CLERKS.

A correspondent writing to the Mail and Empire has the following to say in reference to the Scotch Bank clerks imported by the Canadian Bank of Commerce:

Sir,—I ask the privilege of saying a few words on the above subject. I learn from the press that the general manager of the Bank of Commerce gives as his reason for inducing Scotch lads to come to Canada to take positions in the bank, the great scarcity of Canadian lads. Is there a business man in Canada to-day that will accept such a statement. There are hundreds, yes, thousands of young lads in Canada that would be only too glad to be taken into the Commerce. Some few years ago a lad of mine was promised a clerkship in the Commerce. After waiting six months without hearing from the bank, he accepted a position in another bank, nor have I heard from the Commerce from that day to this as regards the promise. Some six years ago another of my lads made application to one of the leading bank for a clerkship. He was accepted, but was told that there were four hundred applicants on the list before him, and he would have to wait his turn. After having waited some eighteen months he was given the promised clerkship. The general manager of the Bank of Commerce would have us believe that there is a dearth of young men in Canada to accept clerkships in the bank and, therefore, he is compelled to seek for them abroad. The introduction of those Scotch lads into Canada to fill positions that our Canadian lads are capable of filling is an insult to young Canadians. Yours, etc.,

WILL NOT BE SHOT.

SENTENCE OF RICHARDSON, ONCE A RESIDENT OF BELLEVILLE, HAS BEEN COMMUTED.

Fort Worth, Texas, Jan. 15.—Friends of Dr. C. H. Harle, here, have been advised that he, and the two other defendants, Richardson and Mason, under sentence of death in Chihuahua, Mexico, for the alleged poisoning of two Americans, policy-holders of a life insurance company of New York, will not be executed in accordance with the court's decree by being shot, but will be sent to the convict stockade on the islands in the tropics, off the coast of the Republic, to serve terms of 20 years each at hard labor, presumably in the Salt Mines.

Dr. Harle formerly practiced medicine in Texas, Richardson and Mason came from Rochester, N.Y.

THE TORMENT IS REAL.

Dr. Torrey Says "Hell Is the Insane Asylum of the Universe, Where Men and Women Remember."

Toronto, Jan. 17.—A material hell, like in its nature unto the Calvinistic conception of a place of torment, was that preached by Dr. Torrey in Massey Hall last night.

Dr. Torrey said he was going to speak on a solemn and awful subject, one that he never dealt with without reluctance and pain. He would be very glad to believe that there was no hell. There had been a time when he tried to believe in universal salvation, but he had had to face the truth that there was a hell.

"By the grace of God I will save you," pronounced Dr. Torrey.

"Almost anything other than sin is better than Hell," was a phrase twice repeated.

Hell was an absolute certainty. Many people might say that all the scholarly preachers had given up faith in an orthodox hell. This wasn't true. There was scholarly preachers who believed in such a hell. Others who did not had given up their conception out of sentimental reasons. Anyway, it didn't prove anything.

Hell was certain. Jesus, the Apostles and God Himself had said there was a hell. Against this there were only the speculations of theologians and the dreams of poets.

Thousands of men and women in Toronto were in a very practical hell, which was getting worse every day. The Bible showed a way of escape, and the infidel was guilty of incredible folly in refusing to accept it.

"Hell is more certain than that when the sun goes down to-night it will rise again to-morrow," declared the preacher.

Hell was a place of very great bodily suffering, said Dr. Torrey, who quoted Biblical passages descriptive of torment of the damned. It might be claimed that the terms used were figurative, but it should always be remembered that they stood for facts, and that God's figures never overstated the facts.

"Remember, that in the next world we are not disembodied spirits. That idea is not Bible, but Greek philosophy," said the speaker, who went on to say that the Bible taught resurrection of a body as real as the present one.

If hell was a place of bodily suffering, it was still more so a place of memory and remorse.

"You men will remember the women whose lives you blasted and blighted. You women will remember how you spoiled your lives in fashion and foolishness and frivolity instead of living for God, who made you. Everybody will remember the opportunities despised of taking Christ," was the assertion of Dr. Torrey. There was no torment like that of an accusing conscience.

"Hell is the insane asylum of the universe, where men and women remember," was the concluding metaphor.

Immersed in Boiling Water.

London, Jan. 17.—Through a misstep John Watson, an employe of Hyman's tannery, plunged headlong into a vat of boiling water last night, and was so badly scalded that he will die. Watson is a young Scotchman, who came to this country a short time ago.

True Bill For Manslaughter.

Toronto, Jan. 17.—The grand jury in the Assizes yesterday returned a true bill against Abe Carter, on a charge of manslaughter, in the shooting of the man Miller at the Woodbine some weeks ago.

Mr. Phillips in Court.

Toronto, Jan. 17.—Joseph Phillips of the York Loan appeared in court yesterday, and his counsel, J. K. Jones, secured an eight days' remand without pleading or electing. Bail was renewed.

His Usury.

"Now, Willie," said the boy's mother, "before you go to sleep you must try to recall any little sin you committed during the day and be truly sorry for it." "Yes, ma'am," replied Willie. "I guess I was guilty of usury, for one thing." "Usury?" "Yes'm; I found a nickel and used it."

A Rule of Life.

In all the affairs of life let it be your great care not to hurt your mind or offend your judgment. And this rule, if observed carefully in all your deportment, will be a mighty security to you in your undertakings.

Lesson Learned in War.

The importance of removing all unnecessary objects from the decks of men-of-war was emphasized on board the Japanese Mikasa, on which twenty-three men were killed or wounded by the fragments of an optic telegraph that had been hit by a bomb.

The Serious Part.

DOES YOUR SCALP ITCH?

Are Your Hairs Dropping One by One?

If your scalp itches you are doubtless suffering from dandruff. The dandruff germ is digging up your scalp in little flakes, called dandruff and sapping the life of the hair bulb. No hair preparation that is a mere hair stimulant and tonic will cure dandruff, because it won't kill the germ that causes the trouble. Newbro's Herpicide is the latest scientific discovery; and it will kill the dandruff germ. Destroy the cause, and you remove the effect; kill the germ and you will have no more dandruff, falling hair or baldness.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

TIMELY TOPICS.

CAUTION.

(London Globe.)

(Top hats are most dangerous. They confer upon their wearers a false air of virtue and trustworthiness, and enable them to perpetrate all sorts of villainies.)

Beware of the perilous topper;
It isn't a thing you can trust.
You fancy it harmless and proper?
Nay, shrink from it, filled with disgust.
Though highly respectable seeming,
A dangerous thing is the tile;
The gloss on its body is gleaming—
But the heart underneath it is vile.

Its owner may lack every virtue,
His soul may be evil and black;
He probably wishes to hurt you;
Detectives may be on his track.
The widow and orphan he preys on;
And always a cynical smile
Full of sinister deviltry, plays on
The face of the man in the tile.

O youths who're beginning existence,
Pay heed to the words that I say;
Keep that shiny top hat at a distance
When you see it appear, edge away.
Regard it with horror and loathing,
As an up-to-date weapon of guile,
And you'll baffle that wolf in sheep's clothing,
The dangerous man in the tile.

Just what pleasure the Old Country people can find in stringing their elections over a period of ten days, is one of those things which nobody can very well explain.

Andrew Carnegie has been talking on poverty. So long as all the rest of us talk on wealth there's no reason why Andy shouldn't talk on something he doesn't know anything about.

The Toronto Globe's correspondent at Ottawa is still of the opinion that Mr. Brodeur will become Minister of Marine and that the departments of Customs and Inland Revenue will be united to permit the establishment of a portfolio of mines for Mr. Templeman. This union of departments will require legislation, and therefore must stand over until Parliament meets.

The failure of the Toronto women to vote is explained by one writer, who intimates that they were at home rocking the cradle, with the ultimate purpose of rocking the world. If we understand the municipal franchise law of Ontario, says the St. John, N.B., Sun, most of the lady voters are not supposed to have much to do with cradles.

One of our great difficulties that has always attended the temperance cause has been the lack of funds in those supporting it. This is not confined to Canada for the National Council of the Scottish prohibition party at their annual meeting in Dundee, unanimously passed a resolution to run a parliamentary candidate at the coming general election, provided the general public subscribe the sum of £120 required for the returning officer's fee.

An example of the profit in gas making is furnished by the Mutual Gas Company of New York, which does not sell its entire output to consumers, but disposes of a part of it to another company, the Consolidated, at thirty-three and a fraction cents per 1000 feet, while the consumers have to pay three times that figure for it. These facts have been elicited on oath by the investigating gas commission of the State.

For every self-made man there are ten self-ruined men. Of the ten self-ruined, half at least belong to that numerous class who in spite of fine natural abilities never get beyond inferior positions, simply because they never think or act independently, never take the initiative in anything, never rely upon, and so develop, their own judgment, and let opportunity after opportunity pass by them because they want to get advice from someone else as to what course they had better pursue. Favorable winds do not wait for the captain who is always wabbling — "yawning," as sailors say.

RIGHT NOURISHMENT.

We think of nourishment as food—meats, soups, vegetables, etc., but that's only half. It's not the food alone that counts but the good that we get from food that furnishes nourishment. A pound of steak is of less value to a weak stomach than a crust of bread is to a strong digestion. But weak stomachs can be made strong. Begin by eating less; have regular hours for meals; avoid fancy things and about a half hour after eating take a tablespoonful of Scott's Emulsion. It's a fact of medical history that people have lived on not much else but Scott's Emulsion for a long time—not only lived but gained flesh and recovered their strength and health. From the pure Norwegian cod liver oil to the last drop of glycerine, Scott's Emulsion contains just the strength-giving and health-building elements needed for low vitality, weak digestion and poorly nourished bodies.

HIS REASONS.

(Washington Star.)

A Southerner was telling of an old colored man in his neighborhood who first joined the Episcopal Church, then the Methodist, and next the Baptist, where he remained. Questioned as to the reason for his church travels, he responded;

"Well, suh, hit's dis way. De 'Piscopals is gemman, suh, but I couldn't keep up wid de answerin' back in dey church. De Methodis, dey always holdin' inquiry meetin's, an' I don't like too much inquirin' into. But de Baptis', suh, dey jus' dip an' are done wid it. I'se a Baptis', I is."

THE DOCTOR'S ORDERS.

Prince Louis of Battenberg, in the course of an interview about the New York policemen accused of drinking aboard the Drake, said with a smile;

"I blame those unknown men no more than I blame a certain teetotaler of Dundee.

"A Dundee physician, because the teetotaler had a red nose, suspected the sincerity of the man's professions

"So he invited him to dine at a restaurant one night, and ordered champagne with the dinner.

"The teetotaler did not hesitate at all over the champagne. He drank half a dozen glasses, and grew gay and boisterous.

"Then the doctor, feeling that he had him, said gruffly;

"'Weel, John, hoo does all this square wi' yer teetotal pretensions?'

"The prohibitionist (as you would call him here) laughed and answered:

"'Though I'm a staunch teetotaler, I'm no sic a fule as to refuse what the doctor orders.'"

Terribly Injured.

Brantford, July 17.—Monday night a buggy was upset at Colborne and Market streets, and one of the party of three, a Mr. Rock of Waterford, had his jaw broken in two places, his nose cut off and both his eyes destroyed. Rock has been married only a few months.

BY WEATHERBY CHESNEY, AND ALICK MUNRO.

useful, for, in such weather, so raw a sailor as he could not be expected to see the danger even though it were but a dozen fathoms ahead. But he did not complain, even to himself; for he recognized that he must take the rough with the smooth, and it also occurred to him that perhaps Captain Colepepper had, in appointing him to this duty, meant it to be a rough sort of breaking in to the realities of the sea.

The captain himself was at the helm, for steering was a matter of some niceness, when a wrong movement of the tiller might very well mean death to all on board. The Eureka was running with a heavy sea on her quarter, which threatened every minute to topple inboard and poop her. The dim rays of the binnacle lamp glinted on the captain's black oilskin frock and showed his fringe of beard, his red face and his small screwed up eyes peering anxiously out from under their heavy thatch of brow. Though himself visible to Guthrie, it was too dark for him to see along the decks as far as the mainmast, but to assure himself that the young man, raw hand as he was, had not gone overboard, he gave a leather lunged hail every now and again of, "All clear forrard, there?"

And at this the undergraduate would bawl back, "All clear it is!" and then turn his face sharply forward again to make sure that it was so.

The Eureka was making for Madeira, and the sea road from Land's End to that island is a thickly frequented one. She was, in fact, just beginning the crossing of the bay of Biscay when the storm took charge of her, and a collision there, in such weather, could not but be fatal. Landsman though he was, Guthrie knew enough to have no doubts about this, and, flattered, it may be, by the responsibility which had been put upon him, he stared bravely into the black, wet night ahead, and tried not to heed the cruel spray which lashed and cut his face with the strokes of a hundred icy whips.

Beyond the dim outlines described before there was nothing to be seen, but the ketch was scudding before the gale at a rate of nearly 12 knots an hour, and in such a night warning lights would not be visible far ahead. The night, indeed, was getting darker, wilder and fiercer. The cringle headed main trysail was a small sail, but its few square yards of canvas strained so hard during the squalls that to Guthrie's inexperienced eyes it looked as though the mast would be blown clean out of her, and once dismasted in that turmoil of waters it seemed to him that nothing could prevent the vessel from foundering out of hand.

The thought came to him of the awful struggle for life when the waters should engulf them and almost turned him sick with fear, and then he remembered the girl down below in the cabin, shut off by the battened hatches from any chance of making a fight for life. And at the thought of her he turned his eyes forward again and peered even more intently than before into the darkness ahead. Almost fiercely he said to himself that if death were to come to her that night it should not be because he was found wanting in his duty.

But at length Captain Colepepper decided that running before the gale was no longer safe, and the helm was put down to round to. Tom Jelly, with the jungle of hair on his face streaming out like a mass of fluttering black rags, came forward to help with his solitary hand on the jib sheet, while the doctor with Hans and Henrietta was ready for similar duty aft. Waiting for a partial lull, the captain slacked up his tiller rope and shoved the helm a-lee. Instantly the ketch heeled over, almost to her beam ends, the creaming surges raced over her starboard decks, and her forward part, where Tom and Guthrie were, plunged bodily under the boil of green. The young man clung convulsively to a cleat, for he thought that the end had come.

But the Eureka rose again, shot herself clear of the watery burden and ran up into the wind, with canvas wildly slatting and halyards hammering her mainmast like so many iron rods. Guthrie glanced at Tom Jelly, to see how he was taking it. The man was grinning as usual—that goes without saying, for he always grinned. But there was something nervous about this grin. He evidently did not admire the situation, and, curiously enough, that encouraged the undergraduate. A moment before he had been trembling with fear, but as soon as he saw that the prospect was ugly enough to scare an old hand his courage came back to him and he did his best to help in the work which was to be done.

Together he and Tom flattened in the weather sheet of the storm jib, and then handed themselves aft along the heaving, slippery decks, in obedience to the skipper's orders. Captain Colepepper shouted to them to bend and set a storm mizzen, and then to get the main trysail off her, for he thought she could ride easier with the tiny triangular rag of after canvas and the spitfire jib alone.

To inexperienced eyes the work did not seem much, but such was the fury of the wind and so heavy were the pitches and rolls of the vessel that the energies of the whole crew were taxed for the better part of an hour in doing it. And by the time it was completed, there was not one of them who had not his bruise or cut to show as a testimonial to the danger of the work.

But another danger of the sea was coming rapidly down upon them: greater and more ruthless in its pitiless strength than even the waves themselves. A shrill cry from Mrs. Jelly rose above the booming and shrieking of the gale and fell keenly on every ear. The cry was inarticulate, but there was no mistaking its import—the tone told that. Instinctively each one looked up from his work, glanced at the woman, and then, following her pointing finger, stared with horror over the taffrail.

Advancing through the storm was a lurching triangle of lights, green and blood red at the base and glaring white at the apex. They were the lights of a steamer, and as the whole trio were visible, she was advancing directly upon the Eureka's stern! In another moment her shadowy outline loomed through the wet night, gray, huge, terrible. She was a vessel of 6,000 tons, but the heavy seas treated her like a plaything, and the terrified watchers could see that she yawed about wildly as the big waves struck her stem. She sheered first to starboard, then to port, but her course—it was only too apparent—lay dead on to the smaller vessel, which inevitably, it seemed, must be run down and sunk.

"Swing a light there, Tom, for God's sake!" cried Captain Colepepper.

The Eureka's side lights did not show abaft the beam; the binnacle lamp which Jelly lifted out to wave was extinguished by the wind in a moment, and there was no time to fetch a flare or a port fire from below. The ketch's crew shouted wildly, desperately, frantically, singly and in chorus. But the wind sucked their puny hails into itself, and the great mountain of iron and steel came on remorselessly. They could not get way on the Eureka quickly enough to sail her out of the track, and even to attempt it was useless. The doom of the gold seekers appeared certain.

The straight, sharp cutwater was wedging its way through the seas but a wave length away and heading directly for the ketch's counter. She must, in a matter of seconds, crash into the little vessel and send her to the bottom.

At that instant a yarn of Captain Colepepper's flashed across the undergraduate's brain, a tale of awful danger, told in the little sea parlor at 103 Shaftoe street. The captain had been run down at sea once before and had himself been the only one saved out of a ship's company of 23. He had been on deck when the other vessel, a large, old fashioned, bark rigged steamer, ran them aboard, and he had leaped up on to her bowsprit shrouds and so scrambled into safety. This tale it was which came back to the young man at that terrible moment, and he scanned the oncomer with a half formed thought that perhaps it might be his lot to repeat the captain's adventure now. But there was no place for foot or hand hold on those tall, sea swept sides. A couple of stays from her stem head made up all the rigging forward. Even her snugly housed cables would be far out of reach. No, in her giant strength she would ride remorselessly over the smaller boat. She would not even feel the shock, and her people would never know the doom of death which they had given, while of the Eureka's crew not one would be alive to tell the tale.

Still on she came! It would be but another of the long list of the unrecorded tragedies of the sea.

CHAPTER V.

"HERE SHE FOUNDERED!"

The tall, straight stem of the advancing steam was less than a dozen yards off now, coming grimly and steadily on over a patch of smooth water, and all hope of life fled from the heart of each watcher on board the Eureka. A few seconds more, and the waters of the Atlantic would have closed over the little boat and her daring crew forever.

But at the very moment when the gates of the grave seemed to be standing widely ajar the god of the sea intervened to save. A wave, greater and more erratic than its fellows, struck the liner on her quarter. She turned a little on her midships, and her bow fell off to the starboard, and at that moment the ketch was sighted by the other's lookout, for instead of coming on again, the steamer yawed still farther away, apparently in response to a sudden application of her powerful steam steering gear.

Those on board the Eureka saw that she was a great, white painted P. and O. liner, with her square ports all tightly closed, her boats inboard and everything snug as could be—a triumph of the shipbuilders' art, but a very Juggernaut of the ocean to the little vessel in her path.

Under the influence first of the wave and then of her helm her stern swung steadily round to port and actually scraped the ketch's quarter as it shot past; so fearfully narrow had been the margin of safety. But the pressure was mercifully light, and the Eureka had not so much as a stanchion carried away. A couple of officers who were on the bridge shouted down to her when she drew abeam, but the furious storm carried away their words, and as the Eureka had scraped off scot free none of her crew seemed particularly anxious to make out what the others said. They watched the big liner disappear into the tempest ahead with a devout wish not to clap eyes on her like again for the rest of their cruise.

In another moment her shadowy outline loomed through the wet night.

Having braced himself but a moment before for the struggle with King Death, the revulsion of feeling which the knowledge of safety brought with it was almost too much for Guthrie. He hung on to the port mizzen shrouds and, for a space, fairly shivered. Captain Colepepper, Jelly and Henrietta, sailorlike, returned to their work at once. A danger over was, to them, a danger promptly forgotten. There is no time for sentiment at sea. The chances and haps of the life are so many that, once past, they are little thought of more by seafaring folk. The doctor had dropped the glass which he was holding to his eye when the steamer was near, and was coolly fingering the hard, wet canvas. Hans Spiedernichel, unscared by a danger which he had not fully understood, was helping him. For very shame the undergraduate had to pull himself together and bear a hand also.

When at last they succeeded in getting her comfortably hove to under storm mizzen and jib, there was little else to be done. Utterly worn out, therefore, by the toil of the last few hours—as much, probably, through the heavy pounding of the wind as through the actual exertion—Guthrie sat down on the scuttle butt, and holding on by a bight of rope, began to nod sleepily. Indeed he must have dropped off, for almost, it seemed to him, before ten seconds had passed he felt the captain's large hand shaking him by the shoulder.

"Here, my lad," shouted the skipper, "wake up! D'ye hear? I don't want you falling overboard. Now, just go below and turn in. It's too risky for a green hand like you to take a calk here on deck. Make the most of the minutes now. I may want you up again before long."

The young man needed no second bidding. Pushing back the lid of the companion, he stepped over the doors, closed the slide over his head and scrambled down the steep little ladder. Dolly was in the cabin, reading by the light of the madly swinging lamp and of course quite unconscious of the fearful danger through which she and her friends had so lately passed. Too tired even to tell her of the recent escape from death, Guthrie bade her a short good night and turned into his bunk. In less than a minute he was asleep.

When he had had his sleep out, he went on deck. The morning was well advanced. The Eureka was under main trysail and jib and once more standing along her course. Captain Colepepper was at the tiller. The rest of the watch consisted of the doctor, Henrietta and Tom Jelly. They were all heavy eyed and tired looking, plain evidences that each had passed a wearing and sleepless night, and, in truth, though the danger was safely past now, it had been a terribly anxious time even for such tried veterans as Captain Colepepper and the two Jellys.

"Well, youngster," said the doctor, "had your calk out? I hope you're ready for work again now and can let us others have our watch below. It has been a fearful night, but you were tired enough to sleep right through it, I warrant. How's Dolly this morning?"

"I haven't seen her," replied Guthrie, "so I don't suppose she has turned out yet."

"Was she very much frightened last night?"

"Not that I could see. She was reading."

"What!" cried the doctor. "Reading, with the ketch heaving and tossing as she did last night! Colepepper, that daughter of yours is less afflicted with nerves than even I am, I believe."

"Aye," assented the captain, "she's plucky. Guthrie, my lad, just rout out that Dutchman—he says he's been a carpenter, among other things—and the pair of you set about rigging some jury bulwarks. Stanchions and life lines will do till we get to Madeira. There's plenty of wood in the hold."

The ketch was deeply laden with a very "dead" cargo, and she did not rise easily to the seas. Her movements were heavy, sullen and sluggish; but for all that she kept pretty dry. Her lines were full and ample, for she was apple bowed, round bottomed and full sterned. She did not pretend to be a race horse or even a well paced hack. She was rather a dray horse of the sea, sturdy, powerful, slow. But, for the work she had to do, no safer type could have been chosen, as the event of the night's struggle surely showed.

Any craft of her tonnage and lading, with less buoyant power than she had, could not have lived through that awful night, for, as the adventurers learned when they touched at Madeira, every coast which felt that gale was strewn with wrecks, and at least a dozen vessels were known to have foundered at sea. But the Eureka, though she lost a considerable portion of her bulwarks and was otherwise scarred and dented, kept on the surface bravely and carried her freight, human and otherwise, all through the blow, with little damage to any of it.

Without further adventure she made Funchal bay, Madeira, and lay there for ten days while the Portuguese carpenters repaired the breaches which the Atlantic had made. Then the water tanks were filled, and as large a supply of fresh provisions as the crew of eight could get through while they lasted good was taken on board. And after that the anchor was tripped once more, and she stood out to sea. But her course this time was westward, and the destination was a certain unbeaconed point in the sea a little to the eastward of one of the larger West Indian islands.

She did not cross the Atlantic without one or two small blows; but as she never showed anything less than three reefed mainsail these did not count for much. In fact, as they were all easterly they were rather welcome than otherwise. Indeed after her adventure with the P. and O. liner the elements seemed to have entered into a conspiracy of kindness toward the Eureka, and, to make up for their past frowns, did nothing now but smile, and the spirits of all on board rose accordingly.

"I think," said Dolly one bright afternoon, "that it shall be a sailing vessel after all."

"Needless to remark," said Dr. Tring, who was close by, "I agree with you. But might I be so bold as to ask what you are talking about? The statement, standing by itself, was rather enigmatical."

"I was winding up my thoughts, doctor, by uttering the conclusion aloud. You know, when we get the dollars out of that galleon I shall be rich. I made up my mind from the first I should have a yacht, and till recently I have favored a steamer; but this is so delicious today that I've decided on a sailing craft after all."

"Any particular rig?" inquired the doctor gravely. "Or will you wait to decide on such a trifling detail as that till we've fingered the old Spaniards' gold and got it snugly stowed in the bank at home?"

"Unless a good idea comes to me I'll wait," she rejoined. "There's no particular hurry."

"You're right, Dolly," said the doctor with a laugh; "there isn't. Guthrie, clear that parasol of the lady's. It's fouled the halyards, and, Guthrie, while you're forward, pass the word to that miserable man Cain not to stir the tea with an oniony knife again today. Say Miss Colepepper doesn't like it, and then, perhaps, he'll remember."

The Eureka was not a speedy vessel, but with fair winds and no calms her daily knotage in the right direction, as chalked up on the slate at the foot of the companion, showed that she was making her westing with decent haste. The weather was warm and mild: never hot, for the breeze always tempered the fiercer sun rays; never cold, because there were no gales. Every one on board found it necessary during the daylight hours to wear the thinnest clothes—every one, that is, except Captain Colepepper. The skipper still wore his shiny black boots and still sported his heavy blue pilot cloth. Indeed one day when the sun was literally blazing he turned out on deck tightly buttoned up in a pea jacket. However, as he appeared comfortable in it and justified himself by the statement that thick clothing kept out the heat, the others soon learned to take his peculiar attire as a matter of course.

The only person who was really uncomfortable as the sun began to mount higher and higher over the mastheads was Cain Laversha. He literally melted. His great ally was Tom Jelly, and his only respite from the heat torture seemed to be when he was sitting down on the deck and Tom was pouring sea water over him. Tom, who like an old shell back was not given to frequent ablutions himself, found in the administering of this water cure the quintessence of humor, and as he handled the canvas bucket in his solitary fist he grinned, if possible, more broadly than ever. They were great chums, these two, but they scarcely ever talked, for Tom was not a loquacious man, and as for the farmer, as Dr. Tring pointed out, he never spoke at all unless Dolly was near.

"He is forgetting all about his 'Zusan Pierce,' I believe," declared the doctor. "Mark my words, Miss Colepepper, you'll have him proposing to you one of these days if you are not very careful about the encouragement you give him."

At which remark Dolly laughed and the undergraduate, most unaccountably, blushed and then felt angry. Cain Laversha was not the only man on board the Eureka who had thoughts of this kind about the captain's daughter.

What with the interest which he found in the society aft and the never failing amusement which was to be got from the study of the quartet of quaint characters forward, Guthrie found the time pass only too quickly, and would have been quite content had there been another month of sailing to be done. But at length the above sea part of the outward voyage came to a close, and the fascination of the coming dive into the unknown took hold of every one on board and made all other interests sink into insignificance by comparison with its weird solemnity. Though he had of course known it to be the only object of their voyaging, Guthrie had hitherto hardly been able to think of this adventure as of a real, solemn danger, which the eight souls on board the Eureka had come out to dare. But such undoubtedly it was, and now had come the time for doing it and for proving the truth or falsehood of the hopes with which they had started. Wealth for all of them, if Dr. Tring was right, and if he was wrong—death! Such was the issue which they were now about to put to the proof. No wonder that, beside such a question, other interests faded away to nothing.

"Here she foundered!"

During the previous day and all that morning Captain Colepepper had been unwontedly careful and anxious over his observations and over the calculations which he made from them. A little after midday the ketch was put about and worked with the towing log up to a certain spot on the boundless plain of ocean. Then, at five and twenty minutes after noon, the captain ran to the side, and, with his red face showing redder than ever in his excitement, pointed to the waves beneath and cried:

"Here she foundered!"

CHAPTER VI.

THE EUREKA TAKES HER FIRST DIVE.

The galleon Santa Catarina, with her rich store of gold and silver and jewels and the armor of her defenders and perhaps their bones, too, if the sea had not dissolved them, lay under the Eureka's keel, and there she had rested, in undisturbed peace, since that long distant day when the Spaniard had fired his magazine sooner than trust to the tender mercies of Nicholas I.

The company of adventurers on board the Eureka leaned over the bulwarks and gazed down into the green depths of the Atlantic beneath them. A hush of awe fell upon them and kept them speechless. With one accord they peered into the waves as though by the exercise of their will power alone they could pierce those silent depths and compel the sea to disclose its secret to their curious eyes. It was an eerie thought that down there in the ooze, 200 fathoms beneath them, lay the harvest of gold which they had come to reap. But it would be a perilous gleaning, and maybe that other reaper, death, would have his innings first and the bones of these eight brave men and women would go to swell the number of those who lie at rest in the wide graveyards of the ocean. It was surely a thought to freeze the speech and make the heart beat fast with fear.

At length Cain Laversha broke the silence.

"It'll be powerful dark down there, zur, won't it?" said he.

"Aye," answered Captain Colepepper shortly, "dark as the grave itself."

"And how far down did 'ee zay we be going, zur?"

"Two hundred fathoms, more or less."

"Two hundred fathoms," repeated the farmer slowly. "Quarter of a mile that be, very near." And then he shook his head heavily and relapsed into silence.

"Doctor," said the captain presently in low, anxious tones, "are you quite sure we can stand the pressure? It will be awful!"

"Of course we can!" returned Dr. Tring, with an amount of impatience which, as it was quite unusual in him, showed more plainly than anything else could have done that even his nerves were in a state of tension. He had not flinched when the great liner was upon them in the bay of Biscay and death missed them only by inches, but this was different, and for once Dr. Tring showed that he could be moved as other men.

"Look here, Colepepper," he said irritably, "we've figured all this out already at 103 Shaftoe street, Bristol, haven't we? So there's no need to begin to have doubts now. We know exactly what pressure the Eureka can stand, and, according to our calculations, there will be a considerable margin left over for safety even at 200 fathoms. I see no reason to doubt those calculations now. Do you?"

"No, doctor," said the captain, "I don't, but—"

"But!" interrupted Dr. Tring. "There are no 'buts.' Here, I'll go over the thing with you again."

And the two men began pacing the deck, the doctor arguing and enforcing his reasons with energetic gestures and the captain nodding a continuous approval to his friend's words. He did not in reality require to be convinced afresh, but the process was none the less comforting.

"Alan," said Miss Colepepper presently as she watched the two, "is it a very foolhardy quest, this of ours? Father seems to be strangely uneasy, and even Dr. Tring isn't quite himself. I don't think I quite realized till now that we really had to take this awful dive."

Guthrie said nothing, but edged a little nearer to the girl and kept his eyes fixed in a kind of fascination on the water beneath.

"It's all down there, I suppose—the gold which is to make us rich," Dolly went on. "Do you know, I've a feeling as though we could see it, and perhaps, too, the dead Spaniards who guard it, if only we stared hard enough. It's a silly thought, isn't it?"

"Perhaps it is," returned Guthrie; "but, strangely enough, I have just such a feeling myself. Shall we try?"

"No," retorted Dolly sharply; "we won't! It is silly. We'll go and talk to father and Dr. Tring instead. I want to ask the doctor what we shall see when we go into the depths below. I'll make him draw a picture to us of the world beneath the waters, and, afterward, when we are down there, we can compare the reality with his prophecies tonight and point out his mistakes. I do so love to score off Dr. Tring," she added with a laugh. "But he is so fearfully exact that I don't often have a chance."

Presently Captain Colepepper and the doctor finished their deck pacing and the captain went to the helm. The ketch was worked up some two miles to windward of the spot where the calculations had said that the Santa Catarina lay, and then she was hove to for the night.

That evening the two promoters of the enterprise sat on the after skylight, under the stars, and played duets. By the terms of the agreement Dr. Tring would have the command tomorrow, for he was "commander below the surface." It was the end of the captain's term of office, therefore, and he did not play second violin once during the evening: he fiddled the air. The doctor was content with the secondary position and tooted obligato accompaniments. They did not mean their music to be melancholy, but unintentionally it was so. If they started "Scots Wha Hae," it verged insensibly into a minor key and ended in the "Land o' the Leal," and "Home, Sweet Home," which they tried next, started in a wail and ended as a dirge.

The younger pair, full of the excitement of anticipation, could not understand the others' gloom and were even slightly depressed by it themselves, for there is something peculiarly catching about an apparently causeless melancholy. But presently Guthrie, by following the glances of the two musicians, was able to guess what troubled them. He saw that they were constantly casting furtive looks at Dolly, and after awhile it dawned upon him that she was the cause of their anxiety. A remark of the doctor's which the young man heard in the pause while the captain was tightening his E string made this certain.

A STRANGER IN QUEBEC

WHAT SHE SAW IN A WET DRIVE 40 MILES BELOW MONTREAL.

The Wear and Tear of Time—French-Canadian Hamlets, Not to Mention the Ancient Hills, So Old As to Be the Oldest In the World—A Geological Study — A Partly Deserted Village—Where Signs Are Few.

A line of telegraph poles stalked gauntly across a flat expanse, and faded into an all-encompassing blur of twilight, mist, and rain. Beside them, buried in mud, lay the road from the St. Lawrence River to the Laurentian hills. A long-suffering French horse, which seemed to have learned from habitant masters the plodding patience of a peasant race, splashed fetlock-deep into puddle after puddle. The French driver, with the drizzle beating into his eyes, murmured a muffled malediction.

A Moist Scene.

In level pastures to left and right soaked sheep huddled up to rail fences, seeking shelter and finding none. We, looking pensively forth beneath the hood of our ramshackle "voiture," considered our most recent folly and repented thereof, writes Maud Going, in The New York Post. We wondered why we had left—for this—the allurements of Society—with a capital S—and the creature comforts of an effete civilization, and bethought ourselves how easily, should it become worth while, our neglected heirs-at-law might prove us mad.

Yet the jaunt now nearings its end had been by no means without interest. The morning sun shone hazily, but cheerily, when we set forth from Berthier-en-hout, a little country town on the river's brink, forty miles below Montreal. All the river country between Montreal and Three Rivers is as level as the sea. Here and there, on an illimitable plain, which is peacock, olive, gray, or purple according to the season and the hour are gleaming clusters of white barns and cottages, faintly suggesting groups of sails glimpsed far off at sea. Here and there shines a metal-sheathed spire. These belong to parish churches, which have given to the surrounding villages their musical and hallowed names, St. Cuthbert, St Barthelemy, St. Felix de Valois, and St. Elizabeth.

Wear and Tear of Time.

And far to the northward, etched against the sky, is a line of hills, part of the oldest geological formation in the world. The rocks which form their underpinning, and often their surface, too, are all tilted and twisted, scoured by ice, and changed by fire. Towards these incalculably ancient hills we set forth in a calculably ancient volture with a rakish tilted top. We had a camera, a borowed umbrella, a pile of frowsy rugs, and an old French driver, wiry and chirpy as a cricket, and no stranger, apparently, to whiskey blanc. A la bonheur!

For ten miles north of Berthier the country is unsurpassed in fertility in all the Province of Quebec, and it supports a large, though scattered, population. "What village is this?" we again and again ask our driver, as we pass cluster after cluster of barns and dwellings, and he has always the same laconic answer, "No name, just the country." The houses are all alike, with one storey below the curving roof, so that the projecting eaves almost overhang the entrance door.

Outside each is a well, with its primitive sweep. Many of the houses have thatched barns with white walls and with doors painted red or black. Most of the households, for reasons which baffle the intuition of the tourist, have out-door ovens made of clay, and enclosed in little structures of brick. Here and there one may see hanks of homespun and home-dyed wool hung up on the fence to dry.

Sheep and cattle browse in the level fields, which are crossed by shallow ditches, lest standing water should rot the grass. At every few miles the wayfarer finds a little cheese factory, with primitive methods and machinery, by which the omnipresence of the deadly microbe is placidly ignored. Rail fences bound the pastures. No rock appears anywhere, and one sees neither thicket, woodland, nor hedge; but here and there stands a great solitary meadow elm as graceful as those of New England.

A Geological Study.

From these rich, flat pastures one passes "in the twinkling of an eye" into the rugged desolation of the hills. Great sheets of bare rock appear, heaving up like billows from beneath the surface soil. Great boulders are strewn everywhere.

The road begins to climb and dip, and dense thickets of mountain shrubs, aflame with the last glories of autumn, hide the river country from our sight.

In the most barren spot, apparently, of all this barren region, some foolhardy souls have tried to make a village. Thirty years ago this hamlet—St. Norbert—had two sawmills and a population of two hundred souls, but when the mountain woods had fallen before the axe the occupation of the villagers was gone. "Not good for farmeeing," said our driver, indicating a field wherein were only rocks, mullein stalks, and the palpitant birches which are often the last effort of wornout land.

Many of the children born into this village have left their country for their own good, and sought the hospitality of Uncle Sam. In some cases the old parents have followed their children, leaving their little houses desolate. But some cling to their homes to the last. "They seem to be all old here," said my companion, watching the white-haired men at work "banking" a cottage wall against the winter, subject to the advice and criticism of a white-haired woman, weaving, just inside an open door. Some have clung to the very last, as we know by the three or four black crosses rearing their heads above the brambles in neglected garden-plots.

Partly Deserted.

More than half the dwellings in this village are now empty. Boards are nailed over their darkened windows and unused doors, and in their garden-plots vegetables are making a last stand against invading briars and weeds.

At the top of the long stony hill up which the village struggles, a great cross lifts its head against the sky. This commemorates a ceremony observed in spring in the villages of French Canada—the blessing of the fields. A parish mass is held in the open air to invoke the benediction of God upon the seeds about to be cast into the ground.

Sometimes one member of a parish arranges for a special mass to bring down a blessing upon his own fields, and if the parishioners be devout and well-to-do, several such masses may be provided for in one parish, and announced on one Sunday. After the ceremony is over, a cross is erected on the spot where the officiating priest had stood. Masses are also offered in rural French Canada for rain, for fair weather, and for relief from epidemics. For every mass the parish bell is rung. When a member of the parish dies it tolls forth the number of his years, and three times every day it rings the Angelus.

What the gate was to a Hebrew town the door of the parish church is to a village of French Canada. The life of the little community is focussed around it. After the close of morning mass and before the congregation has dispersed, the bailiff, standing in the church door or on a platform erected before it, reads all manner of public and business notices. Among the sheriffs' sales, recorded from time to time in Montreal papers, one finds many properties listed which are to be sold "at the door of the parish church of St. ——" anything you will. On all days of the week one may see affixed to the side posts of the church door a motley collection of weather-stained placards, usually in French. Whoever has property to sell will advertise it here, and here are posted notices of auctions, of public meetings, and of live stock "lost, strayed or stolen." Here also some local authority affixes the fish and game laws of the province.

Even Signs Are Few.

A French village is generally profusely illustrated with signs. The custom, like the inn signs of the middle ages, is probably a concession to the needs of a population whereof a large proportion cannot read print. But he who runs can read these, and the wayfaring man, though he sign his name with a cross, cannot err therein. A great eye stares you out of countenance from the window behind which your own can be tested. The "ferblantier" displays a kettle of gigantic proportions atop of a tall pole. The saddler is known by a great wooden horse collar swinging above his door. The "boulanger" hangs out a picture of a loaf and a roll, both of appetizing puffiness, and the "undertaker of funeral pomps" displays an elaborately pictured coffin, with handles and name plate complete.

But the signs, like the shops, are few and poor at St. Norbert, and soon we leave the half-deserted village behind and enter a rock wilderness, where stunted spruces share the short commons of the white-stemmed birches, those dwellers in stony and sterile places. And lo! at a turn in a long downward slope the smoke of trains and factories, and the great gleaming spires of a parish church. A puffing and snorting of engines and a whirring of wheels—a railroad hotel, where we dine—and the end of our explorings.

FACTS ABOUT TORONTO.

There Are Now 47,958 Buildings Within Its Boundaries.

Some remarkable facts of the growth of Toronto were set forth in the last report of Assessment Commissioner Forman.

The assessment for 1906 shows an increase of $20,376,245 over 1905, but when pending appeals before the Court of Revision and County Judge have been settled the increase will stand at about the twenty-five million mark. The assessment on land increased $2,392,586 and on buildings $7,257,971. The business assessment showed an increase over the old personality of $6,837,915. The increase in income assessment was $3,887,773.

The new act is responsible for 20 per cent. of the total increase. Ward Three, the business ward, shows an increase of $10,800,000, or over one-half of the total increase.

There are 47,958 buildings in the city, 16,096 dwellings are occupied by owners and 23,489 by tenants.

Company assessments increased as follows: Toronto Railway Co., $482,660; Consumers' Gas Co., $410,682; Toronto Electric Light and Incandescent Light Co., $221,552. The decrease in the Bell Telephone Co.'s assessment was $250,142 owing to the assessment being on gross receipts, instead of on superstructures, substructures, and switchboard.

The increase on the C. P. R. Telegraph Co. was $59,592; G. N. W. Telegraph Co., $53,881; G. T. R. Co., $438,877; C. P. R. Co., $355,656.

During 1905 the collections on local improvements amounted to $530,237, as compared with $516,237 in 1904. There were 6,878 transfers of property in 1905, as compared with 6,610 in 1904. The number of local improvement works during 1905 was 572, as compared with 491 in 1904.

Mr. Forman reports that 107 parcels of land have been sold by the city for $67,304.77. The taxes chargeable against the properties amounted to $37,353.28.

Flying Kite Held Up Man.

After experimenting for a number of years at Berim Breagh, Cape Breton, with flying kites, Prof. Alexander Graham Bell succeeded on the last Wednesday of 1905 in having his latest designed kite, the Frost King, rise in the air and carry a weight of 227 pounds, this including a man weighing 165 pounds and ropes and lines weighing 62 pounds. The kite itself weighs only 61 pounds making a total weight of 288 pounds. The kite rose to a height of thirty feet, and remained there steadily until photographs were taken of it. It rose gracefully and descended just as easily, remaining under perfect control the entire time. Prof. Bell expressed himself as being greatly pleased with the result of his experiment.

Kindness.

You may pulverize ice, but it is ice still, but let a sunbeam fall on it and it is soon dissolved. Abuse, however severe and humiliating, never softens men, but kindness will melt the most obdurate.

BEST IN THE WORLD.

Canada's Climate as Shown In Weather Samples From the Geological Report For 1903.

An invention sadly needed in Canada is some scheme, process or appliance by which samples of our weather can be collected and exhibited abroad. The idea of "Our Lady of the Snows" persists, and even among educated people in other lands Canada is supposed to be a bleak waste of ice and snow for several months in the year. We have lived down the reputation of being overrun by buffalo and Indians. No more can the humorous correspondent of an English newspaper describe a pack of timber wolves hunting through the streets of Winnipeg for citizens who have escaped the real estate agent. In time we may hope to live down the reputation of having the worst climate in the world. On this point Canadians are peculiarly sensitive, because they know that this climate is the very best, without any exception whatever, and to have an old lie persist, year after year, is galling in the extreme, says The Mail and Empire.

Samples of Weather.

It is all very well for Canadian journals to protest, and for visitors to admit that they were mistaken, but what is wanted is a sample of weather that can be produced instantly. Then, immigration agents in England, addressing public meetings, can reach into their suit cases and hand round a sample labeled "Toronto weather, Dec. 27, 1905," and invite referees from the audience to take off their coats and enjoy the weather. A day in May or June taken from Calgary, an October evening from Brandon, and an April morning from Nova Scotia could in turn be presented to the crowd. Competitions might be held, and prizes given for the best day, any length, best short day, and best month; also for best American-bred night, most suitable evening for lovers, coolest day in summer, driest day in fall, and mildest day in winter, also prize for best collection of registered days, never before exhibited, and a consolation prize for best general-purpose team of mornings at any time in the year. When some such process is discovered Canada will be forever vindicated, and will take her place as the home of the finest weather in the world.

The Record For 1903.

The year 1903, for which a meteorological report has just been issued, was not by any means one of our best. In parts of Ontario the winter was unusually severe, the snow unusually deep and obstructive to traffic, but a glance over the official record would dispel from any unprejudiced mind the old, false idea about Canada's polar winter. Beginning in January, we find that the weather in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories was "exceedingly mild." In this month the snow was deep in some districts, but in others, along Lakes Ontario and Erie, the ground was bare. Except at three posts—Victoria, Barrie and Ottawa—there was plenty of sunshine through January. Kingfishers, snowbirds, cranes and hawks were seen through the month.

Harbingers of Spring.

In February there was much snow in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, but little in other portions of the Dominion, while the mean temperature exceeded the average. About the middle of the month meadow larks were seen at Georgetown, and the frogs were heard piping in Victoria. March registered a mean temperature considerably below the average in British Columbia, Manitoba and the Northwest, but the reverse was true of the rest of the country. In this month the birds began to return from the south, and looking down the list we find the following feathered acquaintances back again: Swallows, bluebirds, geese, ducks, hawks, crows, plover, blackbirds, sparrows, greybirds, meadow larks, kingbirds, snipe, kingfishers, finches, flickers, robins and many more. Plowing and seeding had begun, and the crocus, snowdrops, arbutus and hepatica were in bloom. The bees hummed in Toronto. Navigation opened.

Summer and Fall.

In April the snow lingered in spots, but winter had given place to spring, and dandelions, tulips, currants, cherries, elm and peaches were in bloom. Seeding was finished, and the grass was green. On the first of May wild strawberries were in bloom at Georgetown, the Baltimore oriole had been seen, and most of the trees were in leaf. June was a rainy month, although the average all over Canada was maintained. The prairie was carpeted with roses. Thunderstorms were general in July, but the weather was not as hot as usual, for the proportion of bright, sunshiny days was smaller than the average. In Toronto the hottest day of the year reached 77.7 degrees. The mean temperature for August was below the average, and the sun remained much in the background, while the rainfall continued greater than usual in most districts.

Hottest and Coldest Points.

The highest average temperature for the year was enjoyed by Victoria, B. C., the mean there being 49.4. Several other stations in British Columbia averaged between 48 and 49 degrees. Toronto was well upon the list with 45.6. Walkerton, with 47.9, had the highest record in Ontario. Alberni, B. C., had the hottest day in the year in June, when the thermometer reached 99.2. Melfort, in the Northwest, was second on the list, with 99 degrees, in July. The hottest day in Dawson was in June, and the record was 89.5. Stony Creek, with 97 degrees, took the Ontario record, while the hottest day in Toronto was 91.5, registered in July. In the competition for lowest temperature, Good Hope, Man., was easily first, the thermometer there falling to 67 below zero. Dawson was second, with 60.8 below, one day in January.

The Best Climate In the World.

Cold days we have, and hot days, rainy days, and raw, dry and foggy, but averaging them together, there are probably less really unpleasant days in Canada than in any other place in the course of any given year. The weather suits the people of Canada, and most people who come here. There is probably less emigration from this country than from any other civilized country of equal size in the world, and one of the reasons why Canadians are loath to leave their native land is to be found in our magnificent climate.

FOSSIL CORKSCREWS

QUEER FREAKS OF NATURE THAT ABOUND IN NEBRASKA.

Gigantic Spirals of Mineral Fashioned So Mathematically as to Be Easily Mistaken at First Glance For Works of Art.

Nobody knows with certainty what the so called "devil's corkscrews" really are. They are found by tens of thousands in Nebraska, most particularly in Sioux county, and some of them are as much as forty feet in height, without counting the gigantic "roots" presently to be described. Quartz is the substance of which they are made, but how they came to be imbedded, numbers of them together, in the sandstone cliffs of that region is more than anybody can tell, unless, perhaps, one theory, to be mentioned later, is to be accepted as correct.

You are traveling, let us say, on horseback through that part of the country, and, as often happens, you see, standing out from the face of a sandstone cliff, a gigantic spiral. If, as geologists have proved, the sandstone rock be chipped away a corkscrew shaped thing of quartz is exposed to view, fashioned so mathematically as to be easily mistaken at first glance for a work of art. The white spiral may be free, as a sculptor would say, or, in other cases, may be twined about a sort of axis, as a vine would run around a vertical pole.

Somebody awhile ago gave to these spirals the name "devil's corkscrews" for want of a better and as expressive of the mystery of their origin. Scientists discussed them in vain, and many theories were formed in regard to them. There were authorities who declared they were fossil burrows excavated in tertiary times by gophers of a huge and extinct species. And, to confirm this notion, the bones of some burrowing animal were actually found imbedded in the substance of one of the "screws." This seemed to settle the matter for awhile, until the controversy was started again by the discovery of the osseous remains, under like conditions, of a small deer. Nobody could assert that a deer was ever a burrowing animal, and so that notion had to be abandoned.

Other theorists declared that the "fossil twisters," as some folks called them, represented the prehistoric borings of gigantic worms that lived in the very long ago. Yet others suggested that they were petrified vines, though it was difficult to explain how or why the "poles" on which the alleged vines seemed in many cases to have been trained had been so admirably preserved, or, for that matter, originally erected.

In the midst of so many contradictory theories the problem seemed likely to defy solution indefinitely. The one that held out longest and gained most adherents was that of the extinct gophers. It accounted for the "root"—a shapeless appendage often nearly as big as the "twister" itself and attached to the lower end of the latter—which obviously, as it seemed, had been the nest of the rodent animal, the "corkscrew" representing the spiral hole by which it made its way to the surface of the ground. What could possibly be more easy to comprehend?

Professor E. H. Barbour, however, has declared—and his decision is accepted provisionally until somebody offers a better—that the corkscrews are of vegetable origin. They are, he asserts, the fossil remains of ancient water weeds of gigantic size, which grew millions of years ago on the bottom of a vast sheet of water that covered all of Nebraska. These must have been the biggest aquatic plants that ever existed, and when the huge lake that overflowed the region in question dried up the remains of many of the plants were left behind buried in the accumulated detritus at the bottom.

In the course of time—ages after the bottom of the ancient lake had been converted into solid rock—rivers plowed their way through the land, cutting this way and that and exposing to the view of the modern traveler on the faces of the cliffs the fossil casts of the prehistoric water weeds just as they stood when they grew hundreds of thousands and probably millions of years ago. Their tissues were replaced as they decayed by silica from the water, particle by particle, and thus, as if by magical means, their likenesses have been preserved for the wonder and admiration of the present survivors on the earth.

Such is the theory now pretty well accepted by scientists in regard to the origin of the "fossil corkscrews." Possibly it is not correct, but if otherwise there is room for the exercise of anybody's imagination in the consideration of this veritable romance of the ancient history of the world.

"The Bridge" Born of Sorrow.

"My poem entitled 'The Bridge,'" said Longfellow, "was written in sorrow, which made me feel for the loneliness of others. I was a widower at the time, and I used sometimes to go over the bridge to Boston evenings to meet friends and return near midnight by the same way. The way was silent, save here and there a belated footstep. The sea rose or fell among the wooden piers, and there was a great furnace on the Brighton hills whose red light was reflected by the waves. It was on such a late, solitary walk that the spirit of the poem came upon me. The bridge has been greatly altered, but the place of it is the same."

Beware so long as you live of judging people by appearances.—La Fontaine.

FOREST RESERVES.

Latest Additions to Those of the Province of Ontario—What the Blue Book For 1904 Shows.

An interesting part of the contents of the Ontario Bureau of Forestry's report for 1904 is that relating to the increase of the permanent forest reserves of the province in that year. Two areas, 6,700 square miles in their total extent, were added to the tract which is to be retained by the Crown as a great timber nursery. In the district of Nipissing the Temagami Reserve, which comprised 2,250 square miles was extended by the addition to it of 3,700 square miles, making that reserve cover an expanse of nearly 6,000 squade miles. The new portion lies westward and northward of the original reserve, and roughly speaking, stretches from Wahnapitae River on the west to Montreal River on the east. The Mississaga Reserve is in the district of Algoma, and is for the most part in the basin of the Mississaga River. It is 3,000 square miles in extent.

Pine.

On both the new reserves pine abounds. The timber of that variety on the addition to the Temagami Reserve consist, in part of young and growing trees, and in part of trees that have attained their full growth. On the 3,700 square miles there set apart it should be possible to maintain a constantly flourishing and at the same time a constantly-productive pinery. As the trees mature they can be cut, but the old ones should not disappear more rapidly than the young ones come to their full growth. In a natural forest, guarded against fire, and tidily lumbered, the progress of reproduction should go on as it went on in past ages. Valuable as the pine timber of the Temagami extension is reported to be, that of the Mississaga Reserve appears to be much more valuable, though the area of the latter is the less. Three years ago, Mr. Whitson, of the Surveys Branch of the Crown Lands Department, made a flying trip through the tract included in the present Mississaga reserve, for the special purpose of learning something about its pine resources. He reported that he found immense quantities of that timber, estimating it in terms of board measure at 2,000,000,000 feet, all of it on territory tributary to the Mississaga River. Mr. Aubrey White, the Deputy Minister of Lands and Mines, says he will be surprised if more than two billion feet is not found there.

Other Timber.

Pine is not the only timber of commerce on the new reserves. On both there are believed to be immense quantities of hardwood of all varieties. The value of this as the perennial yielder it is possible to make of it under a wise forestry policy cannot be exaggerated. Then there are the kinds of trees out of which railway ties and telegraph posts are made—the tamaracs, hemlocks, and cedars. A class of timber that is perhaps more generally distributed than any other is that which is most in demand for pulpmaking. Spruce, jack pine, and poplar are very plentiful in both the new reserves. Already most of the pulpwood in the extension to the Temagami Reserve may be said to be disposed of. Of the 3,700 square miles of that extension 1,850 are covered by the concessions of the Sturgeon Falls Pulp and Paper Co., the Spanish River Pulp and Paper Co., and the Montreal River Pulp and Paper Co. The Government's agreements with these companies convey the right for 21 years to cut pulpwood on a margin five miles wide on each side of the main streams and their tributaries.

Perpetuating the Supply.

If there is no deforesting there will be no reforesting necessary. By judicious cutting of the matured pine and proper care of the growing pine, the two billion feet in the basin of the Mississaga can be maintained indefinitely, at two billion feet, while returning annually a good percentage on that capital plantation. Similarly the pulpwood can be perpetuated. In the agreements which the pulp companies entered into with the Government it is provided that no trees of less than six inches in diameter at the stump shall be cut. Now that the territory covered by these agreements has been brought largely into the permanent forest reserve, the companies will be more likely to co-operate for the conservation of the pulpwood supply. At the end of the 21 years during which their concession holds they will desire to renew the agreements, that is, if there is enough timber left for their purposes. It will be their own fault mainly if there is not as much pulpwood on the river margins then as there is now. There will be no one else to interfere with it, for there will be no settlers to sweep the pulpwood away. On land thrown open to settlement the pine alone is reserved. The rest of the timber is the property of the man to whom the Government issues the patent.

Value of a Reserve.

This illustrates one value of permanent timber reserves. Everybody to whom cutting rights are given under the restrictions always applicable to reserves is concerned in the maintaining of the supply. No one is constrained to clear away the timber rapidly in order to forestall settlers. In all the pulpwood agreements there is a clause reserving the Government's right to throw open to settlement any part of the territory within the concession. In the case of the Blanche River Pulp and Paper Co., the land was opened up to settlement and colonized before the company was ready to proceed. It consequently abandoned the agreement. In the two new reserves timber-cutting rights cannot be curtailed by any encroachment by settlers. As the land is said to be unfit for agriculture, there can be no better way of dealing with it than to put it to use as a permanent source of timber supply.

Spoiling a Compliment.

Earl Gray was in Guelph, says The Kincardine Review, looking at the fat cattle and listening to the poultry orchestra. When leaving he said: "I enjoyed myself very much," and Guelph has been tickled to death ever since over the compliment. But men were deceivers ever, and Earl Grey is a diplomat. Our readers will observe that it was himself he says he enjoyed when in Guelph.

D. D. G. P.'s Visit.

On Monday night Mr. G. A. Bennett, D.D.G.P. of the Sons of England, paid an official visit to the lodge at Campbellford. The District Deputy was most cordially received by the brethren of that village. Bro. F. M. Clarke, of this city, accompanied the official. At the conclusion of the lodge business a supper was served, and with addresses and songs an hour was pleasantly passed away.

PROVED IN MOUNT FOREST.

Every doctor in this town tried his best to relieve Mrs. J. Withom, of asthma; none succeeded. "For years," she states, "I was a dreadful sufferer; nothing gave relief. At times I found it necessary to have all the doors and windows open to get my breath. When in despair I heard of Catarrhozone. I used it and now am perfectly cured." This proves beyond doubt that any case of asthma is curable with Catarrhozone. No remedy so pleasant, none so absolutely certain to thoroughly cure; try Catarrhozone yourself; it's guaranteed.

Phillips vs. Belleville.

CITY CLERK MIKEL GETS A FEW THINGS OFF HIS MIND IN RELATION TO THE ABOVE CELEBRATED CASE.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—In your article in last evening's paper, upon Phillips vs. Belleville, there were some inaccuracies which should be cleared up for the citizens.

1. You omitted to mention Chief Justice Sir Willam R. Meredith among the judges who have expressed their opinions in favor of Belleville's contentions. His was one of the strongest opinions expressed.

2. You placed Hon. Mr. Justice Anglin among the judges opposed to Belleville's contention. As a matter of fact, the only opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Anglin was when he delivered the judgment of the Divisional Court, allowing the city to appeal from Hon. Mr. Justice Magee's decision and dismissing the plaintiff's motion to quash the city's appeal.

3. So that we have Hon. Chief Justice Sir W. R. Meredith, Hon. Chief Justice Falconbridge, Hon. Mr. Justice Richard Meredith, Hon. Mr. Justice Street, Hon. Mr. Justice Britton and Hon. Mr. Justice Anglin giving judgments favoring the city.

4. The effect of the decision of Chancellor Boyd and Hon. Mr. Justice McMahon was not that the city's position was wrong, but that the city should have a new trial to give the reasons we offered to give at the first trial.

5. Hon. Mr. Justice Magee found at the second trial that the Council did have a good reason for their action, which in his opinion was sufficient, and held that the city could act upon it now.

6. It, therefore, cannot be said that any judge has decided wholly directly against the city's position.

7. The reported decisions show that at least one of the judges of the Court of Appeal holds an opinion supporting the city's position.

8. Belleville did not start this litigation. The city was forced into court by the plaintiff.

9. The city asked the plaintiff to consent to go direct to the Court of Appeal, so as to save the costs of an intervening appeal to the Divisional Court, but he refused, and now, as the Divisional Court are unanimous against him, he has not the right to appeal to the Court of Appeal unless he can obtain leave from the court on a special application for same, and then only after giving security for costs and paying the cost of printing an appeal book of about 200 pages.

10. As your requests last spring to the Council to drop their appeal and pay the plaintiff's solicitors' costs (about $600, and lost the city's disbursements, about $100), fell upon deaf ears, suppose you now try urging the plaintiff to drop his appeal and pay our costs. You know he is not bringing this action for himself personally, but solely for the ratepayers, and if he succeeds he expects to make the ratepayers pay for it. Do the ratepayers want that? Of course if the plaintiff is seeking to make the defendant Caldwell pay the costs the ratepayers would not be so much concerned.

11. You say the costs which the city has to pay go to the City Solicitor. This, of course, is not correct. It is only the costs which plaintiff has to pay that goes to the City Solicitor. You seem to think there is something remarkable in the Solicitor being paid costs by the other side when the city wins. This was the case before I became City Solicitor, and in the law applicable to every municipality in the province. Surely the laborer is worthy of his hire, even a lawyer.

12. I have not been concerned in any litigation for the city in which so many ratepayers took the trouble to come to me and urge that the city should press the fight as in this case. Of course it may have been from mixed motives of antipathy against some one on the other side, but the fact remains.

BUFFALO STOCKBROKERS SUSPENDED BUSINESS

HAD A BRANCH IN THIS CITY, BUT LOCAL CONDITIONS WERE ONLY SLIGHTLY AFFECTED.

Buffalo, N.Y., Jan. 16. — The offices of William F. Dever and Company, stock brokers, Ellicott Square, were closed to-day. The force of twenty operators and clerks were paid off, and notified that their services would be required no longer. Edward Brady, manager and principal stockholder in the concern, was said to be in Boston.

No statement as to the cause of suspension could be secured at the offices in Ellicott Square. The firm did not hold membership on any of the stock exchanges, but handled a large business on margins in eighty branch offices in New York State and Canada.

W. F. Dever & Co had a branch in this city, and many wild rumors were current as to "losses" by local business men. They appear to have been greatly exaggerated. We were told this morning that the Buffalo failure would very slightly, if at all, affect local conditions.

Where they Play the Strenuous Game.

The following account of a game in the Pro. league is taken from the Michigan Soo News;

The events in the game transpired so fast that a chronological record would have required too close attention to the niceties of time-keeping. These notes from the reporter's notebook, however, will in a measure convey an impression of the fierceness manifested on both sides;

"Bruce Stuart went off for hitting his brother Hod in the face, the latter showing a bleeding wound as evidence. Hod next went off for cross-checking. Time is taken out, Holden having been hit in the eye by A. Sixsmith. Forrester went off for tripping A. Sixsmith. A second later Hall knocked out Hod Stuart with a blow on the head. Gibson sent Hall off for the remainder of the half. Shortly before the half closed, Bruce was sent to the fence for tripping A. Sixsmith. Fierce rushes and close checking marked the play at the opening of the second period. G. Sixsmith went off for throwing Lake. Hod Stuart was sent to the ice, down and out, from a rap on the head from Hall's stick. Hall was sent to the fence for five minutes. At 10.35 A. Sixsmith was compelled to leave the game. The gritty little Pittsburg captain had been worn down by his injuries in the preceding games, and was all in after the tough work of this contest. It was found in the dressing room that he had sustained a broken rib. Forrester was penalized for tripping Hod. Bruce Stuart suffered a severe injury to his knee, and time was taken out; then, on his return, he got three minutes for cross-checking Hod. Hall went off for the rest of the game for slugging Winchester, the Pittsburg goal-tender. Baird knocked out Forrester near the close of the half. There was no more scoring, and the play closed with a whirlwind finish."

Trainer Chris Clune said to The Pittsburg Press on his return home; "Captain Sixsmith is the gamest man I ever saw anywhere," said Clune. "In one of the games in the north, Hall struck him on the head with his stick, making a gash so long and deep that you could lay your entire finger in it. 'Sixey' came to me, and I fixed him up as best I could. He laughed about the hurt and went back into the game. It was not five minutes before he was back with a big welt across the face, where he had been struck. He smiled and said, 'I guess they are after me, all right.'

"The crowd is the most partisan I ever saw in my life. They would like to see visiting players killed or maimed for life. Whenever one of our men was hurt the crowd would hiss him and cheer for the man who did the dirty work.

"Joe Hall, of Portage Lake, will keep on until he kills someone, mark my word. Hall said recently that he had to play a dirty game, as he had been instructed by President McNamara, of Houghton, to win games at all hazards. Hall uses his stick all the time, and he does not care who he hits with it.

"The feeling against Hod Stuart in Houghton is something fierce. We met a man travelling for a Chicago book store. He said he had visited practically every house in Houghton and had done big business. 'When I went to a house to sell books,' said the agent, 'the first thing I did was to tell the one who came to the door that I thought Hod Stuart was a dirty rascal and that he ought to be in jail. That made a hit with them, and I sold books wherever I went.' He may have exaggerated a little, not much.

"Hockey as now played in the north is the most brutal game in existence."

Intermediates Are Scrapping.

Port Hope Guide; Cobourg intermediates, as expected, have commenced to balk. Peterboro was scheduled to play in Cobourg to-night, but at the request of Cobourg the game was called off until Friday night. Cobourg wanted the local intermediates to visit them this evening and on their refusal to do so the Cobourg management asked Secretary Hewitt's views on the matter. The Secretary very modestly suggested to Port Hope that had this request been made a little earlier he would have ordered them to play in Cobourg to-night. Had this game been ordered for this evening it is not at all likely the locals would have gone. Because Cobourg makes a hurried request for a certain night it is not necessary that it should be granted even at the orders of the O.H.A. secretary. The whole affair looks like a scheme of Cobourg's to pull off two home games and then default. They do not want to play here Wednesday night as scheduled, but are very anxious that Port Hope should visit them at once and to have Peterboro there on Friday night. According to the schedule Port Hope is to play in Cobourg Friday night and we would like to know what authority they had to arrange a game with Peterboro on this date and thus make such a bungle of the schedule. It might be well for Secretary Hewitt to look into this matter, and at the same time notify Cobourg to play according to schedule or drop out.

A Port Hope Account of Monday Night's Game.

Port Hope Guide; It seemed like old times at the rink last evening to see the hockey colors floating from every corner and the old cry, "Ontario," echoing through the building. It was the first home game for our Juniors and four hundred people turned out to see the youngsters work. The opposing team was Belleville and they were accompanied by a number of supporters, and, as usual, the Cobourgites were decked with Belleville colors, "red and white," and supported the visitors strongly as far as hooting was concerned. But it was all in vain, and the locals won out after a bitter struggle by the score of 4—3.

Unfortunately the Belleville and Port Hope uniforms are the same color, and consequently the locals appeared in the intermediate uniforms last night. Belleville took the ice first and showed themselves a pretty husky lot of chaps. The forwards were much heavier than the local line, but our defence had the advantage in weight. In the preliminary rounds the teams appeared pretty evenly matched, and the large crowd settled away to see a battle royal.

F. C. Wagborne sounded the gong at 8.25, and the locals defended the north goal. The game was not long in progress before the slushy ice began to tell on the forward lines, and both defences engaged in a lifting contest. To make things a little more comfortable "Jimmy" McLean broke away at cover point and after a nice rush scored Port Hope's first, unassisted. Both teams worked hard for the next one and just to show how easy it was to repeat the trick McLean carried the rubber down again and notched Port Hope's second goal. The Belleville line braced up considerably at this stage and made the nets bulge after a nice combination. There was only a few minutes left to play before half-time, and McLean took another spurt and made the score Port Hope 3, Belleville 1, and the bell announced half-time.

The second half opened with Port Hope pressing and McLean, after carrying the puck the full length of the rink, passed it to Mercer, who scored Port Hope's fourth. The score stood 4—1 for a long time, but Belleville notched two just before the close and the game ended 4—3 in favor of Port Hope.

The exhibition throughout was first-class, but the soft ice proved a great handicap to our light forwards. Without exaggerating, the locals handled the puck two-thirds of the time, but were unable to shoot. Time after time they carried the puck right to the goal, but the ice being so heavy they could get no speed on their shots. The whole seven are a fast bunch of hockey players, and it will take a pretty fast team to overcome them. They made a most favorable impression on this, their first appearance, and when the spectators are assured of such exhibitions, there is no doubt but what the boys will receive liberal patronage. Every man was on the job, and played hard, clean hockey.

Mutual Courtesies.

On hearing of the decisive victory of Sir Gilbert Parker at Gravesend on Monday, Colonel Ponton telegraphed him the congratulations of the old Bay of Quinte District, with which he is always identified, and yesterday received the following reply:

"Heartfelt thanks to Quinte, — Parker," showing that he deeply appreciated the remembrance of his old friends here.

The citizens of Belleville will continue to watch with pride his parliamentary career in which he will now have, probably, a better opportunity than ever of distinguishing himself, even more than he has already done.

Mr. Fallieres Is France's President.

ELECTED TO THE HIGH OFFICE AT VERSAILLES THIS AFTERNOON.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Paris, Jan. 17. — The National Assembly met at 1 o'clock this afternoon in the Congress Hall of the Royal Palace, Versailles, for the election of a President of the Republic. About 860 out of the 980 members of the Assembly were present, making 430 votes necessary to elect a new President.

Although several candidates were mentioned for the office in succession to M. Loubet, the real contest was between M. Fallieres, President of the Senate, and M. Doumer, President of the Chamber of Deputies.

The voting resulted in the election of M. Fallieres, the vote being M. Fallieres 446; M. Doumer 371.

WATER IN YOUR BLOOD.

Lots of people have thin, watery blood—they eat plenty, but don't digest. When digestion is poor, food isn't converted into nourishment—in consequence the body rapidly loses strength. To positively renew health, nothing equals Ferrozone. It excites sharp appetite—makes the stomach digest, forms life sustaining blood. Abundant strength is sure to follow. If you need more vitality, extra energy, better nerves, then use Ferrozone, the medical triumph of the age. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty chocolate coated Ferrozone tablets.

At the Carman opera house, next Friday evening, the old as well as the young will have the opportunity to see that frolicsome youth disporting himself and make life a burden to all who come in contact with him; he will illustrate new inventions in the practical joking line and amuse you in many ways; don't neglect this chance to see him.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN."

It was in the evening, when the day's work in the cotton fields was done, "Massa" had gone to bed in the darkened days of slavery, that the dusky toilers of the plantation were wont to gather round their humble huts and there hold high carnival under the pale light of the moon. Although these scenes have passed into tradition there is still a strong semblance to these interesting pastimes left in the plantation and levee pictures introduced in Al. W. Martin's big, new, spectacular revival of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which will appear at the Carman next Tuesday, Jan. 23.

22 WORKMEN ARRESTED

Included All Members of Their Council in St. Petersburg.

Police Seize Much Correspondence and Many Documents Which Are Expected to Reveal the Revolutionary Ramifications Throughout Russia—Disorders Within Sight of Tsarskoe-Selo—Banner-Bearer Murdered.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 17.—All the members of the Workmen's Council, numbering 22 persons, were arrested during Monday night. The police seized many revolutionary documents and a mass of correspondence.

The police also discovered the headquarters from which the propaganda in the army and navy has been conducted and seized important documents, including a cipher list, through which it is expected the ramifications of a wide organization will be revealde. Two girls, dentists, who were in charge of the headquarters, and a score of soldiers and sailors have been arrested.

Realizing that reforms in the army and navy must come from above, the Council of National Defence has determined upon a thorough house-cleaning, cashiering and relieving by wholesale officers who showed incompetency or culpability in the recent troubles. Seven officers of the mutinous Rostoff Grenadiers of Moscow were dropped recently, and it is expected that seventy officers of the Black Sea fleet will be tried by court-martial.

Disorders Close to the Czar.

The agrarian disorders which have broken out in the outskirts of St. Petersburg have assumed an ugly mood. The peasants have sacked the estates of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz and Prince Korsikoff and have burned the buildings on an estate in the district of Tsarskoe-Selo, almost in sight of the Emperor's palace.

The terrorist organization is including in its death roll, not only officials but the leaders of the conservative organizations.

A despatch from Smolensk, Middle Russia, says that President Koutoff of the League of Banner Bearers, formed to defend the autocracy, has been murdered at his residence, and the terrorists, who operated with the utmost boldness, and left a notice to the effect that a similar fate will befall all the members of the League of Banner Bearers.

UNITED MINE WORKERS.

President Mitchell Thinks Workers Should Share in Present Prosperity.

Indianapolis, Jan. 17.—The seventh annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America opened yesterday. Practically all of the 1,200 delegates were on hand when President John Mitchell called the convention to order.

In the hall, besides a number of coal operators, were representatives of several railroads and other coal consuming interests. The report of the credentials committee showed 1,461 local unions represented. The paid-up membership of the union is over 300,000, 41,677 having been gained in the anthracite field.

In his address President Mitchell said: "I recognize the fact that there is little sentiment and no philanthropy in the determination of our general wage agreements; however, it appears to me that inasmuch as we gave relief to our employers by accepting a lower rate of wages at a time when there was little demand for coal, and when prices were falling below a profitable margin, they should reciprocate voluntarily and share with us their present and prospective prosperity.

"And I recommend that the scale committee take these facts into consideration in the formulation of their report."

ENGINEER JONES KILLED.

Engineer Jones' body was found under the wreck.

Stormy At St. Kitts.

St. Catharines, Jan. 17.—The most violent gale of the winter has prevailed here the past twenty-four hours, and last night was accompanied by snow. The cross on the steeple of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church was hurled to the ground, and a new house in the course of erection on Maple street, demolished. In Merritton a portion of the tin roof of the Canadian colored cotton mills company was torn off.

Last Acts In Revolution.

San Domingo, Jan. 17.—The Port of Monte Cristi, on the north coast, which recently was in the hands of the revolutionists, capitulated to the Government forces yesterday, the latter guaranteeing to protect the lives and property of the rebels. The Dominican gunboat Independencia surrendered after her commander had sought refuge on one of the American warships.

Brackett Votes Alone.

Albany, Jan. 17.—The State Senate yesterday afternoon defeated by a vote of 34 to 1, the 14 Democratic Senators having been excused from voting, Senator Brackett's resolution requesting the resignation of Senator Chauncey M. Depew. Senator Brackett alone supported the resolution.

DEATH CALLS MARSHALL FIELD.

Millionaire Merchant and Leader in the Drygoods Trade of the World.

New York, Jan. 17.—Marshall Field of Chicago, millionaire merchant, and a leader in the drygoods trade of the world, died at the Holland House in this city at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon after an illness extending over more than a week, beginning with a severe cold and developing quickly into pneumonia, which affected both lungs.

Mr. Field, although 70 years old, made a fight against the disease, which the attending physicians characterised as being braver and stronger than would have been expected of a man many years his junior. Mrs. Field and other members of the family were with the merchant when he lapsed into the period of unconsciousness, which ended in his death.

The body will be taken to Chicago this morning in a special train.

Marshall Field was one of the most successful merchants of his generation, and one of the world's richest men. His wealth is estimated at from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. He was born in Conway, Mass., in 1835. His father was a farmer and Mr. Field was educated in the public schools of Conway. At the age of seventeen he began his business career as a clerk in a general country store in Pittsfield, Mass.

Philippine Tariff Bill Passes.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 17.—The Philippine tariff bill passed by the House yesterday, substantially as it came from the ways and means committee. The vote was 258 to 71. The bill admits goods, the growth or product of the Philippines Islands, into the United States free of duty, except sugar, tobacco and rice, on which a tariff of 25 per cent. of the Dingley rates is levied.

He is waiting for the transcription of the shorthand notes taken during the investigation. The charges were withdrawn against W. T. Cummings of the Peck, Benny Co., G. Boyd of the Pillow-Hersey, and A. H. Huff of the Montreal Rolling Mills.

Legislature Opens Feb. 14.

Toronto, Jan. 17.—The Ontario Legislature will commence its 1906 session on Feb. 14. There is much new legislation to be considered. Hon. Mr. Whitney would not confirm the date of the opening beyond that it would be much earlier this year than last. He said an official announcement would likely be made to-morrow or on Friday. It was intimated on reliable authority that the date would be arranged as above.

Want Increased Duties.

Middleton, N.S., Jan. 17.—The Tariff Commission were here yesterday hearing representatives from the Annapolis Valley district, who, speaking for fishing interests asked for free gasoline, increased duty on finnan haddies and fresh fish, and export duty on young herring intended for the Maine sardine factories. Increased duties were also asked on granites.

BALFOUR STILL LEADER.

"His Followers More Loyal Than Ever," Says Chamberlain.

Birmingham, Jan. 17.—(C. A. P.)—Chamberlain, in his campaign address yesterday, expressed his great regret at the defeat of Mr. Balfour. "In or out of Parliament," he exclaimed "Mr. Balfour is our leader. Now that he is out of Parliament he is our leader more than ever. There is no man to whom we look with so much confidence to restore us to our old position, when the present delusions of the people have disappeared. We, his friends and followers, who have shown him loyalty in times of prosperity, will show greater loyalty now that he is for a period to go through adversity."

A CONCILIATORY SPIRIT.

Prevails At Opening Session of Moroccan Conference—Duke of Almodovar Appointed President.

Algeciras, Spain, Jan. 17.—The delegates to the Moroccan conference began assembling shortly before 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, causing a scene of great animation. The British, French, Spanish, German and American delegations arrived almost simultaneously at the town hall, and the fact that the French and British delegations drove to the conference together was noticed and commented upon.

The conference was opened at 3 o'clock, the Duke of Almodovar, the Spanish Foreign Minister, delivering the speech of welcome. Herr von Radowitz, chief of the German mission, proposed the Duke of Almodovar as president of the conference, and the other countries represented, including the United States, seconded the proposal, with the result that the duke was unanimously elected president.

During the course of his address, the Duke of Almodovar said:

Both For the Open Door.

"The powers have clearly shown that their desire that order, peace and prosperity shall reign throughout Morocco. The Sultan, as well as the foreign Governments, desires this end, which is obtainable by introducing reforms upon the triple principle of the sovereignty of the Sultan, the integrity of his territory and equal commercial treatment, namely, the open door. Mutual respect for our reciprocal interests and a sincere desire to conciliate them must be, according to my view, our rule of conduct at this conference. Our own sentiment, as well as the expectant attitude of the entire world, dictates such a conciliatory solution."

The conference adjourned at 3.55 p. m. until to-day, after deciding to begin the next session with discussing the surveillance of contraband arms, and then take up the question of financial reforms.

When the Duke of Almodovar emphasized the necessity for the independence of Morocco and the open door he was immediately and strongly seconded by the French and German delegates.

Jap Counterfeiters Arrested.

Seattle, Wash., Jan. 17.—Three Japanese counterfeiters have been placed under arrest by a secret service officer, and hundreds of dollars' worth of spurious $5 and $10 gold pieces, with the paraphernalia used in their manufacture, captured. The batteries and some of the molds used by the coiners were made in Japan.

WHAT DO YOU CARE?

YOU VE GOT YOUR HEALTH

GREAT NATURES DO NOT DESPAIR AT DISAPPOINTMENT—THEY LOOK FOR SOMETHING ELSE TO DO.

The broad-gauged man of to-day does not get blue just because things don't always come his way unless there is something the matter with him. If he "fails down" on one proposition he immediately starts to look up another. He always looks forward and keeps on hustling. A man with his health and faculties has plenty of opportunities, and the man who gives up or even feels like it has either a small nature or some physical weakness.

Dyspepsia certainly puts the best of man out of condition for work of any kind. You cannot blame the dyspeptic for getting blue. The very nature of his disease is most depressing and calculated to deprive him of ambition, energy and hope. There is hope for him, however, certain and sure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are recognized throughout the length and breadth of the land as the one cure that's safe and sure. Their unbounded popularity—resulting from the thousands and thousands of cures they have effected, prove beyond the shadow of a doubt their greatness as a cure. Wherein lies their greatness? In the very fact that they are Nature's own simple remedy. They do the exact work in exactly the same way that the digestive fluids of the stomach do, because they are composed of exactly the same elements and possess the same properties. They relieve the weak and worn-out stomach of its burden of digestion and permit it without let or hindrance, to rest and grow sound and well. The stomach will get well quick enough in its own natural way if it is let alone. That is what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do. They not only let it alone themselves, but make the food taken into the stomach do the same.

You can satisfy yourself of the truth of this statement by putting the food you would eat into a glass jar with sufficient water and one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The process of digestion will be taken up and carried out just as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids would do it. Their action is natural and they cause no disturbance in the digestive organs. In fact, you forget you have a stomach when they begin to do their work; so mild and natural is the operation. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c a box.

TO NATIONALIZE PORTS

Recommendation of Transportation Commission.

List of the Ports to Be Made Free of All Charges Except Those For Drydocks and Elevators—Commission Reports in Favor of Extending the Intercolonial Railway to the Georgian Bay—Voluminous Report.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—The nationalization of the leading ports of Canada and making them free from all charges, save those for drydocks and elevators, is the most important recommendation in the report of the Transportation Commission which reached the hands of Hon. Charles Hyman a few days ago. The ports to which this applies are: Fort William, Port Arthur, and Mission River on Thunder Bay, Depot Harbor, Midland, Port Colborne, Kingston, Montreal, Quebec, St. John, Halifax, Sydney, Vancouver, Victoria, the Pacific terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the terminus of the Canadian Northern.

Extend the Intercolonial.

The commission reports in favor of extending the Intercolonial to Georgian Bay, which would stimulate the export trade from the ports of St. John and Halifax.

Important improvements are suggested in the harbors of Toronto and Montreal. Many of the former have already been anticipated by the Government and are under way. The improvements in the case of Toronto depend upon ceasing to empty sewage into the bay and the contemplated diversion of the outflow of the Don into Ashbridge's Bay.

Late Mr. Bertram's Work.

The report is a voluminous one, of some 160 pages, in which the experienced hand of the late Mr. John Bertram may be traced. Mr. Robert Reford is the only original member of the commission who signs the report. Mr. Bertram was summoned away by death before he could complete the important work to which he had placed his hand, and Mr. Fry of Quebec resigned some time ago. Associated with Mr. Reford in the preparation of the report were Messrs. J. H. Ashdown and Bell, Secretary, of Winnipeg.

POWER OF A THOUGHT.

Dr. Osler's Suicide Theory Blamed For Fifty Deaths.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 17.—On Dr. Osler, noted for his "old age suicide" theory, is placed the blame for fifty suicides in Cleveland last year. Out of eighty-three cases of self-destruction in this city during 1905, fifty of those who killed themselves were past the age of forty years.

In commenting upon this fact, shown by the annual report of the health department for 105, Health Officer Friedrich said yesterday:

"Many of these, on reading the opinion of Dr. Osler concerning the age when men passed the period of usefulness and his theory regarding their being put out of the way when the period of usefulness was over, become despondent."

Bad Fire at Beachville.

Woodstock, Jan. 17.—A serious fire occurred between 3 and 4 o'clock yesterday morning at the farm of Smith Brothers, on the gravel road, Beachville. The flypaper shop conducted by the brothers containing printing and cutting machines, etc., with 600 cases of finished goods, valued at $3,000, were destroyed. The barn adjoining also went up in flames, containing fourteen valuable registered York brood sows and several others; registered Ayrshire cattle, horse, implements, etc., valued at $2,000; a kennel of four valuable collies was also destroyed. There is no insurance.

Insurance Policy Cancelled.

Kingston, Jan. 17.—The City Clerk was notified yesterday morning by the Union Society of England, that the policy held on the city property would be cancelled on Jan. 24, and enclosing a cheque for $456.08 rebate for the expired term of the policy. The insurance in question was for $45,000 on city buildings, fire halls, fair buildings, etc. It was taken out on Sept. 13, 1904, and renewed on the same day in 1905. The premium was $717.55. The present tariff rate would be about $150 more this year than the city was paying the company.

Business Districts Wiped Out.

St. Louis, Jan. 17.—A special from Russellville, Ark., says that fire which broke out there Monday night wiped out the entire business district and entailed an aggregate loss of $200,000.

Van Wert, O., Jan. 17.—Convoy, a town of 600 inhabitants, eight miles west of here, was almost wiped out by fire early yesterday. A large number of business places and residences were burned. The losses will probably aggregate $75,000.

Power Companies Agree.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—An understanding has been reached between the rival water-power interests in Hull and Ottawa in an agreement that each shall be entitled to one-half of the available supply of water for power purposes, and both sides will agree upon a competent engineering official to act as an umpire in any disputes that may occur.

Robbed by Friend.

London, Jan. 17.—(C. A. P.)—David Jones, who arrived in Liverpool Friday, from Canada, returned on purpose to take the balance of his family to Canada, was robbed of money, jewelry and clothing to the value of £150 by a Liverpool lad he had befriended. The lad was arrested, and a portion of the money recovered.

Diamond Wedding.

Cornwall, Jan. 17.—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kyle of North Winchester, recently celebrated their Diamond wedding. Both were born in County Antrim, Ireland, and came to Canada in their childhood.

Still King In Birmingham.

"People's Joe" Carried His Own Seat by Increased Majority.

Solidly Conservative In All the Seven Districts—Tariff Reform Leader's Majority is 5,079—Sir A. Conan Doyle Fails to Defeat T. L. Shaw in Hawick Burghs—Dr. MacNamara, a Canadian, Increases His Majority.

London, Jan. 18.—(C. A. P.)—The following is a summary of the political situation at midnight:

Total seat	670
Elections held	324
Liberals elected	169
Unionists	74
Laborites	29
Nationalists	52
In the last House for same seats:
Liberals	83
Unionists	183
Laborites	6
Nationalists	52

Chamberlain Still King.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain is still king in Birmingham. Not only did he carry his own seat by an increased majority at the elections yesterday, but his candidates swept the other seven divisions as well by aggregate majorities of thirty thousand after one of the stiffest fights in history. A solid Conservative Birmingham sends forth a ray of light into the darkness which otherwise continues to enshroud the party.

Chamberlain's Increased Majority.

A strenuous campaign was prosecuted in West Birmingham by Mr. R. L. Outhwaite, an Australian, prominent in labor circles; but he succeeded in polling only 2,094 votes, against Mr. Chamberlain's 7,173. Thus the tariff reform leader has a majority of 5,079, compared with 4,275 received at the last contest in 1895.

Sir B. Stone's Decreased Lead.

In two other divisions Liberals and Laborites united. In the east the prospect was most hopeful, but the result shows the majority of Sir Benjamin Stone reduced from 2,154 to 585 by J. Holmes, Laborite. Jesse Collings retains his majority almost intact after the attack of J. B. Glasier, Laborite. In North Birmingham the Conservative majority increased over five hundred.

Tories Lose London Seats.

Otherwise the tide against the Conservatives shows little abatement. They scored one more gain, winning at Maidstone, but lost 12 seats, in London and 10 in the boroughs. Several counties polled yesterday, but the returns will not be announced till to-day.

A Great Showing.

London returns are almost complete. Out of 59 seats the Liberals carry 36. In 1900 they carried eight. The Laborites carried four.

In North Camberwell Dr. MacNamara, a Canadian, was again successful, increasing his majority from 1,336 to 2,817. A curious contest was waged at North Paddington, where Sir Henry Burdett ran as an Independent Conservative because neither straight party candidate was British-born. He got 817 votes.

Buxton and Shaw Returned.

Two more Ministers were returned. Sydney Buxton doubled his majority in Poplar. Sir A. Conan Doyle failed to defeat T. L. Shaw, Lord Advocate for Scotland, in Hawick burghs. Hr. Henniker Heaton carried the tariff reform banner to success at Canterbury.

Laborites Have Off Day.

The Laborites did not do so well yesterday, although polling big vote. They held their own in two ridings and gained one aside from their defeats in Birmingham. A Labor candidate came third in Portsmouth, with 8,172 votes. In Wakefield Labor came second, with 2,086 votes, there being a Liberal in the field. In a three-cornered fight at Wigan, Labor was also second, securing 2,205 votes.

Liberal Gains 88.

Liberal gains to date aggregate 88. Conservative gains 2. Labor 23. The standing of the parties now: Liberals, 169; Laborites, 29; Conservatives, 74; Nationalists, 52.

A Boom For Chamberlain.

What looks like the beginning of a boom for Mr. Chamberlain as leader of the Conservatives, is started by The Morning Post. It says Birmingham has begun the work of reconstruction of the party and refers to Mr. Chamberlain as the "Greatest living statesman."

While no direct mention is made of Mr. Balfour, it declares that the Birmingham result will bring regret to those who have endeavored to strike a compromise between tariff reform and existing conditions. Mr. Chamberlain has proved beyond question that the British people demand a definite expression of their convictions, not a theoretical exposition of the advantages of two-mindedness. The party may well ask itself whether a similar appeal might not be met with a similar response in Manchester and other towns where faint hearts have failed to win the people's favor."

By Acclamation on Wednesday.

Yesterday's acclamations were: Liberal—Yorkshire (Cleveland)—H. L. Samuel, acclamation; no change; last majority, 2,036.

Montgomeryshire (Wales)—D. Davies, acclamation; no change; last majority, 264.

Unionist—Antrim, South—C. C. Craig, acclamation; no change; last majority, 849.

Irish Nationalists—Longford, South—Hon. Edward Blake, acclamation; no change.

Mayo, North—C. O. Kelly; acclamation; no change.

Roscommon, South—J. P. Hayden; acclamation; no change.

Donegal, South—Swift, J. G. Swift MacNeill; acclamation; no change.

Longford, North—J. P. Farrell, acclamation; no change.

Kildare—Dennis McBride; acclamation! no change.

Sligo, South—John O'Dowd; acclamation; no change.

Tipperary, North—Hogan; acclamation; replaces P. J. O'Brien; no change.

Waterford, West—J. J. Shee; acclamation; no change.

Birr—M. Reddy; acclamation; no change.

Kerry, South—J. P. Bolland; acclamation; no change.

Galway, East—John Roche; acclamation; no change.

Carlow—John Hammond; acclamation; no change.

Tariff Reform Not the Cause.

Everywhere the great changes are regarded as a revolution, portending big changes in the future. In England discussion as to the causes of the debacle has begun, and several of the victorious and defeated candidates have been telling how it happened. Liberals claims that free trade is swaying the question in their behalf. No Unionists have yet placed the blame on tariff reform. They affirm that Chinese labor and education, together with the opinion it was time for a change, have brought about the change. They profess to believe that tariff reform is still the winning policy.

Sir George Bartley, defeated at Islington, says: "Far from defeating me, tariff reform was one of the factors tending the other way."

Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.—Burke.

The Intercolonial Railway Management.

AN UNHEALTHY EXHIBIT.

The report of the Intercolonial Railway operations for the year ending 30th of June last, has just been published and presents a not very favorable year's business. On the contrary it shows that the Dominion, through political "grafting" and extravagant management is being tied to the tune of about $2,000,000 a year over and above its earnings. This, it must be borne in mind, does not include the interest upon the cost of the road to the country.

The year's operations, as per the official report, gives the following result:—

Working expenses ...	...$8,508,820
Revenue from tariff ...	6,783,522
Loss on operations ...	$1,725,303

This, too, in a year of extraordinary prosperity, when every other railway in the Dominion have made records of net profits over gross earnings; why then should the Government railway of Canada be unable to earn enough to pay running expenses, and prevent a draft upon the revenue of the country to the extent of some $2,000,000 per annum. Instead of paying running expenses for every dollar earned, there was spent in some way or other $1.25. This, too, in the face of the fact that the Intercolonial is a good railway, running through a good traffic producing country, yet it presents a record that is not only a disgrace to the country, but an absolute danger.

The loss on operations, it must be borne in mind, in considering this question, does not represent the only drain of the road upon the country's resources. There was paid during the twelve months, out of the national treasury, "chargeable to capital," on the pretence of improving it and fitting it to do its non-paying business, a further sum of $4,755,577. The total cost of the road to the country was thus increased by the end of the fiscal year to $71,491,512.

The accounts of the road therefore stand as follows:

Loss on operation	...$1,725,303
Interest on cost, not earned, say	2,250,000
Expended on improvements	4,755,577
Total cost over receipts	$8,730,880

The Intercolonial is worse than bankrupt. Its management as shown by the facts in the public accounts is a crime against the country, which is annually becoming more serious.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The tax collection problem is an interesting one to all of our citizens who have the interests of Belleville at heart. Discussing the matter last evening, a prominent citizen drew The Intelligencer's attention to a very peculiar state of affairs. It seems that, at present, the city by-law provides that, if a ratepayer does not pay his taxes by a certain date, he shall pay interest at the rate of five per cent. Not five per cent. per annum, mind you, but five per cent. altogether, whether he is behind three months or three years, as, according to Ald. Marsh's recent letter, some people are.

It will readily be seen that this arrangement would allow unscrupulous people (if there were any in Belleville), an opportunity to make money by not paying their taxes, for, if they have passed the date when the five per cent. interest rule came into force, they, knowing the interest charge would grow no bigger, would leave their money where it was, perhaps, drawing good interest, and laugh in their sleeve at other citizens who were afflicted with the old-fashioned idea that a civic debt called for honest settlement quite as honorably and quite as promptly as a private debt.

Attention was drawn to this matter by ex-Mayor Johnson, when he was in the Council, and he advocated certain changes in the by-law, which, however, were never made. It will not take anybody long to see that, as matters are at present, certain of our citizens, who pay their taxes promptly, are bearing, not only their own burdens, but also a good share of the burdens of those who do not pay. The question may fairly be asked, how long is this state of affairs going to be allowed to continue? Of course, the answer may be made that the law provides a remedy. So it does, but officials cannot always work on hard and fast lines. There may be cases where to issue a warrant would mean the closing up of an industry and the working of hardship to many innocent people. This, it will be understood, may be other imaginary cases, too, may be other imagining cases, too, where it would not be wise to adopt stringent measures, and Tax Collectors have hearts, we presume, just like other people. But this fact does remain, that business is business, and that people who withhold payments from the city should be compelled to pay the same rate of interest on them that would be demanded by a private business institution. This matter demands the attention of our civic legislators, and the Intelligencer congratulates Ald. Marsh on the fact that he has taken the initiative in putting a stop to a most unjust condition of affairs.

Mayor Sulman is out in a new stunt. He is now second vice-president of the East Hastings Agricultural Association. It will be fine to see His Worship next September, with a red ticket on, judging pumpkins and fancy work.

The East Hastings fair directors are well satisfied with the way Belleville treated them last year. It does not appear, to a wayfaring man, that they have any very robust kick coming. With proper buildings erected, and the certainty that it will be held in this city for another ten years, the fair should be improved and made very successful. People who have studied the situation are unanimous in the belief that there is a good field for it in this city. Efforts should be made, before the next fair comes off, to secure a few attractions of more interest to city people, a feature which will please the patrons and also pay the management.

PRESBYTERIANS HOLD THEIR ANNUAL MEETINGS.

ENCOURAGING OUTLOOK FOR ST. ANDREW'S AND JOHN ST. CHURCHES IN THIS CITY.

ST. ANDREWS.

The annual congregational meeting of St. Andrew's Church was held last evening and was largely attended.

At 6.30 tea was served by the ladies.

At 8 o'clock the meeting was called to order. After devotional exercises by the Pastor, Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, Col. Lazier, chairman of the Board of Managers, was called upon to preside.

The reports from the various branches of the church were presented, and these were of a most encouraging nature.

The total receipts from all sources during the year amounted to $5,285. During the year fifty-one united with the church on profession of faith, thirty-five of whom were from the Sabbath School, and twelve united by certificate, making a total increase of sixty-three. Ten certificates of disjunction were granted through removals, and four were called away through death, in all fourteen, leaving a net increase for the year of forty-nine. The present membership of the church is 276.

The Sabbath School held 49 sessions during the year, and was in charge of five officers and 21 teachers, who took an active and conscientious interest in its management. The average attendance of scholars was 139 out of a total enrollment of 194, the average collection for running expenses being $0.72. In addition the sum of $33.00 was raised for Schemes of the Church, and for other purposes $64.79—a total of $272.07 in all.

A suitable resolution referring to the death of Mr. John Bell, K. C., was adopted.

The matter of erecting a suitable shed for horses was left in the hands of the Board of Managers.

The office-bearers for the year selected were as follows:

JOHN ST.

The good people of John St. Presbyterian Church assembled in large numbers last evening to receive the annual statement of the church's finances and review the work of the past year, which was in many respects one of the most successful in the history of this congregation.

The reports presented by the various church organizations were of a most satisfactory nature, showing the deep interest taken by the people of John St. in all matters pertaining to the welfare of the Presbyterian cause.

The church treasurer's report, which is always interesting, was particularly so on this occasion, for, after providing for all current expenses, the year closed with a substantial surplus in the church treasury, and while this is decidedly satisfactory, still John Street's reputation for liberal giving has not been established because of money raised and spent within the local organization, but rather upon the higher basis of its givings to assist the general mission work of the church, and its contribution by way of a free-will offering for this purpose. Last year reached the highest point in the history of the congregation, the sum of $809.50 being contributed.

After the reception and discussion of the various reports the meeting elected Church Trustees and Board of Managers for the year 1906, as follows;

Trustees of Church Property. — Thos. Ritchie, R. Templeton, Jos. Little, D. H. Coleman.

Why Refer to Doctors

Because we make medicines for them. They know all about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, so they prescribe it for coughs, colds, bronchitis, weak lungs, consumption. They trust it. Then you can afford to trust it. Sold for over sixty years.

Board of Managers—W. S. Morden, Thos. Ritchie, W. S. Cook, Jos. Little, Wm. H. Robinson, A. Stratton, W. H. McGregor, Geo. Boyle, A. O. Marshall, A. McGinnis, S. G. Sprague.

Refreshments served by the ladies of the congregation brought to a close one of the most interesting and satisfactory annual meetings in the history of John St. Church.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"PECK'S BAD BOY" TO-MORROW NIGHT.

Of all old friends none are more welcome than Henry Peck, "Peck's Bad Boy." This good-natured lad and his mischievous pranks will always hold a warm place in the hearts of the old and young. For years he has amused and entertained the American public, and he comes now as full of merriment as ever. A bright galaxy of specialty artists adds to the general excellence of the performance, and nothing but the highest praise is heralded all along the route and crowded houses testify to the increasing popularity of the Leroy J. French's Peck's Bad Boy Company, which comes to the Carman to-morrow evening.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN."

Al. W. Martin's Greater "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the mammoth aggregation that comes to the Carman next Tuesday, Jan. 23, is America's production and has been unanimously endorsed by the press and public. Al. W. Martin's revival of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has always attracted more attention than any of the other early bookings, owing to the fact that it is the largest offering stageland ever has shown of this grand old play. Don't miss this great show.

The Pastor's Robe

A story is told of the late Dr. Peddie, a Scotch minister, to whom his congregation had presented a pulpit robe. He had never worn a robe, and, after acknowledging the gift, he said he would wait in the vestry five minutes after service to hear any objectors to the innovation. Nobody appeared but one old lady, who, on being asked what her objections were, answered that she had read the epistles of St. Paul and could not find any reference to the apostle wearing a gown. "What epistle did you read?" asked the doctor. "From Romans to Hebrews," answered the old lady. "Well, Janet," said her minister, "I have read from Romans to Hebrews also, and I could never find any reference to the apostle wearing the breeks. What would you think if you saw me going into the pulpit without breeks?"

The Romance of a Genius.

(Toronto World.)

On Saturday night, in a public-house vestibule in England there might have been seen a frail, care-marked girl fiddler playing for the semi-charitable coppers of the jolly fellows around the bar. Instead of that, the girl was delighting with the witchery she drew out of her violin a first-class audience in the greatest hall in Toronto.

On Saturday night, in a Devonshire village there might have been seen a bricklayer touching his cap to the parson in whose presence he would meekly sing in church next day. Instead of that the bricklayer was observed sitting in a box, the highly competent appreciator of the genius handling the bow.

Marie Hall, the one-time street fiddler, and Watkin Mills, the village bricklayer, who sang in the country choir, were in Toronto Saturday night. They are touring a continent, receiving the unstinted applause of the best musical culture of the new world, as they have received the praise of the best qualified critics of the old. What might the story of these two gifted people have been if fortune had continued to be unkind to latent talent.

Will Hold Dairy Meetings.

Interviewed by a Peterboro reporter at the close of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's convention, R. G. Murphy is reported as saying:

"There were considerably more delegates than were present at the gathering in Brockville last year, but not quite as many as were gathered in Belleville in 1904. We received during the session here 305 members fees, $1 each, and, out of this number 220 are new members. I consider that a pretty good showing and I have no fault to find.

"We will make a radical departure next fall and in all local dairy centres will hold dairy meetings which will replace some of the supplementary gatherings of Farmers' Institutes. These meetings will be under the supervision of Mr. Publow, of Kingston, chief instructor, and I think will do a great deal to arouse interests in dairying centres throughout the east."

Christmas at Nelson, B C.

The following clipping is from a Nelson, B.C., paper, and refers to the little daughter of a former well-known resident of this city, ex-Alderman Thos. Luscombe. Mrs. Luscombe also was an old Belleville girl, Miss M. Clement, a daughter of the late Joseph Clement:

"The Christmas entertainment at the Baptist church last evening was a perfect success. The church was crowded, and adults as well as children enjoyed themselves to the full. An excellent programme was presented, including songs by Mrs. Shanks, and a recitation by Miss Agnes Luscombe, aged three and a half years. Santa Claus' Workshop was thrown open at last. It was concealed in the baptistry. The open doors revealed the receptacle prettily decorated and full of appropriate and attractive gifts for all the children. The entertainment lasted about two hours and left not a dull minute."

Where the Apostles Rest

(Milwaukee Sentinel.)

Church authorities state that the remains of the apostles of Christ are now in the following places:

Seven in Rome, namely, Peter, Philip, James, and the Less, Judas, Bartholomew, Matthias and Simon. There are three in the Kingdom of Naples—Matthew (at Salerno), Andrew (at Amalfi), and Thomas (at Ortano). One is in Spain—James the Greater, whose remains are at St. Iago de Compostella. Of the body of St. John the Evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no knowledge. The evangelists Mark and Luke are also in Italy—the former at Venice and the latter at Padua. St. Paul's remains are also believed to be in Italy. Peter's are, of course, in the Church of Rome, which is called after him, as are those of Simon and Jude. Those of James the Less and Philip are in the Church of the Holy Apostles. Bartholomew's in the church on the island in the Tiber called after him. Matthias' are in the Santa Maria Magoire, under the great altar of the renowned basilica.

Early Closing

At the annual meeting of the Belleville branch of the Evangelical Alliance, held in the Baptist Church on Friday evening, Jan. 12, 1906, the following resolution was unanimously adopted;

"Whereas, owing to the custom of our citizens of trading late on Saturday nights, our merchants are compelled to keep their places of business open until a late hour on those nights;

And whereas such late closing frequently involves the desecration of the Sabbath, by necessitating the delivery of goods after 12 p.m., besides depriving both merchants and operatives of the comforts of the Day of Rest and the privileges of worship, through their excessive weariness;

Be it resolved, That we respectfully urge our merchants to close their shops not later than 9 p.m. on Saturday evenings. And further, that we urge our citizens to aid the merchants in this movement, by making their purchases as early on Saturdays as possible.

OLD PETERBORO LADY DEAD.

WAS ALLEGED TO HAVE REACHED THE GREAT AGE OF 111 YEARS.

Peterboro Examiner: Undoubtedly the oldest inhabitant of Peterboro passed away yesterday afternoon, in the person of Mrs. William Badge, whose demise occurred at the Protestant Home, at the alleged age of one hundred and eleven years.

For four years the deceased has been an inmate of the Protestant Home, where her declining days were cheered by the companionship and love of her husband, himself beyond the four score mark, and ministered to by the benevolent hands of Miss Fraser, and her careful and painstaking assistants. She sat there all the time, securely fastened in a large arm chair, unconscious of what was passing around her, without strength to hold herself erect, and with her mental faculties impaired to an equal extent. It was a pitiable ending to a life that in its earlier years was bright and happy, and surrounded by all the comforts of a joyful home.

According to the best available authority she was born in England a century and eleven years ago. There she also met, loved and married, her husband, who now survives her, and is also passing his last years in the Home. Mr. and Mrs. Badge resided for many years at Ida, Victoria County, after their removal to Canada, and came to the Home about four years ago. Several children reside in England.

The only data available in regard to the almost incredible age Mrs. Badge is said to have reached is the statement of her husband, which is, however, corroborated by a jug, presented to her at the age of eighteen years, and bearing the date and circumstance of the presentation.

PROVED IN MOUNT FOREST.

Every doctor in this town tried his best to relieve Mrs. J. Withom, of asthma; none succeeded. "For years," she states, "I was a dreadful sufferer; nothing gave relief. At times I found it necessary to have all the doors and windows open to get my breath. When in despair I heard of Catarrhozone. I used it and now am perfectly cured." This proves beyond doubt that any case of asthma is curable with Catarrhozone. No remedy so pleasant, none so absolutely certain to thoroughly cure; try Catarrhozone yourself; it's guaranteed.

FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

HOW LAZY SCHOOLBOYS ARE PUNISHED IN TIBET.

The queerest punishment for poor scholars is found in Tibet. A priest dressed in the most gorgeous robes of yellow silk, with his mitre on his head, will hear two boys recite. He questions them gravely. One recites pretty well. The other one has been lazy and not studied enough. Woe unto him! The master makes him get upon his hands and knees, a cloth is thrown on his back—he is now supposed to be a horse.

The good boy gets upon his back The horse is spurred and kicked and cuffed and galloped around the room until he is driven back to the teacher. The good boy than dismounts and the questions begin anew.

These little folks in Tibet have the queerest sort of manners as well as punishments. When one meets another, instead of greeting him with some words equivalent to our "good morning," the Tibetan youngster runs out his tongue in a fashion which we would consider very rude. If he wishes to be overpolite he will uncover his head and scratch his right ear at the same instant.

Lindsay, Jan. 17.—The second and last day of the Lindsay ice races was a huge success. The weather was clear and moderately cold, in marked contrast to the sleet and slush of the opening day. A large crowd assembled at the Agricultural Park to witness the events. Every race was well contested, and the spectators seemed to be well satisfied with the day's sport. Starter Frank Smith, of Buffalo, officiated to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

SPORTING NOTES.

Peterboro beat Cobourg in the intermediate series on the latter's ice on Tuesday night. The game was a very close and exciting one, the score at half-time being 1-0 in favor of Colourg, the full score being 3.1 in favor of Peterboro.

There is a lot of local interest in the match between Picton and Belleville juniors in this city to-morrow night. Both teams are fast and in fine condition, and the game should be a fast one.

The local curlers have been getting in some good practise for their first game, which will be played in this city to-morrow night, weather permitting. Napanee will be the opposing club.

Peterboro has a hockey club called the "Suicides." They must play sudden death games.

Peterboro Review: "There goes the $40 a week man," said one of the spectators when Whitcroft was illuminating the rafters with one of his brilliant rushes.

From 5 to 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon a hockey match was played between the Shamrock and West Belleville teams. The latter won by a score of 6 to 4.

WATER IN YOUR BLOOD.

Lots of people have thin, watery blood—they eat plenty, but don't digest. When digestion is poor, food isn't converted into nourishment—in consequence the body rapidly loses strength. To positively renew health, nothing equals Ferrozone. It excites sharp appetite—makes the stomach digest, forms life sustaining blood. Abundant strength is sure to follow. If you need more vitality, extra energy, better nerves, then use Ferrozone, the medical triumph of the age. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty chocolate coated Ferrozone tablets.

As It Was In the Beginning.

"I wonder how graft originated?" said the studious man.

"Away back in the garden of Eden," answered Senator Sorghum, "man was a grafter at the outset. Adam couldn't even let Eve enjoy an apple without getting a rakeoff."

Generous.

"Some men say," remarked the beautiful heiress, "that I have no heart."

"Oh, that doesn't matter!" replied the poor but willing youth. "I'll give you mine."

THE ROOT OF NEURALGIC HEADACHE

Is an irritable condition of the nerves caused by cold. Relief comes quickly from Nerviline, the great pain reliever of to-day. "I consider Nerviline a magical remedy for neuralgia," writes Mrs. E. G. Harris, of Baltimore. "But I never worry if Nerviline is in the house. A few applications never yet failed to kill the pain. I can also recommend Nerviline for stiffness, rheumatism and muscular pains." In use nearly fifty years; try Nerviline yourself.

INTO HEART OF AFRICA

STORY OF A JOURNEY IN A RAILROAD "TRAIN DE LUXE."

From Cape Town Past Historic Battlefields Over the Tawny Veldt of the Transvaal to the Famous Victoria Falls of the Zambesi River—Mining a Great Industry—Race Problem an Acute One.

At the urgent invitation of the South African Association for the Advancement of Science and of the Colonial Governments in South Africa it was decided nearly two years ago to hold the 1905 meeting of the association in Cape Town and Johannesburg. The Colonial Governments set aside generous sums toward defraying the expenses of the general and sectional officers and certain guests, who were to be included in the "official party." Sixteen of these foreign guests, including four from the United States, accepted the invitation and made the long journey, writes Henry S. Carhart, one of the latter, in The Chicago Tribune.

Early on the morning of Aug. 15 the mail steamship Saxon landed a party of about two hundred members of the association on one of the big docks at Cape Town. The morning train de luxe was drawn up alongside to carry passengers and mail to Johannesburg, forty-five hours away.

It was late winter in the southern hemisphere. The nights were still cold, the temperature falling nearly to the freezing point, though the midday sun was hot and the air balmy. At night the far-famed southern cross hung low in the southwestern sky; by day the sun coursed across the heavens from right to left to an observer facing the north. A certain confusion was felt about one's orientation in view of the fact that the north side of a building must be sought for the sun, and the south for a shelter from its rays.

Cape Town's Sentinel Mountain.

Table mountain rises majestically more than 3,500 feet at the back of Cape Town. Toward the sea its sides are precipitous and treeless, while its lower slopes on the land side have been planted with broad, flat topped pines and several varieties of eucalyptus or gum trees. Camelias, azaleas, and other subtropical shrubs were already in bloom. The white calla lily growing wild along the railway and in the fields, the beautiful "silver leaf" glistening in the sun, the "kaffir boom," still leafless but covered with bright scarlet flowers, and the vermilion bracts of the beautiful poinsettia, made a winter scene unfamiliar to eyes accustomed to the northern temperate zone.

At Durban, the port of Natal, 800 miles from the cape, the flora is still more tropical. Pineapples, bananas, and oranges grow in abundance; also tea, sugar cane, and tobacco. This is the land of the Zulus, the finest physical specimens of the native population. In Durban these husky fellows with bare shining legs and heads adorned with pairs of horns pull their light jinrikishas and carry on a vigorous competition with cabs.

By Historic Battlefields.

The journey overland and far into the interior began at Durban. Four special trains, made up of corridor cars, a dining car, and a luggage van, crawled slowly up the great incline with innumerable twists and turns, and up grades frequently as steep as one in thirty. The battlefields of Colenso and Ladysmith and the cities of Johannesburg and Pretoria were visited. Bloemfontein, Kimberley, Buluwayo, Victoria Falls, Salisburg, and Umtali in eastern Rhodesia, and finally Beira in Portuguese East Africa followed in rapid panoramic succession and with attractions of absorbing interest.

Over all this distance of more than 3,000 miles the party was taken in special trains through the courtesy and chiefly at the expense of the Colonial Governments, without an accident of any kind and with a punctuality that would do credit to most American trunk lines. The speed was not great nor were the appointments elegant, but barring the sand and occasional midday heat these long railway journeys were made with comparative comfort.

The physical features of South Africa are not understood generally in America. A narrow foreshore, 500 or 600 feet above the sea, extends along the Indian Ocean from Cape Town northeasterly, broadening toward Durban and Lorenzo Marquez. This strip is well watered and highly productive. Behind it rises the coastal mountain range, which separates the coast terrace from the high tableland of the interior. This tableland or veldt rises from 3,000 to nearly 6,000 feet above the sea and forms two-thirds of the great subcontinent of South Africa.

This high plateau with its mountain range constitutes the dominant feature in the physiography of South Africa. An area of some 700,000 square miles of this great upland is recognized as a desert region; over the remainder the annual rainfall ranges from ten to thirty-three inches, most of it falling within a period of ninety days. The remainder of the year is dry; most of the streams dry up, and the stunted trees and shrubs have a desperate struggle for existence.

The veldt is like our Arizona without Arizona's possibilities for irrigation. Here and there in a little valley or kloof in the hills is a spring, and there also is the isolated farmhouse, with its garden and fringe of trees, a veritable winter oasis.

Velt Like a Tawny Lion.

The high veldt is sandy and arid, though covered in varying degrees with tufts of coarse grass. The general aspect at the time of our visit, before the beginning of the summer rains, was that of yellowish sand, the color of a tawny lion. The soil is red and is honeycombed almost everywhere with the runways of myriads of white ants. Ant hills, varying in diameter from one foot to six, or even ten, in many places stud the landscape as thickly as haycocks in a meadow.

The veldt is not a dead level, but is rolling and relieved here and there by rounded kopjes (pronounced copies) and flat topped hills or table mountains. In Bechuanaland at night the appearance of the vast veldt was like that of the sea. The motion of the train gave to the undulating plateau the semblance of long, rolling waves silently disappearing behind us.

The high veldt of South Africa has not thus far proved valuable for agricultural purposes. Wheat might grow in many places if it were immune to rust during the summer rains. The climate is too dry for Indian corn, though the natives cultivate "mealies," a kind of maize. The most hopeful outlook of the veldt is for grazing; but the disasters of the Boer war have been followed by the plagues of rinderpest and "the red water," and these have nearly destroyed the industry of cattle raising.

The people there are not an agricultural people. It is stoutly maintained that the white man cannot engage in any manual labor, except the skilled trades, without bringing himself down to the level of the natives. The breeding of cattle for milk and beef is almost unknown; the aim appears to be to raise oxen for trekking purposes, and a good many are required, since the usual complement for a trekking team is sixteen oxen.

The practise of agriculture in South Africa is entirely different from that in Europe and America; and the only type of white man thus far developed who has succeeded in winning a living from the soil is the Boer.

Mining the Great Industry.

At present there is only one great industry in South Africa—namely: mining. At Johannesburg the source of wealth is the Rand gold banket, a reef forty-three miles long and already explored and measurably exhausted to a great depth. In Pretoria and Kimberley the industry is diamond mining. These have brought great wealth to a few and have furnished employment to many thousands. There are still other fields which promise well for small companies. "Kaffirs" and the "De Beers" shares possess more or less of the spectacular element, but the development of other areas will do more for the advancement of South Africa than these great corporations.

South Africa is lamentably deficient in most of the means for supplying her own wants. Nearly all manufactured articles except sugar and brick are imported. Portland cement at Salisbury costs $15 a barrel, but no cement had been made in South Africa up to the time of our visit. The reason given for the backwardness of the colonies in this respect is the high price of skilled labor. But until this deficiency is removed no great prosperity can be looked for.

Another desideratum is confederation among the British Colonies. It is absurd to have so many distinct centres of government without any federal authority. Each Colony has its own postal department and postage stamps; each has its own railway, and there is already evidence of lack of co-operation, with resulting hardship, both to the railways and the towns in the interior.

Race Problem an Acute One.

The race problem is an acute one just now in the Transvaal, and the residual ill feeling between Britain and Boer appears to be the easiest to solve. There are perhaps half as many Mohammedans from India in the South African Colonies as there are whites. These are not regarded favorably by white settlers.

Then the mining companies at Johannesburg have imported nearly 50,000 Chinese coolies, under severe and clearly defined restrictions, it is true, but an alarm is spreading throughout the whole Transvaal, and the Government is giving arms to the Boers for protection against the escaped and marauding coolies. It is claimed by the miners that they cannot secure enough Kaffir laborers to work the mines. Of the 125,000 mine laborers employed at Johannesburg 80,000 are Kaffirs.

No such lack of native laborers is felt at Kimberley. The De Beers company gets all the native help it needs, and pays wages that make an industrious black man financially independent in about three years. It is charged that mismanagement and some lack of good faith in living up to labor contracts, as understood by the Kaffirs, account for the deficiency of Kaffir laborers on the Rand.

Coolie labor has not as yet been as profitable to the mine owners as that of the native blacks, and it is problematical whether it may not yet be found more profitable to dispense with the Chinese.

The Famous Falls of Zambesi.

A visit to South Africa would not be complete unless it included Victoria Falls on the Zambesi. It is only fifty years since Livingstone looked into the stupendous gorge of the falls from Livingstone Island, the first white man who ever saw it. He supposed that this gorge, 400 feet deep and more than a mile long, was of volcanic origin. But all visiting geologists now agree that the whole gorge of the Zambesi, some forty miles in length, is due to erosion by water, as at Niagara. The evidences in support of this conclusion are overwhelming.

It was, unfortunately, the season of low water at the time of our visit in September. Only a small fraction of the volume of water incessantly pouring over Niagara was falling into the abyss of Victoria Falls when we saw them. Still, as a superb spectacle, and as a stupendous plunge of the quiet waters of the Zambesi into a gorge of unparalleled depth and length, it is well worth a long journey to see.

The famous bridge is, on the whole, a picturesque object and does not detract in the least from the general effect. The main fall is not visible from the bridge. The latter hangs as a sentinel over the "Boiling Pot" and the narrow throat through which the foaming water rushes as if maddened by its frightful leap.

From the bridge one can see the famous Palm kloof, a narrow cleft descending sharply to the water's edge and filled with trees and rank tropical vegetation. On the south bank of the gorge, opposite the falls, is the "Rain Forest." Its huge trees and rank undergrowth are incessantly watered by the spray from the falls, and, hence, are always fresh and green. The "Rain Forest" forms a unique spot in the arid expanse of the South African veldt.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

On the evening of the 5th inst., the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Rose, 4th Con. of Sidney, was taken possession of by about 70 of their friends and neighbors who met to bid them farewell on the eve of their departure to their new home in Belleville. After a short time was spent in pleasan conversation Mr. Henry Bleecker, country road superintendent, was called to the chair, who then called on Mrs. George Bonisteel to read an address, when Mr. and Mrs. Rose were presented with a dozen silver dinner knives and forks and also a carving set. After which Mr. and Mrs. Rose made reply in a very feeling manner, then the entire company sang "They are jolly good fellows." Then a few of the neighbors made short addresses expressing their regret at Mr. and Mrs. Rose's departure. As Mr. and Mrs. Rose have always lived in this neighborhood they will be greatly missed. Following is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Rose,—

We, your friends of the Fourth of Sidney are assembled here to-night to bid you good-by on the eve of your final departure for your new home. While we are maintaining the genial spirit of pleasure, it is with sadness we see a family who had so good an influence, go from our midst. As neighbors, as friends and as workers in the church, you and your family have perfectly done your part. Those of us, who have known intimately your home life, know it to be an ideal one, and one which for an example we may all be glad to follow. While you are leaving the home of your childhood as well as that of your manhood and womanhood for, perhaps a wider sphere of life, we are sure the fine traits of character, which have become parts of yourselves here in our little community, will still influence those with whom you come in contact in your new life, as it has influenced us in the past.

It is our loss to have your children whom we are certain will grow up capable of wielding a great influence for good, removed from this place; yet their life will also be broader, in which to exercise the moral and religious power that is fast becoming theirs. We give you our very best wishes for the continuance of a successful life and as a small token of our sincere friendship, we ask you to accept this cutlery as a remembrance of us.

Signed on behalf of the 4th of Sidney and other friends.

HIS THIRD WEEK.

With pitying glances in the street,
The wondering people pass him by;
They note his slow and dragging feet,
His solemn face and yearning eye;
And some would fain him stop and cheer,
With words of solace kind and low;
But, no, his countenance severe
Precludes intrusion on his woe.

Dejected wanderer in the crowd,
What means his look of dismal dole?
Why is his mind oppressed and bowed?
What awful secret weighs his soul?
Has she conferred the chilly shake,
Some heartless girl that he admired?
Are sleuths keen trailing in his wake?
Or has he by his boss been fired?

The last cigar store that he passed
A hungry, tigerish feeling woke,
The craving has come round at last—
You see, the poor man wants a smoke.
Don't try to aid his aching need—
Himself can buy; he is not broke;
At New Year's he forswore the weed,
And so, you see, he cannot smoke!

For one who was delicate in childhood, King Alfonso of Spain is a somewhat strenuous young man. The father of Campbell-Bannerman, the new Prime Minister of England, laid the foundation of his fortune in Glasgow by abolishing in his place of business the system then known as "prigging." To "prig" was to bargain and beat down the price of goods. Mr. Campbell started in marking his goods in plain figures, from which his salesmen were allowed to make no reduction. His success was immediate and great. He rose to be lord provost of Glasgow and was knighted by Queen Victoria.

The burnt wood fad seems to steadily increase in popularity. The limit seems to have been reached in Kansas where one James A. Collis, a retired capitalist, is preparing a burnt wood coffin against his burial. Having secured a plain casket he is decorating it with appropriate designs and inscriptions with his pyrographic tools. "At Rest" appears upon the lid, and the sides are ornamented with various scrolls and wreaths. A burnt wood coffin to be buried in is rather suggestive. It might be that the prospective occupant thereof is going to unnecessary trouble.

It is understood that tenders will be asked within a fortnight for that portion of the eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific connecting Winnipeg with Lake Superior. This section of 275 miles extends from Winnipeg to the junction with the company's branch to Port Arthur. There are rumors that contracts will be made in the early spring for sections near Quebec. These reports have not been confirmed, and it is not known that the surveys are sufficiently advanced to allow contracts to be made. It is pretty well understood that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company is more interested in the portion from Lake Superior to Edmonton. Other interests must promote the concurrent construction of the eastern portion if the same expedition is to be shown with that part of the transcontinental.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—The convention of the Ontario Association of Architects closed yesterday afternoon with a detailed address by W. A. Langton on the plan of the beautification of the city. City Engineer Rust figured yesterday that the improvements planned by the architects would cost $20,000,000.

HARMONY IN THE HOME.

The Influence of a Perfect Combination of Form and Color.

If an ordinary discerning person could inspect any home he could perceive the characteristics, personalities and ideas of its occupants, though strangers to him and, for the time being, absent.

Orators know the significance of the pause in impressive speech. In like manner does much space between articles of furniture and still more space between pictures and ornaments add dignity and peace. Any article bought just to fill up space is placarded with the intention. On the other hand, who can comprehend the far reaching influence, moral as well as artistic, of a truly perfect outline of a harmonious combination of colors?

The ancients worshiped their household gods. This was the poetical expression of a truth. Every home has a spirit whose silent influence even the chance visitor feels. Who can fail to see the beauty and peace in the domestic picture where Hawthorne and Whipple picked currants for tea while Mrs. Hawthorne made biscuit and Mrs. Whipple laid the table?

Harmony in the home depends upon the extent to which ideals are held in common or to the amount of sympathy which each member has for the ideals of the other members.

WESTERN DAIRYMEN.

Some Cheese Factory Patrons Skim Milk or Water It.

Ingersoll, Jan. 18.—The early part of yesterday morning's proceedings in connection with the Western Dairymen's Convention was occupied with some interesting cheese scoring contests.

At the subsequent meeting, Chief Instructor George M. Barr presented his report on the work of instruction at cheese factories last year, and in this he complained of the objection on the part of cheese makers to instructors visiting the patrons. Such visits, however, he deemed as very desirable. He also expressed regret that larger numbers of patrons had either added water or taken off cream than in any previous year.

George A. Putnam, superintendent of Farmers' Institutes, took the farmers to task for not availing themselves of the advantages offered by the Government to obtain instructions.

Professors H. H. Dean and J. A. Ruddick spoke on the subject of Canadian cheese in the British market, describing the classes of goods which were required in the old country.

PACKERS CLOSE DOWN.

Blame Government's Hog Quarantine Regulation and Change re. Bonding.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—The George Matthews Co., the big pork packing establishment of Hull, announces that it is compelled to curtail the output of its factory owing to restrictions imposed by the Dominion Government regarding the importation of hogs from the United States.

About forty men are thus thrown out of employment.

Owing to the prevalence of hog cholera on the other side, the Department of Agriculture issued a quarantine regulation which has the effect of barring out hogs purchased there, and the Canadian supply is unequal. To this is added the withdrawal of the bonding privilege.

THE FOUNDERED GALLEON.

BY

WEATHERBY CHESNEY, AND ALICK MUNRO.

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY THE AUTHORS.

"If you like, we can put in at one of the islands and drop her there till we are ready to go back."

"No, no," replied the captain decidedly and then added more in a low tone, of which Guthrie could just distinguish the words, "Plucky to the ends of her fingers; fret herself to death if we did."

And to this the doctor replied with an air of relief: "I think you are right. She deserves to come. And I don't believe there's so very much risk after all, at any rate for her."

And then the captain said his fiddle was in tune now. So they started their playing again and rattled through "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and the "Soldiers' March" from "Faust" with an amount of vigor which bore evidence to their pleasure at the decision.

By daylight next morning all hands were busily engaged in getting the Eureka in trim for the great attempt. The hatches were taken off and boat and scuttle butt passed down below; and then the hatches, which were of sheet iron, were replaced and riveted securely into their places. All the canvas was unbent and stowed below, the main companion and skylight were unshipped and replaced with iron plates securely bolted down, and the ketch was made tight as a bottle all over. Every preparation for this had been made by shipwrights before she left Bristol, and the doing of it had absorbed all the available capital, already much bitten into by the purchase of the vessel herself and the necessary stores, some of which, as they were special inventions of Dr. Tring's, were naturally very costly.

Though outwardly little changed, the Eureka was in her new trim probably the strangest vessel that had ever dropped down Bristol channel. Her hull had been of steel to start with, and of unusually massive construction, and her internal structure had been added to till she was of immense strength and capable of enduring enormous compressive pressure. The engines and boilers with which she had been originally fitted were taken completely away, and a smaller crew was substituted for the one which she formerly carried, and an ingenious arrangement of cranks had been fitted to its shaft, so that it could be worked by manual power from the hold. She possessed, also, two large tank partitions, one forward, one abaft, extending from the bow and stern respectively till they met amidships. Each of these was fitted with a valve for admitting the water by which she was to be sunk and was connected also with a powerful force pump, by which this water could be expelled again when she was required to come to the surface. She had, in addition, other special contrivances of the doctor's invention for dealing with the Santa Catarina when they should find her; but these will be described later on.

Rising from the forward part of her deck was a structure which was intended to serve the purpose of a conning tower, from which her movements below the surface would be controlled. It was a small circular room, lighted by windows of thick plate glass. It could be entered only from below, and contained a steering wheel geared on to the tiller by iron bars passing through water tight packing boxes. From this place it was that the Eureka was to be governed in her search along the sea floor for the foundered galleon and its gold.

While the work of getting all these appliances into order was going forward the captain had caused to be lowered into the water a square of stout canvas stretched on iron bars and suitably buoyed. The Eureka rode to that at the end of a warp, as a sea anchor. Her drift was slow, but as the doctor did not want her to get to leeward of a certain point no time was to be lost, and the eight members of the crew worked willingly and hard at the business of preparation.

The sun was shimmering on the western horizon by the time the work was complete, and the wind had died away to nothing. The ketch was heaving gently over a long, low ocean swell, which was unruffled by a zephyr and smooth as though it had been topped with oil.

"Everything ready, doctor!" cried Captain Colepepper at last. "All we have to do is to get below, clap on the fore hatch, bolt it into place and then you can set about sinking her as soon as you like."

The doctor screwed up his leathery wrinkles and shivered. "We should be taking a plunge doubly in the dark if we started now, Colepepper," said he, "and all hands are a bit tired. Will this calm last till morning, do you think?"

"I can't be sure, doctor, but I should say the breeze will come with the sun."

"Then we'll station a one man watch and all the others can turn in. But we must have the air below as unvitiated as possible; so everybody must sleep on deck. I'll make an exception in your case, Dolly, if you like."

"Nothing of the sort, doctor," replied the girl. "I shouldn't think of it. I'm just an ordinary member of the ship's company, remember, and I shall turn in a la belle etoile like the rest."

So the whole crew bivouacked on deck and recruited their energies with sleep till daylight, and then, going below, cast off all connection with the outer air by screwing down the fore hatch. Already the valves leading to the two great tanks forward and aft had been opened and the sea was pouring into them. The Eureka was riding more sluggishly over the swell than was her wont. In a few minutes she would be diving down to a place where no living man had ever gone before, and who of the crew of eight could say that his heart was free from fear at that moment?

It was a time of breathless excitement, which even Cain Laversha showed that he felt. Dolly, Guthrie and the captain were in the conning tower with Dr. Tring looking with anxious eyes through the strongly glazed ports at the deck without, watching it with a feeling almost of awe as it neared the oily plain of ocean inch by inch. That their craft had the power of sinking was beyond a doubt. But could she rise to the surface again? Calculation and reasoning said yes, but there might be a fault somewhere; for theory and practice are notorious for disagreeing in matters of naval construction.

It was a time of breathless excitement.

More and more sluggish grew her movements over the swell as the weight of water ballast increased, and nearer and nearer did the crests of the sullen, oily swells creep to the level of the deck planks.

Then the limit was passed, and the first gulp of green water shot over the bow and trickled lazily down aft. Rapidly after that the decks were covered, and the Eureka began to settle down quickly on an even keel. Soon there was nothing to be seen but the mainmast, with its shrouds and gear, and the green gloom splashed over the windows of the conning tower itself and began to deepen in intensity every moment.

The Eureka had commenced her dive.

CHAPTER VII.

THE WORLD BENEATH THE WATERS.

As the Eureka began to settle down through the waters the four watchers found that at first their view was a tolerably wide one. The most striking peculiarity which they noticed was that, in place of the atmosphere which they had just left, they seemed to be looking through an immense mass of bottle green glass. The roof of the conning tower, which was not transparent, prevented them from seeing directly overhead, and as the angle at which they could catch a glimpse of the surface of the ocean above, them was less by several degrees than the critical angle the result was that this surface became to them one swaying, shimmering mirror. The sky above was not visible through it, but objects in the sea below were reflected in strange, distorted forms on its constantly moving surface. But the scenery of the outer air and the doings of the world above were not in the thoughts of any of the party at that moment, for in the population of the world of waters through which they were passing there was an absorbing interest.

The captain recognized and pointed out to the others some old acquaintances of the fish shop, but alive and at home they presented a very different appearance from the limp, unpleasant looking masses of flabbiness which are vended from a marble slab at so much a pound.

Dolly commented with some surprise on the fact that the fish did not seem to be in the least shy, as she had naturally expected that they would, and it was certainly a curious sight to see them come flocking up from all parts of the distance, and then, poising themselves motionless near the sinking vessel, look at her with solemn, unwinking eyes. Dolly declared that they made her feel creepy.

Still the sea poured into the tanks, and the ketch went down, down, down! The pale green light darkened with every fathom and became first a weird, wintry looking twilight, such as one sees through the deeper blues of a church window on a dark November's day. Then the gloom grew blacker, and finally came the inky darkness of night.

Dr. Tring scraped a match and applied it to a jet behind his head. It lit with a pale blue flame. Then he turned another stopcock, and after a preliminary swishing noise a thin pencil of flame directed itself on to a small cylinder of lime, which presently began to glow whitely. Then he closed the case in which the apparatus was held, adjusted a lens and removed a cap. A brilliant beam of light streamed forth into the murky waters.

"That," said the doctor, "is a use to which an ordinary oxyhydrogen magic lantern has seldom been put. Electricity might have been better perhaps, but I could not hit upon a method of producing it satisfactorily. But, thanks to modern commercial enterprise, which supplies oxygen and hydrogen powerfully condensed in light steel cylinders, this form of illumination serves our purposes very well."

"How deep are we now, doctor?" Dolly asked.

The doctor pointed to a thing like a steam gauge with the dial marked off in fathoms. The index had touched 64, and it was still falling. "We've a lot farther to go yet before we fetch up," he answered.

"The air feels queer," remarked Guthrie.

"That," replied the doctor, "is because it is becoming gradually compressed. As the water ballast flows into our tanks so the air which filled them before is pushed out and sends up the pressure throughout the rest of the vessel. I might have let it escape overboard, but breathable oxygen is valuable, and I preferred to store it. There are eight of us on board, and, reckoning the consumption per head at 18 gallons per hour, we shall have enough to last us for 24 hours easily, and more at a pinch."

"What about the carbonic acid?" asked Guthrie.

"Those flat tins, which you helped me to lay about the hold, are meant to deal with that," replied the doctor. "Carbon dioxide is heavy, you know, and will naturally seek the lowest levels of the vessel. The tins are filled with strong caustic potash solution, and will require nothing more than an occasional shaking up to make them mop up the excess of carbon dioxide."

"But won't the oxygen in the air become unduly diluted, and consequently difficult to breathe, before long, even if the carbonic acid is removed?"

"I've provided for that too. I shall let out a fresh supply of oxygen from the cylinders. But oxygen is expensive, and the number of cylinders is limited; so, as soon as breathing becomes at all difficult, I shall take the Eureka up to the surface again and get my supply of wind fresh from there."

"But," put in Dolly, "wouldn't it be better to stay down as long as we possibly can and finish the thing in one dive? Surely you would be able to get as many pillar dollars on board in 24 hours as we shall want."

"I dare say it would be possible, Dolly," replied the doctor, with a leathery smile, "if we could only pitch upon the exact spot where they lie. The awkward part of it is, we don't precisely know where they are. You see the galleon may not have foundered perpendicularly. She may have been carried along ever so far by a submarine current."

"Then the Eureka would be treated in the same way," suggested Dolly, eagerly, "and so if the pair started from the same place on the surface up above, they should arrive at the same place on the sea floor below."

"That's a very neat piece of argument," replied the doctor; "so neat, in fact, that I won't spoil it by pointing out all the several ways in which it would fall through. But I'll just present you with one point gratis. The sea isn't like a grassfield. You can't stick a post in it to mark any particular spot. You have to fix positions which are out of sight of land by observations, and observations at sea are usually more approximate than accurate. We improve as years go on, however, and I have every reason to think that the galleon's position was known as nearly as modern science could work it. But you must remember that Nicholas I lived in much more rough and ready days, and though he made landfall directly after sinking the Santa Catarina, and could check his observations, they can't be expected to be within a mile or a mile and a half of the truth. What we shall have to do is to quarter the sea floor systematically, shoving the craft along as fast as the screw will make her move, and searching the waters on either side of our course as far as this oxyhydrogen light will show through them.

"Ha, close to bottom now! Look at the manometer! Only ten fathoms more, if the soundings are correct! Colepepper, will you and Guthrie go off and bear a hand at the crank? Minutes are precious. I want her under weigh as soon as the bottom is in sight. Dolly, you stay with me. Your eyes are better than mine, and we must have a sharp lookout."

Captain Colepepper hurried off to the part of the hold in which the crank apparatus was situated, and Guthrie with him, and before a minute had passed the hand driven screw was revolving and the Eureka had begun her search.

But this search, which Miss Colepepper had thought would be a matter of a few hours, dragged itself on through many weary days of the most irksome toil, and there was yet no sign of the foundered galleon.

For the steersman and the lookout in the conning tower there was always the excitement which came from the possibility that the next sweep of the searchlight might reveal the longed for heap of wreckage, but for the workers down in the stuffy hold there was nothing but the dullest of monotony—push and pull, push and pull, day after day, at the arrangement of cranks and levers which turned the screw. Those same cranks and levers no doubt reflected credit on Dr. Tring's inventive ingenuity, but after the first hour of acquaintance with them the members of the Eureka's crew began to lose interest in them and in the end came almost to hate them.

It is said that the strangest thing a diver finds when he first takes to making descents below the sea's surface is the absolute silence amid which he moves. The workers in the Eureka were saved from this experience. Speech was permitted to them, and for the first few days at least they chatted a good deal as they worked, but in time the numbing grip of deadly monotony took hold of them and seemed to choke their intellects, so that it became their habit to go through with the loathed toil in silence.

The place where they did this work, facetiously called the "engine room," was situated a little abaft 'midships and lay immediately above the keelson. It was dark, for the supply of condensed gases for the oxyhydrogen light was limited, and, as Dr. Tring pointed out, one does not need light to push and pull at a crank which cannot get out of position. Moreover, it was the stuffiest place in the ship and, by universal consent, the most objectionable. Save for the lookout and steersman in the conning tower, all hands were in this engine room when the Eureka was under weigh beneath the surface, though even when the six of them were working their hardest her pace was desperately slow.

Cain Laversha, whose services above the surface had been almost valueless, here fell into the knack at once and professed himself quite contented with his occupation. It was monotonous, and he liked monotony, and there was no brain effort required. The rest toiled because they had to, and tried to keep their spirits up by remembering the golden end which their hopes told them was coming to the weary labor.

It was not the first spell which came so unkindly. The conditions of working were such that even that was, of course, not pleasant. But then no one expected it to last for long, and so all endured it cheerfully. But when it came to be day after day and day after day, and when the days lengthened out to weary weeks, the loathing with which they approached the endless toil became so great that even stolid Cain Laversha began to grumble, and when he lifted up his voice in complaint the case was bad indeed.

The work, however, was not without the occasional excitement of unexpected peril. Once, when the Eureka was rising to the surface, but still far down in the abyssmal depths, something jammed in one of the pumps. Tom Jelly and Hans Spiedernichel, who had gone to man the forward pump, came tumbling aft again with horror written on their faces and announced what had occurred. The fear of death came upon every one of the listeners. Even Cain Laversha, whom nothing up to that point had moved into any expression either of pleasure or of pain, dropped his ham colored face into the hollows of his hands and groaned aloud.

"Zusan Pierce," he moaned, "Zusan Pierce, I be lost to 'ee, an the varm all goes to Abel. This be a tarrible end—tarrible. I vear I shall ha'nt 'ee, Zusan Pierce. I bain't able to die quiet like thikky."

"Hold your din, you great fool!" said Dr. Tring angrily on hearing the tail end of this lament, "and go and put some beef into the break of the pump."

"Something may smash if we put too much force into it," hazarded Guthrie, "and if it does the water will come in."

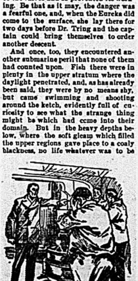
"If it does," replied the doctor in a husky whisper, "it will be quickly over with us. That will be better than staying where we are using up our store of oxygen and then sitting helpless till we choke by slow degrees. Go!"

Guthrie went with the others. They strained and strained at the break of the force pump, heaving it up and down against a pressure upon which their combined might made no impression. But at last something gave way. There was a rush of water. They stopped their efforts and listened. Then, "Hoch!" cried Spiedernichel, who was lying with his ear clapped up against the iron plating. "Hoch! It wass gegushing out of her!"

They turned to the pumps again. Relieved of the obstruction, these worked freely once more, and in a very few moments the Eureka was at the surface.

What exactly had gone wrong was never found out for certain, but Dr. Tring conjectured that a fish or some other sea animal had got pinned in one of the valves and so prevented its working. Be that as it may, the danger was a fearful one, and, when the Eureka did come to the surface, she lay there for two days before Dr. Tring and the captain could bring themselves to order another descent.

And once, too, they encountered another submarine peril that none of them had counted upon. Fish there were in plenty in the upper stratum where the daylight penetrated, and, as has already been said, they were by no means shy, but came swimming and shooting around the ketch, evidently full of curiosity to see what the strange thing might be which had come into their domain. But in the heavy depths below, where the soft gleam which filled the upper regions gave place to a coaly blackness, no life whatever was to be seen, and the observers in the conning tower had come to believe that the dreary solitudes of the ocean floor were utterly untenanted.



"Hold your din, you great fool!"

But one day Dolly, who was on the lookout, gave a call, and the doctor, who was working with the others at the crank, bade Guthrie go up to the conning tower and see what was amiss.

"Look there, Alan," cried Dolly, "right down the lantern rays. What is it? I saw it move up out of the coze just now. See, it's keeping pace with us!"

"It seems like a big eel."

"It's body is as big round as Cain's!"

"Turn the lantern, Dolly. Yes, like that. Whew! It's twice as long as the ketch."

"What an awful animal! I'm going to bear away from it a little."

She put over the wheel a couple of spokes, and for a moment the great eel was dropped by the lantern rays and passed out of sight. But the next instant it had worked itself into the glare again, and then, keeping the light squarely on to it, Guthrie saw to his horror that it was undulating slowly through the water in the direction of the conning tower.

"Call the doctor, Alan!" cried Dolly in alarm.

Guthrie went to the ladder and shouted, and the doctor's long legs came tumbling up the steps three at a time.

But before he arrived the beast had gained the ketch's decks, and its great snakelike head was nuzzling against the glass windowed ports of the conning tower.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE FINDING OF THE SANTA CATARINA.

As soon as he saw the great eel Dr. Tring turned out the lights with a snap and passed down an order to empty the tanks as fast as the water could be driven out of them. All hands worked with a will, and very soon the Eureka was leaping surfaceward again in rapid bounds.

Of what was occurring on her decks those in the hold did not hear till after the ballast tanks had been freed of water and the iron hatches had been opened once more to the sea breeze. But then they crowded up, and the doctor told the tale.

"There is little in it," he said. "Directly I turned the light off the beast gave up nuzzling the glass and started driving its sharp nose against the panes with all the force it could muster. There was nothing for it but to make for the surface as fast as possible. If the glass had gone, the pressure of water from without would have been so intense that nothing we could have done would have prevented the inrush. And then—by the way, has anybody got matches? I want a cigarette."

But, though the doctor thus made little of the encounter, the danger had been really great, and more than one of the Eureka's crew began to wonder whether they were destined ever to find the gold which was to be the reward of their daring. For, do what they would, no glimpse of the Santa Catarina came to reward their patient search. They had diligently quartered five square miles of the sea floor, and, unless they had overlooked her, she was not there. That evening, therefore, there was a council held on deck, while the ketch rode stationary at her sea anchor.

"It is rather disappointing," the doctor owned, "but I don't consider the case by any means hopeless as yet. You see, that old galleon was a wooden ship, and so when she left the top of the sea she would not of necessity go straight to the bottom. She would sink a good many fathoms and then would get to a layer of water of sufficient denseness to prevent her going any farther for awhile. But, though she would not remain suspended for long, for her timbers and cargo would soon get thoroughly sodden, she might very well get into some undercurrent which would take her along goodness knows how far."

"But," objected Captain Colepepper, "if there had been any such current about, we should have noticed it."

"Not necessarily. It may be some subsurface stream, running only a few inches an hour. With our rough observations we should never notice such a small disturbance as that. And yet, given time, it might have shifted the slowly sinking galleon on a good long distance before she finally settled into her bed upon the ooze. No, I shall not abandon our search while we have a single cylinder of oxygen left, and even then I shall not go away because I consider it hopeless."

And so it was decided that the search should go on. The Eureka made descent after descent and each day surveyed as much of the ooze bed below as her hand driven screw would take her over.

Besides the two extraordinary perils which have been mentioned, there were other and more frequently repeated times of danger. These were the moments when she was returning to or dropping from the surface. Then, if there happened to be anything of a heavy sea or swell running, the doctor found himself in no small difficulty. Of course the time of descent was in his own hands, for, if the weather was bad when the hour came for the dive, he could simply wait and let the ketch ride to her floating anchor till the sea moderated. But if a blow sprang up while she was in the black depths below she was pinned. She was bound to come to the surface sooner or later, or her crew would suffocate. But several times, when they had begun to pump water out of the ballast tanks and risen almost the whole distance, they found that there was a dangerous sea running overhead and were compelled to stay their hands and let the Eureka balance in middepth till the weather had improved.

On all occasions but one this maneuver had succeeded, though at the cost of a grievous waste of the store of compressed oxygen. But on that one day, after using up three whole cylinders of the precious gas and enduring the close air of the hold till its surcharged heaviness nearly choked them, they took to the pumps again in a kind of desperation and crept slowly up to the boisterous surface above.

Heavily waterlogged as she was, the Eureka would not rise to the seas, but rolled sluggishly in the trough and allowed the heavy waves to make a clean breach over her. The imprisoned treasure hunters could hear the cataracts of green falling overhead like avalanches of stone. Every nail and every rivet of the vessel was tried to its uttermost. Nothing but her colossal strength brought her through that fierce ordeal, and when the iron hatches were taken off and the crew got on to the deck the rigging and launching of the sea anchor proved a task almost too great for them. But at last it was done, and the or Fruit Liver Tablets.

Dr. Alexander Falkner, Williamstown, Ont., a physician who has enjoyed a large practice for the past thirty years:—"I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of 'Fruit-a-tives' or 'Fruit Liver Tablets' as a medicine for chronic constipation and biliousness, dyspepsia, etc., etc. I have prescribed this medicine for the past six months and can strongly recommend 'Fruit-a-tives' in all cases of constipation, indigestion and flatulence, headaches due to weakened digestion, etc.

Dr. A. Frankford Rogers, Ottawa, a physician who has enjoyed one of the largest practices in that city, states:—"I have no hesitation in recommending 'Fruit-a-tives' or 'Fruit Liver Tablets' as the fact of these tablets being made from a laxative material extracted from ripe fruit appeals, and has appealed to my judgement, and I have used these tablets extensively in my practice and always with most gratifying results. The proprietors of this medicine do not hesitate to furnish the formula of the tablets to physicians, and hence any physician can use these tablets and recommend them without loss of self respect. The formula of 'Fruit-a-tives' is certainly a magnificent one, and in my experience no medicine ever used by me has given such excellent results in constipation and stomach and liver trouble as 'Fruit-a-tives' has. That these tablets act beneficially on the kidneys and skin is beyond doubt and in many cases where the skin was sluggish and inactive and the complexion bad 'Fruit-a-tives' have given the most pleasing results."

Dr. D. J. Costello, member of the internal staff of the General Hospital, Ottawa, and who has extensive experience, states:—"I have used 'Fruit-a-tives' or 'Fruit Liver Teblets' with most beneficial results in obstinate constipation and biliousness, and found their action mild and non-irritating, and yet more curative than any medicine ever used previously. I strongly recommend 'Fruit-a-tives' to those suffering from these complaints."

CAROLINE M. SEVERANCE.

She Organized the First Woman's Club In the United States.

America's oldest clubwoman, Mrs. Caroline M. Severance, is spending her last days beneath the sunny skies of Los Angeles, Cal. One says "last days" upon discovering that her age is eighty-five, but it is hard to realize that Mrs. Severance has celebrated so many birthdays, for she is as active and as interested in life and people as she was at forty. The Friday Morning club of Los Angeles, which she founded, calls her "eighty-five years young." The nearly 5,000 clubwomen of Los Angeles also lovingly refer to her as "the mother of clubs," and she is also known by this title wherever in any part of the country a woman's club is founded.

Mrs. Severance was born in New York in 1820 and was the daughter of Orson Seymour, a member of an old Connecticut family. In 1840 she married Mr. Severance, who has been dead for several years. When the Severances lived in Cleveland, O., for several years in the early fifties, their home was the Mecca of all the cultured people who visited the city, including Emerson, Alcott, Wendell Phillips, Garrison and others equally well known.

MRS. CAROLINE M. SEVERANCE.

In 1855 the Severances moved to Boston, and it was there that Mrs. Severance, in 1860, organized the first woman's club of the United States, the New England club of Boston. In speaking of the object of forming this first society Mrs. Severance says:

"We had our social life and our church life, but we wanted some gathering in which the women could meet on equal mental grounds without society or the church and be helpful in every way to one another."

She was the president of this club for three years.

Mr. and Mrs. Severance went to California and made their home in Los Angeles in 1875, building the home in which Mrs. Severance now lives. Since that time the "Red Roof," as the cottage, now "El Nido," was called, has been the rendezvous of cultured and noted residents and visitors. For many years Mrs. Severance was the president of the first woman's club of Los Angeles, organized by herself soon after her arrival.

Although her memories of the past are so delightful and are filled with days and hours spent with the Alcotts, Emerson, Hawthorne and others whom just to know was an honor, Mrs. Severance does not live in the past. She has more interests and demands on her time than the majority of younger women. She is interested in kindergarten work and started the first kindergarten in Los Angeles. She is womanly, motherly and altogether charming.

Mrs. Severance's good deeds are by no means all in the past, but so modest is she about them that one seldom hears of the many kind acts of this young old woman.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Women Should Sit More.

"Women don't sit enough to their kitchen work," declared the elderly housewife. "There's a heap of ills and ailments that could be avoided by using just a little common sense. Now, no woman would think of sewing or darning while standing up, yet they do equally foolish things in the kitchen.

"Take peeling potatoes or other vegetables, for instance. The majority of women stand near the sink for such work, whereas they could do it equally well by sitting down. How many do you see beating eggs while sitting down? Precious few, I'll warrant. They stand when mixing dough for pastry or biscuits. After the dishes are washed they stand up to dry them when it's just as easy to sit down. There's a hundred little things to be done while preparing meals which are just as easy to do while sitting as standing. Then when the day's work is done they flop into an easy chair and wail about how tired they are. There's a chair in nearly every kitchen, but it's mostly used for standing on to get things from the shelves. Sit down more, I tell you, and you won't have that tired feeling so much."—New York Press.

Mending by Machine.

With little practice all sorts of mending may be done on a two threaded sewing machine, without turning the work at all, by placing the article under the presser foot and sewing forward across the tear or thin place. When at the point where the work would ordinarily be turned, lift the presser foot ever so little with the right hand and with the left pull the work gently and steadily toward you, without stopping the machine at all, says the Brooklyn Times. Sew backward to the point where you started from. Then release the presser foot with the right hand and sew toward you again until it is time to reverse. By this means you gradually move over a long tear with the right side of the article resting on the table of the machine and on your lap.

Mend the torn scallops of Hamburg embroidery in the same way. For a small boy's trousers seat this method of mending has no equal. Baste a good thick patch on the wrong side. Place in machine with ragged side up, then stitch up and down until all the thin part is well covered. Literally you can mend a pair of trousers while the small boy waits.

Door and Window Hangings.

After years of striving after ornate methods of arranging door and window hangings the interior decorators have returned to the more simple designs, news that will be gladly welcomed by the housekeeper who does her own decorating. Hangings should be arranged so that a person looking at a hanging will know instinctively that it leads to the dining room, library or a bedroom, etc., by the color, pattern of the material and the fashion of drapery. Even the size of the room will be apparent if a careful housewife follows an old rule observed by furnishers of selecting small designs for little rooms and big patterns for large apartments.

Potatoes on the Half Shell.

Bake large, smooth potatoes of uniform size until they yield to the pinching fingers. Divide each carefully in half, lengthwise. Scrape out the interior, taking care not to break the skin. Mash the potato with a little hot milk and melted butter until you can beat it into a cream. Salt and pepper, beat in two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese for two cupfuls of potato and return to the waiting shells. Set into the oven until hot through and slightly browned. Serve in the skins.

When Machine Stitching.

"One of the most annoying things in running a sewing machine is to find that the lower thread has run out just when in the middle of the seam," says a writer in Good Housekeeping. "Now, I run my seam and wind the next bobbin at the same time. I put a spool of cotton in the little top drawer of the machine, leaving the drawer a little open to allow the thread to pass more easily, then use the winder as usual and never have to wait for a fresh shuttle."

Barley as Food.

Barley is rich in nitrogenous substances and contains large quantities of iron and phosphoric salts. Weight for weight, both barley and rye contain quite as much nutritive material as wheat, but it is in a less digestible form, and the flour of both grains makes a compact bread which is considered difficult of digestion. When cooked whole in soup for a long time it is easily digested and nutritious.

To Remove Bad Odors.

Lumps of fresh charcoal tied inside of fish nets and hung wherever there is a convenient place is a marvelous power to remove all bad odors in the cellar. As its power is strictly proportioned to its freshness, which heating restores, the charcoal bags must be taken down each week and emptied, the charcoal heated hot and returned to the bags, which in turn are replaced.

Lavender Scented Sheets.

Lavender scented sheets are said to induce sweet slumbers. The odor is exceedingly fresh, clean and wholesome, and old fashioned housewives always scented their linen and drapery with sprigs of the sweet old flower. Italian orris root and French veticert, a dried root, may be substituted for the lavender if the latter cannot be procured.

Don't Be Blue.

The remedy for the blues lies within ourselves. On your dark days put on your brightest and prettiest gown and see how it raises your spirits. It is difficult for cheerfulness to express itself in somber surroundings. If one does not feel like laughing, lift the corners of the mouth and one laughs perforce.

Kitchen Furniture.

One of the most fascinating pieces of furniture in the modern kitchen is an old fashioned settee. Its high back lifts up and rests on the sides to form a table or ironing board, while the seat, when raised, reveals many compartments filled with ingeniously devised cooking utensils.

Say the Nice Things.

A woman should not be afraid to say the pleasant things that rise to her lips. There is no reason on earth why frankness should consist in saying all the disagreeable remarks one can collect and that the kind words should be thought insincere.

Don't make hom› irksome. If you would not have your children lost to you in after life make home happy to them when they are young. Don't force the children to look elsewhere than at home for pleasure.

Lemon juice will whiten icing, the grated rind of an orange strained through a cloth will give a yellow tint and strawberry or cranberry juice will produce a pretty shade of pink.

Put a few grains of rice in the saltcellars to keep the salt from caking. As the cellar is shaken the rice will keek the salt moving.

In filling a lamp in which it is impossible to see the height of the liquid use a definite measure.

THE AMERICAN THEATER.

It Should Not Be a Toy—It Should Be Made an Educator.

To claim that the stage, no matter how improved, could work an immediate revolution in the manners and taste of our people would be manifestly absurd, but it is entirely safe to say that the theater could, in the matters which are apparently so unimportant in life, yet which mean so much, be an important factor in molding at least the externals of our national character. This means, however, that, busy as we are, we should give the theater a more important place in our thoughts and in our scheme of popular education than that at present allotted to it. Nor is the claim that the theater might be made a teacher of improvement in the minor things of life the only one that can be made for it. It might be made the medium for the elevation of the popular taste in all the arts and in literature and even for the inculcation of the principles of lofty thought and right living. It may seem strange that a people so clever as we are have neglected this potent influence for good and have regarded it only as a toy for our amusement, to be shaped and fashioned by the toy merchant solely with a view to making it catch the fancy and therefore become a salable and profitable article of merchandise. But, as we are a busy and, on the whole, a self satisfied people, beyond our pursuits and ambitions we look only for the amusements which shall be the least burden to us.—J. S. Metcalfe in Atlantic.

"PELE'S HAIR."

A Product of the Gigantic Hawaiian Volcano Mauna Loa.

Mauna Loa, the gigantic Hawaiian volcano, has two craters or openings, one of which, Kilauea, is the largest active volcanic crater in the world. The mountain is 14,100 feet high and Kilauea is situated on the eastern side about 4,000 feet above the level of the sea. This marvelous crater is really a vast lake of boiling lava which rises and falls continually by the action of subterranean fires. In tossing to and fro like a troubled sea of molten metal the lava is dashed against the cliffs and hardens there in the form of long glassy filaments, gigantic knobs, miniature trees and in imitation of grass, leaves, etc.

Another form of glassy filament to be found along the shores of this fiery lake is in the shape of queer bunches and tufts of lava made up of an aggregation of vitreous threads which the natives call "Pele's hair," Pele being the goddess to whom the mountain is dedicated. These glassy threads appear to be caused by the passage of steam through the molten lava. In so doing small particles in the shape of bubble-like balloons are thrown into the air, leaving a tail behind like a comet. When the scene of these miniature steam eruptions is near a rock or shore all solid and cool surfaces are found covered with bunches of "Pele's hair." This "hair" was formerly used in mystic native ceremonies.

Canal Locks In China.

The contrivances for locks along the Grand canal in China are very simple—stout boards, with ropes at each end of them, being let down edgewise over each other through grooves in the stone piers. Boats are dragged through and up the sluices by means of ropes communicating with large windlasses worked on the bank, which haul them safely, but very slowly. Artificial basins were hollowed out in the banks of the canal at these locks, where boats might anchor securely. The sluices which keep the necessary level are of very rude construction. Soldiers and workmen are constantly in attendance at these sluices, and the danger to boats is diminished by coils of rope hung down at the sides to break the force of possible blows.

A Phenomenon.

A handy word much misused is "phenomenon." The London Globe once heard a man explaining its meaning to a friend. He did it as follows: "Now, if you see a cow in a medder," he said didactically, "that's not a phinomeena. It's a pretty animal and what not, but it ain't a phinomeena. And if you see a thistle in a medder that ain't a phinomeena. Nor if you see a lark in the medder that ain't a phinomeena. It's a pretty bird and what not, but it ain't a phinomeena. But if you was to see that cow sitting on that thistle and singing like that lark that would be a phinomeena." His friend said, yes, he saw now.

The Bull of Perillus.

Perillus of Athens is said to have invented for Phalaris, tyrant of Agrigentum, 570 B. C., a brazen bull which opened on the side to admit victims who were to be roasted by the fire which was built underneath. The dying groans of the sufferers resembled closely the roaring of a mad bull. Phalaris greatly admired the invention and by way of test roasted the inventor first. Later the populace rose in rebellion and burned Phalaris.

Must Have Been.

"Ah, Lady B., I had the pleasure of meeting you last year. And how is your dear little girl?"

"My little boy is quite well, thank you."

"Little boy? Ah, yes, of course! I knew it was one of the two."

Antoine's Marie

By Virginia Leila Wentz

Copyright, 1905, by K. M. Whitehead

One August morning, with his high leather leggings, his easy costume, his fishing basket and tackle, Paul Blake strode along through the dew wet Canadian grass. He knew of a certain deep hollow in the brook which on such a gray moist day as this would be the haunt of juicy trout, and for the sheer joy of expectation he whistled. For equal to Blake's love for the art of painting was his love for the sport of fishing. He was not only enjoying his summer gathering French Canadian landscapes; he was reveling in his favorite sport as well.

After an hour of successful fishing in the quiet spot which he had selected he spied a splendid trout tucked cozily under a stone. But it was written in the book of fate that this fish and the frying pan should not lightly be brought together. Fly after fly was thrown in vain. Down through the crystal clear water he could see the sleek sides and the round, unspeculative eye of his intended victim, and he resolved to try the method of tickling.

So he undid his sleeve links, bared his arm and knelt upon the lichens, clinging with one hand to an overhanging birch. He was dipping cautiously toward the water when there in the pool before him, close to the reflection of his own, flashed another face.

It was a girl's face, and in its unusual loveliness it lay for a second like some magic picture. The next second Blake observed with a thrill that the vision was being changed by the current and that his own blond curls were made to trespass gently over the girl's dark ones. Then while he gazed at the reflection with Narcissus-like intentness the other face vanished as suddenly as it had come.

Springing to his feet, Blake perceived the bent trunk of an alder which projected across the stream from the top of the bank above, and he knew that the girl must have been leaning over the trunk from that higher bank, unconscious of his presence, until, like a startled deer, she fled.

"She was like one of Murillo's gypsy eyed Madonnas!" he exclaimed. And, though he went on for awhile longer with his trout fishing, the sport seemed to have lost a bit of flavor.

The next day Paul Blake drew up his horse before the kitchen door of a whitewashed farmhouse, and Antoine Martin rose to greet him.

"Bienvenue, m'sieu," said he, with old French hospitality. "And will m'sieu dismount?"

Blake did dismount, and as he stood in the wide doorway he tried to account for his presence. He was a painter, forsooth, and doing this section of Canada. He had already collected a good many views, but among them all there was not one more wonderful than that which could be obtained from the level plateau on which Antoine's farm stood. It was as if the hills had here withdrawn to leave an arena for some great spectacle, some ancient savage pageant. Might he, therefore, be permitted to fetch his easel and palette and to put upon canvas the harmony and beauty of it all?

Blake saw the lithe figure of a girl sitting opposite to him, her arms upon the table, her dimpled face with the Murillo eyes framed in both hands, her scarlet lips parted in breathless listening, hanging upon his words. Ah, luck was with him, to be sure. If he had lost the trout yesterday he had found the girl today.

"Come here, cherie," said old Antoine to the girl, and to the stranger, "My niece, Marie."

• • • • • • • •

"But, you little water sprite, you little Undine, however did you get your face so mixed up with mine that day in the pool?" Blake asked one morning as Marie stood watching him at work on his canvas.

"Eh, bien, m'sieu, I had gone out for a pique-nique on the barrens, and—ramasse les granages—what you call pick berries," she answered in her quaint English speech, eked out with bits of patois here and there. Then she explained how she'd leaned over the trunk of the tree from the bank above to wash her stained fingers; how, just as she was in the act of dipping down, she had seen his reflection in the water and was startled.

Between the strokes of his brush Blake took surreptitious glances at the willowy figure, half holding back the apple boughs as she talked, half swinging on them. Rebel locks had broken out of confinement and were curling damply about her warm, white neck and that crumpled rose leaf of an ear. Ah, she was exquisitely delightful! That same day he said to Antoine:

"If you would permit Mlle. Marie to sit to me, and if Mlle. Marie will consent"—he questioned the Murillo eyes, which silently gave him his answer, then fell beneath his own—"I could do a painting that was worth while."

So the August days passed till the brief Canadian summer was over. Already they had started to burn the wood that Antoine had cut for winter use.

While the piled up logs sent red lights flickering about the plastered walls and shining floor, they would often show that Blake had joined the Martin home group and was reading to old Antoine, who listened soberly between long whiffs at his pipe. Marie would sit on the high backed bench near the clock, knitting, stealing a glance now and then at the volume which lay open on the table.

Antoine, good, sturdy old Antoine, had just been offered the position of foreman of a gang in the pineries at the headwaters of the Lievres. He had worked in the lumber camps for years, but never as foreman, forsooth. Nevertheless he hesitated about accepting it. There was poor little Marie, he pointed out to Blake. What would become of her?

"Poor little Marie!" For the next few days Blake did a good deal of thinking. Marie had never read Henry James or Meredith, it was true; she had never seen a poster lady, never heard "Camille," and yet in her setting she was perfect. Moreover, she was the sort to adapt herself readily to new environments. "And why not?" he argued finally to himself. "She is pure, beautiful and capable of the deepest, tenderest feelings. What she has not is the superficial gloss of society. That I do not want."

One evening, pushing his book aside, Blake glanced across at Marie, whose eyes, as usual, were bent on her knitting. She was humming softly to herself an old Canadian boat song:

"Descendez a l'ombre,
Ma jolie blonde."

Blake had often heard it above the blow of the oars in the rowlocks, but never had the words seemed so fitting as tonight. He rose suddenly and laid a hand on Antoine's shoulder.

"Let me take Mamselle Marie for a little stroll in the starlight," he said pleadingly. "It's warm in here. I will take good care of her."

"Eh, m'sieu!" The old man dropped his pipe and gauged him silently for a second with those black beaded eyes of his. What he read in the younger man's face must have satisfied him, for he said finally, with a little movement of his hand: "It must not be far. See you, m'sieu? And it cannot be for long."

Outside through the dusk there was a silvery glimmer. The woodland stir seemed like a sigh. Blake looked down closely into the little face beside him. In the mind of the girl something indefinable had arisen, something which had stolen away all her gay caprices and set her trembling.

"Ma petite blonde!" Blake used the soft provincial word for sweetheart that Marie had used in her song. His tone was one of gentle entreaty; his attitude was that of reverence.

"Ma petite blonde," he repeated, taking her hand and lifting it softly to his lips, "I want you for my little wife. Will you let me take care of you always?"

She looked at him with wide, surprised eyes and slightly parted lips.

"You, m'sieu?" she said breathlessly. "You to take care of me?" It seemed incredible.

For answer he drew her to him as a knight of old would have drawn a lady and looked into her lovely face. His blue eyes and her Murillo eyes met and pledged each other in deep drafts of gazing; then with a superb motion of surrender Marie reached up and put her arms about his head.

Thus in reality did his blond curls trespass gently over the girl's dark ones, even as once they had seemed to do in that reflection in the pool. And thus was brought about the winning of Antoine's Marie.

A King's Incognito.

Probably the most complete incognito on record was that adopted by King Charles of Roumania on his way to take possession of the Wallachian throne.

At the time the relations between Austria and Prussia were exceedingly strained—it was just before the outbreak of war between these two nations—and the Vienna government was known to be strongly opposed to a prince of the house of Hohenzollern ascending the throne of Roumania.

It was feared, therefore, that obstacles might be placed to the passage over Austrian territory of the newly elected sovereign of the Wallachs. Accordingly King Charles traveled down the Danube on board the Austrian steamboats disguised as a servant and in the second or third class cabin.

The two or three members of his suit, who of course were in the first class cabin, affected to treat him with the utmost severity and contempt and assailed him with loud reproaches for alleged negligence in his menial duties.

It was only on setting foot on Roumanian territory that the roles were reversed and that those who had remained on board the steamer were able to witness the ceremonious welcome accorded by the Wallachian authorities to the erstwhile valet and footman.

River Funerals In Germany.

The river Spree, which runs through Berlin, has a habit of almost continuously overflowing its banks. As a result the lowlands beyond the city, called Spreewald, are almost always under water in summer and covered with ice in winter. Much of the summer traffic is done on skates and with sledges. The postman delivers his mail either in a boat or on skates, the children skate to school, and the ladies go to market on the water wagon or on the ice.

Even the dead are carried along the river to their last resting place in a coffin resting on a bier in a boat covered with flowers. The hearse is paddled by two of the undertaker's assistants. In the first boat following are the clergymen and the family, and the usual long line of coaches is supplanted by a long line of boats. These are paddled sometimes by men, sometimes by women, but always by some of the friends of the deceased. These water funerals are very picturesque as they wend their way through the temporary channels caused by the overflowing Spree.

CHINA WEDDING.

On Saturday evening the 13th inst., the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Morden of the 5th concession of Hillier was the scene of a very pleasant reunion to celebrate their 20th wedding anniversary. Friends and neighbors to the number of about seventy assembled in honor of the occasion and an evening was most agreeably spent which will not soon be forgotten by those who were present. The dining-room was beautifully decorated with evergreens and Chinese lanterns whilst the tables were laden with every imaginable delicacy to tempt the appetite of the visitors. Messrs. Reddick, Moon, Hough and Brason simply excelled themselves in attending to the tables and contributing to the wants of the inner man which were amply supplied. Those present from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. John Haight, Mr. and Mrs. Clem Haight, Mr. and Mrs. George Lazier, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Simpkins, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morden, of Melrose; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. George Rowe, of Trenton; Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Mabee, of Brighton; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Corbett, of Port Hope and Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Mabee, of Rossmore.

Amongst those of the more immediate vicinity might be mentioned the names of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Morden, Mr. Thomas Morden, Mr. and Mrs. William Ainsworth, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Parks, Mr. and Mrs. Densimore Doolittle, and daulhter Jedda, Mr. Manly Doolittle, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Moon, Mr. and Mrs Oliver Calnan, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. William Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Hough and Mr. and Mrs. Crouter and son.

Various games were introduced whilst music both vocal and instrumental contributed to the enjoyment of the evening. A very appropriate recitation by their daughter Miss Mabel Morden, which was well delivered, convinced those present of of her future success as an elocutionist The presents which were numerous and costly more than filled a large cabinet and testified to the high esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Morden are held by their many friends, who all join in wishing them success and happiness for the rest of their voyage through life.—Com.

THE MONOTONY OF LIFE.

Why a Comment About It Made One Man Laugh Out Loud.

"Sometimes I think that the monotony of life wears on us far more than the duties we have to discharge," sighed a robust citizen the other evening as the car reared on its hind legs and began to creep up the shaft. "The everlasting rut or treadmill, or whatever you may choose to call it, gets on to one's nerves. Existence isn't varied for many of us; it's a perpetual grind."

His companion looked at him a moment and showed a broad grin. "I like that kind of talk," he said. "It's so truthful. Do you knew what you do when anything out of the ordinary happens to interfere with your cut and dried plan and takes you a few steps out of your beaten path? I do. You throw three or four fits hand running and look and behave as if there had been a death in the family. If your wife accepts an invitation or makes an engagement for you or you're cornered so that you can't escape the theater or a concert, you're the crossest and most despondent creature on earth. And you'll invent excuses that wouldn't wash in a strong lye to dodge a visit to your relatives or an excursion or a journey to another city. You want to do the same things in the same old way day after day, and if you can't do them you sit down and cry. With you it's the morning paper, breakfast, the barber, work, luncheon, more work, home and the evening paper, and that would be your routine if you had $100,000 a year and were free to come and go as you chose. Nine men out of ten are exactly like you, and when I hear them complaining of monotony I have to laugh out loud."

STEVENSON'S PRAYERS.

They Were a Necessity to the Life of the Afflicted Writer.

"With my husband prayer—the direct appeal—was a necessity," writes Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson. "When he was happy he felt impelled to offer thanks for that undeserved joy; when in sorrow or pain, to call for strength to bear what must be borne." Then in every Samoan household the day closed with prayer and the singing of hymns. She says again: "As soon as our household had fallen into a regular routine and the bonds of Samoan family life began to draw us more closely together, Tusitala felt the necessity of including our retainers in our evening devotions." To their usual evening service they were summoned by the "pu" or Samoan war conch. She does not think it ever occurred to them that there was any incongruity in this use of it.

One of these plain, patriarchal services Stevenson himself on one occasion brought to a sudden check. "He had just learned of the treacherous conduct of one in whom he had every reason to trust. That evening the prayer seemed unusually short and formal. As the singing stopped he rose abruptly and left the room. I hastened after him, fearing some sudden illness. 'What is it?' I asked. 'It is this,' was the reply, 'I am not yet fit to say, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."'"

"Piano-Organ."

"Piano-organ" seems to have got into the language—unfortunately, since the contrivance so designated is neither a piano nor an organ. "Organ," in musical language, means an arrangement of pipes or reeds, with bellows, keyboard, pedals and draw stops. The "piano-organ" has none of these. "Piano" is short for "pianoforte" and indicates a keyed wire instrument which can be played both softly (piano) and loudly (forte). Now, nobody ever heard a "piano-organ" play "piano." A possible explanation is that the first user of the bad word "piano-organ" was trying to combine "pianoforte" and barrel organ," and, of course, he couldn't call the thing a "barrelforte."—London Chronicle.

Bismarck's Comment.

In the early days of the present German empire the question as to how the kaiser's title should run divided the court into three sections. One division favored "German emperor," the second was for "emperor of Germany," while the third wished it to be "emperor of the Germans." Bismarck, who was present at one such discussion, looked up from a meal. "What's the Latin for sausage?" he asked. "Farcimentum," said one. "Farcimen," said another. Bismarck smiled significantly as he replied, "Farcimentum or farcimen, it is all the same to me."

Inconsistent.

"If You Don't See What You Want, Ask For It," is the sign displayed over a grocer's counter. And when a man went in and asked payment of a bill that had been running for six months he was shown out through the front door. He is now of opinion that grocers are not consistent.

A Juvenile Opinion.

"I suppose you will marry when you grow up," said the visitor pleasantly.

"No," replied the thoughtful little girl; "mamma says papa is more care than the children, so I guess the care of my children will be enough for me without the care of a husband."

His Descent.

"Woodby declares his grandfather descended from one of the greatest houses in England."

"Ah, yes; I did hear a story about the old man falling off a roof he was repairing once for Lord Somebody or other!"

Fine Apple Trade.

The season of 1905 will go down on record as one of the most successful in the history of the apple trade of Canada. While the output was not an abnormally heavy one in the export trade, falling some 800,00 barrels behind the season of 1903, it was marked by uniformly fair prices in British markets. Prices in the Old Country market show a wide range all the way from 10 shillings to 25 shillings a barrel. From all American and Canadian ports to all ports in Great Britain, the shipments for the year 1905, closing on December 26th, were 1,606,792 barrels, in 1904 there were 1,475,760 barrels, and in 1903, which is accepted as a record year, 2,162,558 barrels.

East Hastings Fair a Fixture For Belleville.

MAYOR SULMAN IN FAVOR OF A LARGER CITY GRANT—SOCIETY HAD A GOOD SURPLUS LAST YEAR — THE NEW OFFICERS.

That the officials of the East Hastings Agricultural Society displayed wisdom in holding the fair last year in this city was manifest by the excellent showing made in the financial report. At the annual meeting, a year ago, the balance on hand was less than $60, whereas this year, the balance on the right side is nearly $350. The Board is unanimous in the opinion that the city is the proper place to have the fair, and for the next ten years it will be held here, and probably for longer than that. It is expected that in the near future a suitable building for the placing of exhibits will be erected upon the grounds and the amounts paid out for prizes will be increased. This will have the tendency of attracting exhibitors to the fair, not only from East Hastings, but throughout the County and the adjoining counties. No pains will be spared to make it the best and most attractive fair held in this section of the country.

The annual meeting of the Society was held at Thrasher's Corners yesterday and it was in every respect the most successful meeting ever held under the auspices of the Society. The attendance was large and much enthusiasm was manifested. Mayor Sulman, Messrs. L. R. Terwilligar, D. Grass and others from the city were present.

Mr R. J. Garbutt, of Thurlow, President, occupied the chair, and, after calling the meeting to order, he asked Mr. J. L. Clapp, one of the auditors, to present the report, which showed that the receipts and expenditures for the past year were as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Balance on hand	$ 59.99
Legislative grant	430.00
Membership subscription, donations, etc.	455.50
Prize money retained as membership fees	51.00
Admission tickets	431.90
Total	$1152.99

EXPENDITURES.

Prizes paid for horses, sheep, cattle	$330.50
Pigs, poultry and dairy products	73.05
Grains and seeds	27.25
Orchard and garden products	18.50
Implements and general manufactures	16.00
Fine arts, and ladies' work	38.25
Other exhibits	2.90
Total	$506.45
Spent in special attractions	$ 26.00
Money paid for prizes awarded in previous years	1.00
Rent, lighting, etc.	358.34
Insurance, etc.	3.75
Sundries	2.91
Secretary's and Treasurer's salaries	75.00
Working expenses	88.15
Meals, postage, etc.,	28.15
Auditors, etc.	15.40
Total expenditure	$1104.45
Balance on hand	$ 348.54

President Garbutt said the report presented was very satisfactory. The balance on hand was a considerable sum, notwithstanding that $150 was last year added to the prize list.

Mr. Farley was pleased at the report. It would enable the Society to increase the prize list this year.

MAYOR WANTS LARGER GRANT.

Mayor Sulman thought the report showed the wisdom of having the fair in Belleville. He thought the returns in another year would be still greater. Personally he would favor the city giving a larger grant and would do all he could to obtain the same. The prize list could, in his opinion, be increased. He moved, seconded by Mr. T. J. Hurley, that the report be adopted.

The motion was unanimously carried.

Mr. Garbutt said that the first matter to be considered was would the fair be held in Belleville or elsewhere.

Mayor Sulman spoke in favor of the fair being held in this city. He would do all he could for the fair if it was decided to hold it in the city. He felt confident that if the fair was held in Belleville it would increase year by year. The grant given by the Council last year would no doubt be as large this year, if not larger. The citizens, he was certain, were desirous of having the fair in this city. He moved that the fair be held in the city for the next 10 years.

Mr. C. Weese seconded the motion, speaking strongly in favor of the fair being held in the city.

Mr. H. K. Denyes was in hearty accord with the motion. He would like, however, to know if anything would be done towards erecting a suitable building for placing exhibits in.

The Mayor stated that plans for a suitable building were prepared.

The plans were produced and examined by all present. They appeared to be satisfactory.

Mr Terwilligar said the building would be first-class in every respect. Last year 100 members from the city were promised to the Society if the fair was held in Belleville, and 127 were secured; also a liberal grant from the Council.

The Mayor's motion was unanimously adopted, not a vote being recorded against it.

Mr W. C. Farley moved, seconded by Mr. C. Sheffield, a vote of thanks to the citizens of Belleville for the generous grant given the Society last year.

The motion was carried and Mayor Sulman replied briefly but appropriately.

The election of officers was next proceeded with and resulted as follows:

President—R. J. Garbutt.
First Vice-President—G. M. Campbell.
2nd Vice-President—Mayor Sulman.
Directors — T. J. Hurley, H. C. Emerson, W. Thrasher, H. K. Denyes, M. Coulter, C. Sheffield, W. Hanley, C. Weese, and L. R. Terwilligar.

The new Board then met and elected the following additional officers:

Treasurer—W. C. Farley.
Secretary—H. A. Fairman.
Auditors—G. G. Horton and J. L. Clapp.

The matter of dates of holding the fair was discussed at some length and the dates finally selected were Wednesday and Thursday, September 12th and 13th.

Before the Board adjourned a presentation took place. Mrs. George Thrasher, at whose place the meeting was held, was called into the room and a resolution of condolence was read referring to the death of her husband, during the past year, and she was presented with a purse of money.

Mrs. Thrasher made an appropriate reply.

The meeting then adjourned to meet at the call of the President.

AN OLD BOYS' REUNION.

BELLEVILLE BOYS IN BOSTON DINE AND TALK.

A former Bellevillian, now resident in Boston, writes:

Monday evening, Jan. 15th, the boys of old Belleville, now in Greater Boston, gathered at the American House to renew acquaintances, talk over days gone by and friends at home—for they all look to Belleville as home—and have a dinner. The room was decorated with the Dominion and United States flags, and for five hours the boys talked as only those can who have not met for years. There were no speeches—for all wished to talk at once of the old school days; stories were told that brought back to memory those happy days, and some met for the first time in twenty years. Those at the gathering were: Geo. E. Harris, New York; Will H. Johnson, Arlington Heights; Jim S. Johnson, Brookline; Arthur L. Johnson, Boston; Fred J. Lingham, Arlington Heights; Will M. Spry, Lynn; W. Clarence Sills, Somerville; Jim A. and Arthur A. Wensley, Lynn, and Jack J. Foley, Boston, son of Mr. Jas. Foley, of the G. T. Ry., now living in Belleville. The boys will have another dinner in the near future and should there be any others in Greater Boston from the old town they will be glad to have them join in a good time.

Mr. C. F. Gildersleeve Died This Morning.

WELL-KNOWN STEAMBOAT MAN OF KINGSTON PASSED AWAY FROM BLADDER DISEASE.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Kingston, Jan. 18. — C. F. Gildersleeve, the well-known steamboat man of this city, died this morning at one o'clock.

He had been ill for two weeks from bladder affection.

Mr Gildersleeve was born here in 1833. He studied law but later succeeded his father and brother in steamboat activities, the company they originated being the oldest on the continent. His father aided in building the Frontenac, the first steamboat on Lake Ontario.

Mr. Gildersleeve was from 1894 to 1904 the general manager of the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Company.

Stolen Pigeons.

A few weeks ago a lad named Fitzgerald had a pair of valuable pigeons stolen from him. Yesterday the birds were found in the possession of a boy named Thrasher, who claims he bought them from another party for 50 cents. An effort will be made to find out who took the pigeons away. Fitzgerald claims that the pair cost him $3.50, and states that there is only another pair like them in the city.

Phillips vs. Belleville.

Our urbane and more or less brilliant friend, Mr. City Clerk and Solicitor, Count Mikel, last night smilingly handed us some frightfully severe body blows in connection with that cause celebre, Phillips vs. Belleville. Having, after a night's repose, recovered from the state of collapse into which that letter threw us, we will, with his permission, for a brief period, trespass on the patience of our readers while we deal with some of his allegations, but before doing so we may be allowed to recall a remark made by a leading lawyer of this city when the present incumbent was made City Solicitor: "I cannot bring myself to think," he said, "that the city has made a wise choice, for Mikel is a fellow who is more inclined to argue over trivialities than to deal consistently with the solid points of law. Mark my words, if he does not run the city into plenty of lawsuits I have made a great mistake."

Mr. Mikel informs us that, instead of four judges favoring the city and four Mr. Phillips, there were six in favor of the city. Mr. Mikel may be technically right, but The Intelligencer received its information on what it considered reliable authority, and which, with all due deference to him, it still considers to be reliable authority. More on this poin anon.

Mr. Mikel says: Belleville did not start this litigation. The city was forced into court by the plaintiff.

With the above, in all humility, we beg to differ. The City Council called for tenders for the lots which were in the market, then refused to consider the highest tender, though warned by no less a personage than the Mayor of the city that a lawsuit would be the result if they refused to consider and accept the highest tender. Who forced the matter into court, Mr. Phillips or the city?

Mr. Mikel indulges in a sneer at this paper when he says: "As your requests last spring to the Council to drop their appeal and pay the plaintiff's solicitors' costs (about $600, and lost the city's disbursements, about $100), fell upon deaf ears, suppose you now try urging the plaintiff to drop his appeal and pay our costs." The Intelligencer cheerfully admits that it did at the time advocate the settlement of the suit, as we had no pecunary interest in the matter, other than that of a taxpayer; with lawyers, of course, the case was slightly different. We thought from the first that the Council was not acting justly, or in the interests of the ratepayers, when it refused a tender which was some $60 higher than the one accepted. We candidly confess that we, with hundreds of others, thought, after the trial before Mr. Justice Magee, that the city did not have a legal leg to stand upon. The decision has been changed, but to our mind the equities have not. To our idea, the city was ill-advisedly rushed into a lawsuit. The fact that the last Court applied to upset Judge Magee's contentions does not, to our mind, make wrong right, and this paper proposes to, in its humble way, and to the best of its ability, continue to defend what it believes to be justice and equity, whether the interests at stake be those of a private citizen, a municipality, or an empire.

If we were mistaken in our views of the case, as decided by Judge Magee, we were not alone. In other and more important cases the public and judges have been led into misconception of the results of lawsuits. A little while ago some 14 out of 16 judges in Canada decided, in the case of McLaren vs. Caldwell, that McLaren was right in the famous Streams case, but the Law Lords of the Privy Council in England, declared he was wrong. The Supreme Court in Canada unanimously decided the action of the Manitoba Legislature, in repealing the Separate Schools Act, to be ultra-vires. The Privy Council declared the Act to be intra vires. So that we poor laymen, in our mistaken judgment, sinned in eminent company, so far as judges' decisions were concerned. What an amount of litigation could have been saved, had those interested in the precedents referred to, had the legal solon who holds the distinguished position of City Solicitor of Belleville as their advisor!

Mr. Mikel seems to be rather touchy on the question of his costs, which were mentioned by us. But why? The Intelligencer merely pointed out the fact that the gentleman himself had more to gain by the last appeal than anyone else. And how does the case stand at present? The city wins its appeal, but has to pay Mr. Caldwell's costs; Mr. Phillips loses and has to pay the city's costs, which are made up of a bill presented by Mr. Mikel, and the latter gentleman is the only one to make any profit out of the entire transaction.

Let us for a moment, from a layman's standpoint, look at this question of costs, and how it stands. The city, on the advice of its salaried Solicitor, becomes involved in a lawsuit. If it loses it pays all costs, but the Solicitor's salary goes on. If it wins, its Solicitor's disbursements are paid out of the City Treasury, which, we presume, is recouped by the losing litigant, but the counsel fees, which are charged in the bill of costs, and collected from the loser, go into the pocket of the salaried Solicitor of the city. This may be the decision of the court, where the interests of lawyers are always favorably considered, but why should not the city, which pays its Solicitor for getting it into trouble, benefit to the extent of these costs?

One point is clear, and that is, no matter which side wins, the Solicitor loses not. It is with him "Heads I win, tails you lose."

Oh! yes, Count, you are all right, win or lose, and can afford to give good and sound advice.

The Count boasts that in no case in which he has been engaged in suits for the city, has he had so many people show their appreciation of his conduct as in this case of Phillips vs. Belleville. Had the Count given us the cases in which he has, in the past, been engaged, the boast could have been intelligently dealt with. Have not the Count's law transactions in which the city was interested through the accident companies and otherwise, been principally against the city, claiming damages for sprained ankles, stubbed toes, etc., etc., resulting from defective sidewalks? Probably our memory is defective in this particular; the Count will know. In such cases taxpayers are not likely to overwhelm the attacking lawyer with laudations.

In conclusion, it may be pointed out that, being a lawyer, Mr. Mikel argued with all a lawyer's plausibility. He denied many things, but was there not one thing he did not deny—nay, two things? He did not deny that, in repudiating its call for tenders, the City Council threw away some $60 which might just as well have been in the coffers of the city, and he does not deny that, as the outcome of all the litigation, so far, the only one connected with the city who apparently stands to make any profit out of it is Mr. Mikel himself. Mr. Mikel hints at possible personal animus on the part of people who, he says, urged him to press the matter to a conclusion. Perhaps, in his last sentence, our urbane and brilliant City Clerk has unwittingly touched the keynote of the whole affair?

CZAR'S FIRM DECISION.

Has Ordered Council of Ministers to Elaborate Amendment of Organic Laws of Russia.

London, Jan. 18.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times cables:—Although the present Government's apparent determination to persist in a policy of reaction, taken in conjunction with the disastrous condition of the country's finances and the spectre of famine and unrelenting bitterness among all classes, does not encourage the hope of a peaceful development of the Russian crisis there, is, at least, one bright spot in the horizon. This ray of light is furnished by the persistent, unshakable determination of the Sovereign to introduce constitutional Government. It is announced to-day that the Emperor has ordered a council of Ministers to elaborate an amendment of the organic laws of the empire in conformity with the manifesto of October 30. Although the announcement is not official, I am satisfied that it certainly represents the intentions of Nicholas.

Gouinlock, the City Council yesterday decided to award the contract for the new Process of Manufacture and Agricultural Implement building at the Exhibition to C. R. S. Dinnick for $81,000. The building will have a roof and dome constructed of steel trusses, and will be of an entirely modern and complete design. The successful contractor has entered into an agreement to have the building ready for occupancy by June 30, so that plenty of time will be allowed for fitting up the interior and placing the exhibits before the Fair opens.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—Returns received at the Trade and Commerce Department from Winnipeg show that 10,000,000 bushels of grain found its way to Buffalo last season as compared with 4,000,000 the year previous. TAXING THE RAILWAYS

Subject Under Consideration by the Ontario Government.

Municipal Associations of Counties of Wellington, Waterloo, Halton and Perth Wait Upon Cabinet, and Urge Certain Ideas of Railway Taxation—Railway Taxation Commission Recommended Tax of 3 Per Cent. on Gross Earnings.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—The Municipal Associations of the Counties of Wellington, Waterloo, Halton and Perth were represented by a deputation which waited upon the Ontario Government yesterday afternoon regarding a proposed measure of railway taxation for municipal purposes.

J. P. Downey, M. P. P., introduced the deputation to Premier Whitney and the Cabinet. The visitors were Herbert Wright, reeve of Guelph Township; John A. Cockburn, reeve of Puslinch Township; J. Mahon, reeve of Nassagaweya Township and James Donaldson, warden of Perth Township.

The members of the Cabinet present were: Premier Whitney, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Hon. Nelson Monteith, Hon. Dr. Reaume, Hon. Adam Beck.

A resolution which had been passed by the association proposed that the railways should be taxed on an assessment of $5,000 per mile on single tracks and $10,000 a mile on double tracks, and that municipalities should be the sole recipients of the taxes, and further that the assessment should be exclusive of the lands and buildings at present assessed under the municipal act.

During the discussion of the matter the question was raised as to whether it would be just to have the taxes go entirely or in a large part to the municipalities through which more than one railway ran while a considerable portion of traffic might have its origin in adjoining municipalities through which no railways were running.

The Premier replied that the whole matter of railway taxation was now under consideration by the Government and in the framing of a new legislation the representations made by this deputation would be given due weight.

Hon. Col. Matheson stated that last year the province received in taxes from railways $191,835. In the previous year the amount was $187,918. Now, the provincial rate of railway taxation is a fixed levy of $30 a mile on single tracks and $10 a mile on each additional track in organized districts. The rate is $20 and $5 in organized districts and on railways not exceeding 150 miles in length $15 and $5.

The Railway Taxation Commission, in their report, recommended the imposition of a tax of 3 per cent. on the gross earnings of the railways.

LONDON DEPUTATION'S REQUEST.

Ask Ontario Government For $75,000 For Hygienic School.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—The large deputation from London which waited upon Premier Whitney and the Cabinet yesterday asked for a Government institution to cost $75,000, to be known as the Hygienic Institute, or a school for sanitary science. Dr. McCallum replied to the Premier that the idea was to have the institution built and controlled directly by the Government. Mr. Whitney said he had asked a reply to the question because there seemed to be an idea that the proposed institution would be in affiliation with the Western University. He declared emphatically that the Government stood where the Sandfield Macdonald Government stood 40 years ago on the granting of provincial aid to denominational institutions. They were directly opposed to it. He wished that the subject of medical education be discussed separately from the question of general university education. London's claims were entitled to consideration and the Premier asked for a detailed statement of their wants. The various speakers suggested that instruction be given in the new institution to medical health officers, and that laboratories be established for the benefit of the medical profession of the district.

Mining Men Foregather.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—A number of those interested in the mining industry of Ontario met last evening at the King Edward Hotel and formed a Toronto Branch of the Canadian Mining Institute. This step was taken in view of the proposed revision of the mining laws at the next session of the Ontario Legislature. The following officers were elected: Eugene Coste, M. E., chairman; B. A. C. Craig, vice-chairman; Geo. Nickle, treasurer; S. Dillon Mills, secretary; Dr. A. P. Coleman and Prof. W. G. Miller, councillors.

Talk of C. P. R. Strike.

Winnipeg, Jan. 18.—Nineteen men in the auditing department and fifty men of the stores employes of the C. P. R. quit work yesterday afternoon, and there is grave danger of a general strike on the whole of the road. The secretary of the union said that unless the C. P. R. was willing to arbitrate, a general sympathetic strike would be declared on the whole of the road.

FALLIERES IS PRESIDENT.

French Senate Elects Him by Good Majority—His Political Career Began in 1876.

Paris, Jan. 18.—M. Fallieres was yesterday elected President of the republic.

The vote was: M. Fallieres, 449; M. Doumer, 371; scattered, 28.

The National Assembly met at one o'clock in the Congress Hall of the Royal Palace, Versailles. The Assembly consists nominally of 591 deputies and 300 Senators, but owing to death, illness and the passage of some of the deputies to the Senate, leaving their seats vacant, the number present was decreased to about 860, making 430 votes necessary to elect. The greatest interest was manifested in the proceedings, which were very prolonged, the members of the Assembly voting in alphabetical order.

The New President.

M. Clement Armand Fallieres, the new President of France, is the son of a magistrate's clerk and the grandson of a blacksmith. He was born in 1841 at Mezin, in the Department of Lot-et-Garonne. He studied law and was called to the Bar at Merac, of which town he was afterwards mayor for many years. In 1876 he was elected to the Chamber of Deputies as a Republican, and affiliated himself with the left group in the Chamber, and in 1880 was named as Under Secretary to the Minister of the Interior. In 1882 he was made president of the Council and ad interim Minister of Foreign Affairs. Subsequently he became successively Minister of Public Instruction, of the Interior and of Justice. He was elected Senator in 1890, and has been three times president of that body. M. Fallieres took an active part in the religious question, opposing at first the proposition for the separation of church and state, but later energetically advocated the repression of the clergy.

Mr. Schryer Had Been Instructing Boy in Use of a Rifle.

Bridgeburg, Jan. 18.—Orange Schryer of Fort Erie was shot and killed by Willie C. Dougall, his 10-year-old nephew, Tuesday at the home of the lad's father, W. M. Dougall, president of the Fort Erie Board of Trade.

Mr. Schryer was showing the lad the working of a rifle in the yard, and, leaving his nephew, he went into an outhouse. In his absence the boy took aim at a target and fired. The bullet flew wild, and, piecing the wall of the outhouse, struck Schryer in the abdomen, severing an artery. He died within twenty-five minutes.

HELL OF FLAMING FIRE

Dr. Torrey's Vivid Picture of the Place of the Rejected.

People Grow Worse In Hell, Declares the Evangelist in Toronto's Massey Hall—A Place Without Hope—Only One Way of Escape From the Terrible Torment—"Take Christ! Take Him at Once!"

Toronto, Jan. 18.—Dr. Torrey preached the Gospel of an unmitigable and eternal hell of flaming fire for those who reject Christ during this life, to an audience that packed Massey Hall last night.

"Anyone who dares to hold out one ray of hope to the men who die impenitent dares to do what the Word of God does not do," he said. "The future destiny of the wicked is hopeless. There is not one ray of hope for those who die without Christ."

To accept Christ is to believe in Him in the heart, and to make a public profession, as in Dr. Torrey's formula, "I accept Jesus as my Saviour, my Lord and my King."

There was an absolute certainty of hell, because Jesus said so; it was described in Scripture, and our experience, our observation and common sense affirmed it, declared Dr. Torrey. It was a place of intense bodily suffering, torturing memories and remorse.

People Grow Worse In Hell.

"In that dark world it will not take long for man or woman to sink to the level of the lowest," he declared.

"Hell is without hope. Forever and ever is the ceaseless wail from that restless sea of fire. Would to God those who think otherwise could succeed in proving it! If they could only bring one text which, taken in connection with its context, would do so, I'd be the gladdest man alive. I am familiar with every passage used for this purpose," said Dr. Torrey, "and they won't bear the interpretation put upon them."

Only One Way of Escape.

"There is only one way to escape hell: By accepting Christ as your Lord and Master, and by living each day to please Him." Dr. Torrey then appealed to penitents to stand up. Like an express train he heard the far distant rumble and thunder of the wrath of God as it came rushing on.

"Get off the track! Take Christ! Take Him to-night!"

NOTED WOMAN DEAD.

Her Son Committed to Prison to Await Investigation Into Cause.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 18.—John McMurrow, son of Anita McMurrow, known as the Countess Le Bettancourt, was yesterday committed to prison to await the coroner's inquest into the death of his mother. Mrs. McMurrow died suddenly Tuesday, and the police say that a short time previous to her death she had quarrelled with her son. McMurrow declared he was in no manner responsible for his mother's death.

Mrs. Anita DeB McMurrow was 75 years old, and was once famous because of her claim to ownership of vast estates in Spain and Cuba of the value of $32,000,000. At one of her functions in 1876 were President Grant, Dom Pedro of Brazil, and Senor Barea, Spanish Minister to the United States. Senor Barea was a frequent visitor after that, and one night the countess induced him to let her have for a day the $20,000 that had been sent him for legation expenses. She did not repay the sum, and with disgrace staring him in the face, the Minister shot himself in the Fifth avenue Hotel, New York.

GERMANY NOT INTERESTED.

Disclaims Interference in France's Controversy With Venezuela.

Berlin, Jan. 18.—The Foreign Office calls the attention of the Associated Press to a London despatch which asserts upon an ostensibly excellent Paris authority that President Castro's attitude toward France is due to German intrigues. The Foreign Office says this is absolutely false. Germany has not interfered by a single word in France's controversy with Venezuela.

French Charge d'Affaires Ruled Off.

Caracas, Jan. 15, via Port of Spain, Trinidad, Jan. 18.—M. Taigny, the French charge d'affaires, having gone on board the French line steamer Martinique, at La Guaria yesterday without legal permission, the Venezuelan authorities have prohibited his landing again in Venezuela and he must go to Colon.

More Immigrants Coming.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—For the year ending December last there was an increase in immigration of 10,395, as compared with the previous year. The arrivals for the year 1905 were: British, 64,863; Continental, 35,331, and the United States, 44,424, making a total of 144,618, as compared with 134,223 for 1904. The prospects are that the returns for 1906 will be greater than for the past year.

Doctors Ask For Grant.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—Dr. Roddick, Montreal; Dr. Starr, Toronto, and Dr. Prevost, Ottawa, saw Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday and asked for a grant towards entertaining the British Medical Association, which meets this year in Toronto. Sir Wilfrid promised earnest consideration. The deputation also saw the customs authorities with a view to securing free entrance of exhibits.

Going After Salvation Army.

Montreal, Jan. 18.—As a result of the conviction of Pierre Gauthier a short time ago for having disturbed a Salvation Army meeting, J. B. C. Bumbray, who defended the accused, said Tuesday that he would take proceedings shortly to stop the Army from holding services on the streets, on the ground that such services constitute a public nuisance.

Have Come to an Agreement.

Question of Contraband Settled By Moroccan Conference.

Fears that it Would Lead to Tension on the Carrying Out of the Repressive Measures Proves Happily Groundless—Feeling Strengthened Among the Delegates That Result of Conference Will Be Satisfactory

Algeciras, Spain, Jan. 19.—The delegates to the Morocco conference held a private session lasting two hours yesterday afternoon. The session resulted practically in an agreement on the main lines of a plan for the repression of contraband entering Morocco. It was feared that this question of contraband might lead to Franco-German tension as to who would carry out the repressive measures proposed, but this happily appears to have been averted. The discussion was an informal one for the purpose of permitting the delegates to speak their minds without having their views officially recorded.

The discussion proved to be most conciliatory, the only divergence being a statement made by the Moroccan delegates, that they could not permit the repression of, or the hunting for, arms without first referring the matter to the Sultan.

The delegates were in accord upon the need of all the powers passing laws penalising the introduction of contraband. They also tended towards a plan under which Morocco would adopt rigid repressive measures in co-operation with the powers. This followed a proposition submitted by Spain, which was designed to reconcile the differences between France and Germany.

Goes to Committee.

A committee of five was appointed to study and report on a final project at the session to be held Saturday. This committee is composed of Signor Malmusi, Italian; Count Von Tattenbach, German; H. Regnault, French; Sidi El Mokhri, Morocco, and Senor Cavallere, Spanish.

Yesterday's meeting has strengthened the feeling among the delegates, that the results of the conference will be satisfactory.

The day has been fruitful in meetings of various groups of delegates with a view to conciliating their different interests.

Active telegraphing is going on between the Ambassadors and their respective capitals. The French are not trusting to the land lines, but send their despatches by a fast torpedo boat to Algiers, where they are cabled to France. The Duke of Almodovar, Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, who is president of the conference, has a telegraph instrument in his private rooms for communication with Madrid.

Germany Approved.

The Spanish proposition comprised eight articles, the sixth of which pointed out that France and Spain, having territory contiguous to Morocco, should be charged with the surveillance of contraband along their respective frontiers. When the Duke of Almodover read this article Herr Von Radowitz immediately rose and said that it met with the approval of Germany.

The French delegates expressed themselves as highly gratified with the attitude of Herr Von Radowitz, as it had been anticipated that Germany would likely raise difficulties concerning the control of the frontiers.

FRANCE IS GETTING READY.

Will Make Naval Demonstration Soon Against Venezuela.

Paris, Jan. 19.—Official confirmation of Venezuela's acrimonious treatment of M. Taigny, the retiring French charge d'affaires at Caracas, has reached the Foreign Office. The Government immediately decided to adopt the most energetic measures to obtain satisfaction. It is understood that a naval demonstration is under preparation, the division of the French warships recently assembled in the vicinity of Venezuelan waters being utilized for that purpose. A diplomat said yesterday that President Castro's action amounted to an act of hostility. Such an act could not remain unchastized, and France, the diplomat added, will have the support of the whole world in demanding and obtaining proper satisfaction, even should armed intervention prove necessary.

The cable company's officials received confirmation yesterday of the reports that their managers at Caracas and La Guaira have been expelled from Venezuela.

M. Maubouguret, the Venezuelan charge d'affaires here has received an intimation to leave French territory.

A telegram from L'Orient, the French war port in Brittany, announces that the cruisers Jean Bart and Chesselup-Loubat, are preparing to join the French division cruising in the vicinity of Venezuelan waters.

Congratulations.

Paris, Jan. 19.—President-elect Fallieres was yesterday overwhelmed with telegrams of congratulation from rulers, foreign statesmen and his colleagues.

An Alien Labor Case.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—H. Holman Evans, manager of the Union Life Insurance Co. was yesterday charged in the Police Court with having brought Albert Fookes, an industrial insurance expert from the United States in contravention of the alien labor law. T. C. Robinette, his counsel, pleaded that it did not come within the law. A week's remand was granted.

Try to Free Prisoner.

Tamworth, Jan. 19.—Two unknown men broke the bars of the Tamworth lock-up and tried to free Tommy Newport, who is awaiting trial for the attempted murder of Joseph Ladd, but fled on hearing a noise. Newport has been taken to Napanee.

Police Commissioner Dismissed.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 19.—Mayor Adam has requested the resignation of Police Commissioner Wm. D. Doherty.

Against Sunday Laws.

Ottawa, Jan. 19.—W. H. Thurston, president of the Canadian Union Conference of Seventh Day Adventists; A. O. Birrell, president of the Ontario conference of Seventh Day Adventists; H. E. Rockland, president of the Quebec conference, and Eugene Leland, principal of the Lorendale Academy, waited on Sir Wilfrid Laurier yesterday and opposed the proposition to pass a Sunday observance law next session.

"Green Goods" Man Remanded.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—Alex M. Cummings, whom the police charged with being a "green goods" operator, was arraigned before Magistrate Denison yesterday. He was charged with attempting to defraud William Davey, a Church street merchant, of $1,000 by offering to sell him counterfeit money. The Crown was not ready to go on. Cummings was remanded for a week without bail.

The Big Liberal Majority in Great Britain.

While the magnitude of the Liberal victory in England is a cause of present party jubilation, there was never within the past couple of years, says a contemporary, any doubt among those on the watch towers that the victory would be theirs and in very substantial form. It was only a question of majority. What the Conservatives reckoned upon was a Liberal majority of composite and fragile forces, which would fall in pieces after a few years, from the unwillingness or inability, or both, of the Liberal leaders to carry out the expectations of their backers, just as Mayor Dunne, of Chicago, has fallen down on his programme of civic reform, and Hearst would have failed to keep his ante-election pledges in case of his being mayor of New York.

Mr Chamberlain is now quoted as having been most pessimistic regarding the outcome. He predicted months ago disaster to the Conservative party in the elections, and only indulged the hope that at the next dissolution in a couple of years, perhaps, the trade question would get a fair hearing. Mr. Balfour in a public address despaired of receiving a renewal of confidence and conceded a term of power to the Liberals.

There is no occasion for astonishment, therefore, in the overturn that has been witnessed, though the extent of the reverse may be for the moment a fair cause of self-approbation on the part of C.-B. and his followers.

It will remain to be seen how long the rope composed of such varied elements will stand the strain to be put upon it. A larger majority is more likely to contain elements of disintegration than a small one. The large one is too apt to be defied in the consciousness of ministerial strength. The smaller can be held together by judicious give and take. An old age pension scheme is itself a vortex yawning before any Government in England. And is it likely that a Premier that remains unsubmissive to the strong impulses of Mr. John Burns will find his large backing a bed of rose leaves? or that the perennial firecracker like Churchill will carry the Ministerial pitcher often to the well without a crack in it?

U. S. Public Men Want Reciprocity.

A Washington correspondent, writing on January 13, says that "an old theme in a new phase," namely, reciprocity with Canada, is finding favor with representatives in Congress from all parts of the country. "For the first time," he says, "the men of only one idea are giving exhibitions of serious thought." The movement, we are told, which took its start in Massachusetts and other New England States, has spread to the middle west and is especially active in Iowa. Its leaders are generally identified with the Republican party in states like Ohio, Illinois and Iowa, where there is a growing weariness of the Dingley schedules. Several hundred thousand sober-minded Republicans see no reason why they should continue to pay a war tariff in order that wasteful congressman may squander that money on useless buildings throughout the country or in the irrigation of desert wastes for the principal benefit of multitudes of alien immigrants.

Mr. James J. Hill, the ex-Canadian United States railway magnate of St. Paul, has spoken strongly on this subject. He declares that reciprocity is the only salvation of the United States from the loss by immigration to Canada of a very large proportion of the highly desirable agricultural settlers, who have been chief factors in developing the Dakotas and Washington.

The correspondent observes that, although nothing will be done with the tariff this session, if all the influences now at work to bring about Canadian reciprocity can be combined, the demand will become too strong for the "stand-patters" to resist. Already the Douglas Democracy of Massachusetts is working hand in hand with the Foss Republicans of that State and the Cummins Republicans of Iowa, a sign of healthy independence.

All this movement, says the London Free Press, is predicated on the assurance given by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that any overture looking to better commercial relationship will have to come from the United States. That assurance, however, was given while there seemed a prospect of an enlarged scheme of commercial exchange within the Empire. What effect the elections in Great Britain will have on these views at Ottawa remains to be seen. Possibly Sir Wilfrid may feel a freer hand now in dealing with our Southern neighbor. May we look for a revival of his policy of "free trade as they have it in England?"

The Intelligencer's remarks re tax collection last night are heartily concurred in by all disinterested parties with whom we have talked. The consensus of opinion is that an end must be put to the present very jug-handled state of affairs. The command "Bear ye one another's burdens," did not refer to Belleville taxes. It is hard enough for some small property-owners in this city to pay their own legitimate taxes without having to shoulder additional expense caused by the shirking and sharp practise of rich men. It is up to the City Council to put a stop to this state of affairs. They can do it if they have the backbone.

The project for a new Y.M.C.A. building in Belleville seems to halt sadly. Why is this? Everybody admit that the Association is doing a good work, and that its usefulness would be greatly increased if it had better quarters. Other places, many of them smaller than this city, are putting up suitable buildings. Belleville should be far enough up in the procession to be able to hear the band. Come along, some of you rich men. Remember you're only stewards, after all, and you can't take a red cent of it with you.

The Hamilton Herald contains the following very truthful and sensible remarks: "It is safe to say that every number of every daily newspaper published contains errors of fact. When it is considered how news is gathered, from what a great number and variety of sources, through so great a number of channels—by cable and telegraph, by the spoken word, by written communication — the wonder is that mistakes in the printed news are not more frequent than they are. Thoughtless and interested people often say to newspaper men: 'You ought to be more careful: why don't you take pains to verify news before you print it?' As though such pains were not taken constantly! If people could only know of all the news that is left out because it cannot be satisfactorily verified, they would be less intolerant regarding the errors that do creep in. But if every item of news had to be positively verified before publication, so that it may have the evidential value of testimony sworn to in court, there would be mighty little news printed, and when it was printed it would not be news."

FOOD OR STIMULANT.

Ask your doctor if when he orders a patient to drink lots of pure milk he advises the addition of a large quantity of whiskey. He'll tell you "no" very emphatically. Yet there are people who, when ordered to get Scott's Emulsion, will accept some wine, cordial or extract of cod liver oil and think it is the same thing or better. If you want and need cod liver oil in its best, purest and most easily digested form, get Scott's Emulsion. If you want whiskey, that's another matter, but don't look for the same results.

G. T. R IMPROVEMENTS

COMPANY HAS PURCHASED VACANT LOTS AND RUMORS ARE CURRENT.

That the Grand Trunk Railway Company intends to make some improvements or changes here seems evident from a transaction which occurred on Wednesday. A number of vacant lots belonging to the city, which are adjacent to the company's premises, just north of the station, were sold, and through the Mayor we learn that the price paid was $460. We are informed that it is the intention of the railway authorities to level these lots up and make sidings thereon. There are rumors to the effect that some extensive improvements will, in the near future, be made in the yard here.

APPLE SHIPPERS FINED.

WERE GUILTY OF VIOLATION OF FRUIT- MARKS ACT—CASE OF IMPORTANCE TO CANADIAN EXPORTERS.

Trenton, Jan. 18.—Two cases of importance to fruit-growers and exporters were disposed of before Magistrate O'Rourke here to-day, when convictions for violation of section six of the Fruit Marks Act were registered against James Coyle and F. C. Morrow. The former contested the action and a fine of $50 and costs or 30 days in jail in Belleville was imposed. This was at the rate of $1 per barrel, the Court finding that in the shipment complained of there were 50 barrels below the standard required in the Act. Mr. Morrow entered a plea of guilty and was let off with a fine of $5 and costs. The inspectors pointed out that in Mr. Morrow's case they examined five barrels, and that subsequently he had given them a written admission that there were at least 40 barrels of apples marked XXX that were packed in the same quality of grade as the five examined by the inspectors and found to be below the standard.

"I had only to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills to appreciate their merit," writes Miss Annie S. Bryce, of Woodstock. "My system was out of order. My blood was weak and thin. I had a nasty, murky complexion. Peterboro, Jan. 18. — Last night Mrs. John Guerin, of Rogers street east, dancing at a gathering in Otonabee township, suddenly exclaimed, "I've got to quit," and fell to the floor dead. Burned to Death.

Napanee, Jan. 17.—Very sad indeed was the death of Mrs. Uriah Sills, of Richmond, which occurred on Thursday morning. On Wednesday morning while engaged in cleaning a lamp, the lamp broke and the oil falling on the stove and on Mrs. Sills' clothing, in an instant she was a mass of flames. Her husband ran to her assistance and quenched the flames, but the burns were so severe that after a day of awful suffering Mrs. Sills passed away on Thursday morning. Mrs. Sills' maiden name was Addie Cecilia Haskell, she being the daughter of the late Gordon Sills, a resident of Prince Edward county, and a niece of Mr. Almon Haskell, also a resident of Prince Edward County. Mr. Sills was so badly burned about the arms as to be almost helpless and will be confined to his home for some weeks as a result of his gallant efforts to save his wife.

Necessary Amount of Sleep.

Eminent British physicians and physiologists have been protesting against the small amount of sleep allowed to boys at English secondary and higher schools. An average boy of from 13 to 16 should, they say, have at least nine hours of unbroken rest in summer and nine and a half hours in winter. An hour less than these requirements is said to be the rule, and the medical authorities assert that the boys, on leaving school, are poorly equipped for the struggles of life, both in body and mind. Parents have been trusting to principals to look after the interests of the boys in the matter of physical, as well as mental, developments, but it would appear that the boys have not received enough sleep for purposes of growth and development.

The Chicago Record-Herald makes the following comment on this topic: "It is interesting to note that the practice of the United States is relied on by the protestors to bring about the improvement desired. In America, they say, the proper amount of sleep is insisted on, and care is taken to prevent disturbances and noise on the part of seniors disposed to play tricks at the expense of the juniors. The sleep question, as some comments point out, is really much broader. At college undergraduates are reproached for taking too many hours for rest, and the virtue of doing without sleep is exploited by thoughtless persons who forget that there are considerable individual differences of sleep requirement even among adults. We are told that this or that great man—Humboldt, Napoleon, Gladstone — managed to get along with four or five hours' sleep out of the twenty-four, and imitation or emulation of these exemplars is regarded as a noble practice, if not a duty. The Saturday Review assails such 'busybodies' with justifiable ferocity and tells them that they are blatant nuisances. 'A sleep,' it goes on to say, 'of eight or nine hours after a reasonably hard day's work, and a doze of an hour or so after waking in the morning, with, perhaps, a cup of tea just before rising —it is this kind of thing that makes life pleasing and worthy? Of course, our contemporary is referring to the 'upper classes,' but those who cannot have the extra dose and the tea between can yet take to heart the observations regarding the need and the virtue of sufficient sleep and the folly of apologizing with a sense of shame for falling short of exalted standards."

Address and Presentation.

On the evening of the 12th inst., about eighty of the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Burkes', of Fuller, gathered together and marched in taking the home by storm giving them a pleasant but complete surprise. At about 8.30 order was called and an opening piece given entitled "Our Lord is now Rejected," after which Rev. E. E. Howard read an address.

After this an apt response was given by both Mr. and Mrs. Burke and a number of goodly speeches were made by the gentlemen, after which refreshments were served by the ladies. Two beautiful rattan chairs were presented by Mr. B. F. McCumber and Mr. Jas. Hollinger. Among the frineds there were the following who came from a distance: Rev. and Mrs. E. Howard, West Huntingdon, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Ketcheson, Moira; Mr. and Mrs. Ray, Manitoba; Mr. John Mills, Kincardine; Miss E. Coulter, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. F. Sherwin, Crookston; Mr. and Mrs. J. Curly, and Mrs. Andrew Carson, Crookston; Mrs. F. Goodman, Picton.

A Shocking Accident.

The Picton Times gives the following account of the awful accident which befel the late Dennis O'Shea, of Prince Edward County, particulars of which were given in the Intelligencer:

A thrill of horror and regret has prevailed throughout Black River Bridge section since Monday, when at an early hour that morning one of the residents came to a tragic and untimely death by asphyxiation and then cremated in the ruins of his burning dwelling. The victim was Dennis O'Shea, Jr. The deceased who was yet in the prime of life, being at the age of about 40 years was possesed of a cheerful, winning and congenial nature, and was ever ready and willing to extend a helping hand in the hour of distress to those in need. The deepest gloom prevails here since the sad occurrence, and to those of us who had seen the unfortunate victim around among us within a short week, full of life and health, and now lying cold in death, it recalls with startling distinctness the truth of the assertion that in the midst of life we are in death. Mr. O'Shea lived in the house with his mother, who fortunately on the fatal night was in Picton visiting her daughter, Mrs. R. Gorman. The supposition is that Dennis put a quantity of soft coal in the cookstove and retired for the night about twelve o'clock, some time afterwards becoming asphyxiated by escaping gas before the stove finally burst and set fire to the house. When neighbors arrived on the scene about 4 a.m., and broke open the door of the burning house the body was found so badly burnt that it was entirely unrecognizable.

CHILD'S SAD DEATH.

THE LITTLE DAUGHTER OF MR. AND MRS. W. S. LYNCH, OF TWEED, DRANK CARBOLIC ACID AND DIED IN ABOUT TWO HOURS.

Tweed, Jan. 18. — A very sad affair happened at the Queen's Hotel on Tuesday afternoon about four o'clock, resulting in the death of Mary Marguerite, the little two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Lynch. The little one, being left alone for a few minutes, in some way secured a bottle of carbolic acid left on a stand in the room and swallowed a portion of the contents. When Mrs. Lynch entered the room she was terrified to find the child lying on the floor perfectly motionless. Doctors were immediately summoned but it was impossible to do anything to save the unfortunate child. By the application of stimulants artificial respiration was kept up for nearly two hours but about six o'clock the little one breathed its last. Mr. and Mrs. Lynch have the sympathy of many friends in their bereavement. The child was a very bright one and was the idol of its parents.

The Government and the Spoils.

Under the above heading a correspondent, who signs himself "Hastings," writes from Trenton as follows to the Toronto News:

"You seem to forget that the conditions existing in Ontario were unusual, perhaps unique. It had been asserted by Mr. Whitney, the Conservative party, the Conservative press and The News (I think) that the Ross Government had held power during the last six or seven years of its existence in spite of the fact that the Conservatives had a popular majority in the province. It had also been asserted by those same authorities that the Ross Government had resorted to the most dishonest and unscrupulous methods ever made use of in a civilized country to retain that power. The election returns proved the truth of the former assertion and the courts of justice proved the truth of the latter. If we admit these truths, and I fail to see how we can doubt them, then I ask, had the Ross Government the right to appoint men to official positions in the Province of Ontario during these six or seven years and had the Whitney Government the right to retain these men in office for one day? Can the fountain rise higher than its source? Could officials appointed by a dishonest Government holding place and power by dishonest means be expected to give the Province of Ontario an honest service? Did they do so? If the License Inspectors of Ontario (whose dismissal has been so much commented upon, apparently with the intent to do the Whitney Government injury) had done their duty in an honest manner, how do you account for the disreputable condition of the Toronto hotels?

"If the Inspectors, Superintendents, Boards, etc., of our asylums, prisons, etc., had performed their duties in an honest manner, how do you account for the fact that the Provincial Secretary's Department has collected $30,000 in December, 1905, for the maintenance of patients in our asylums, which should have been collected by these officials of the Ross Government appointed years ago. I read in The News a few weeks ago that there were strong suspicions that these same Ross Government appointed officials had collected money from Tories and allowed Grits to go free. And yet The News seems to think that a Grit official, no matter by what crooked ways he may have obtained his position, is a paragon, while a Tory who happens to be an applicant for an office under the Whitney Government is an incapable and should be branded as a hungry office-seeker. Holding an office under the Ontario Government does not make the Grit occupant any more honest, nor should applying for an office under that Government subject a Tory to abuse. Surely it is not an unpardonable sin for a man, even though he be a Tory, to apply for an office that he knows is held by a dishonest Grit who was appointed by a dishonest Government. Is it not a well-known fact that the Grits who know the workings of that fearful and wonderful thing called the Grit machine expected an almost wholesale dismissal of the provincial officials when Mr. Whitney's Government took office? Had Mr. Whitney's Government dismissed every official in Ontario who had been appointed by the Ross Government during the last six years of its existence I think both Grit and Tory would have felt that it was a great step towards giving us an honest official service."

Picton Sports Are Hard Losers.

Picton Times: Amid the fluttering of "royal purple and white" and accompanied by the Indian war-whoops of some half-dozen of the younger generation of sports, the O.H.A. junior hockey team left for Cobourg last Friday morning to retrieve if possible the defeat administered them here on the Tuesday previous. But "the best laid plans o' mice and men gang aft agley" and unfortunately F.E.N.'s went that weary road on this occasion despite the strenuous efforts of our plucky little septette. The referee, Mr. Sandy Burrows, of Belleville, aided by the bumping of the Cobourg fellows, managed to give Picton a thorough drubbing and the final score read 6-2 Seldom does one see rulings so prejudiced as Mr. Burrows' rulings looked. In the first half, which was fast, clean hockey, the score was a tie, two all, a score which indicated very clearly the relative merit of the competing teams. But in the second! It was a case of "do or die" and Cobourg "did." Slashing, tripping and body checking was most freely indulged in, although the referee simply could not see it and allowed the Lakesiders to run in four more. It is to be sincerely regretted that Cobourg didn't get a few more; they deserved them and it would have made a better impression on the crowds who kept coaching them on with such shouts as "Give it to him, Robinson," and "Stand up, Picton, and take your medicine." We predict for Cobourg the winning of this district. Allowed the tactics which they pursued in Cobourg they are bound to pile up record scores and finish up deserving (?) victors. Here's to their success!— The Team.

CURLING.

To-night's Local Players.

Belleville and Napanee curlers will this evening play a match here in connection with the schedule of the Eastern Ontario Curling Association. This will be the first curling match to take place in Belleville for years, and will no doubt prove interesting to lovers of "the roarin' game." The two local rinks will be as follows:

A. E. Lewis, A. McGie, S. W. Vermilyea, F. Dolan, skip.

M. Wright, F. Quick, J. A. McFee, J. V. Jenkins, skip.

SPORTING NOTES.

The swiftest hockey match of the season is on at the rink to-night, when the fast and tricky "Pea Canners," of Picton, will clash with the local seven. "Sandy" Burrows says his boys have lost their last game for this season. They are going faster with every practice, and the team which beats them on local ice will need wings on their skates. The Picton youngsters have a pretty combination, and break away like lightning. They will make the locals extend themselves. The Bellevilles will have on their very best line-up.

Brockville Times: John Marks, Captain of the Federals, was removed to the St. Vincent de Paul Hospital to day suffering from tonsilitis.

The Napanee curlers, who play here to-night, must be "some punkins." On Wednesday night they beat Kingston by scores of 21-6 and 19-12 respectively.

F. C. Wagborne of Toronto has been named as the referee here to-night, if they don't side track him again.

Someone sent a forged letter to the goalkeeper of the Montreal Wanderers, purporting to be from the President of the club, telling him his services would not be required at the match that night. West Elgin Grit methods are creeping into hockey down east.

THE ROOT OF NEURALGIC HEADACHE

Is an irritable condition of the nerves caused by cold. Relief comes quickly from Nerviline, the great pain reliever of to-day. "I consider Nerviline a magical remedy for neuralgia," writes Mrs. E. G Harris, of Baltimore. "But I never worry if Nerviline is in the house. A few applications never yet failed to kill the pain. I can also recommend Nerviline for stiffness, rheumatism and muscular pains." In use nearly fifty years; try Nerviline yourself.

NOT LEGALLY ELECTED.

J. H. WARREN HAS TO DROP OUT OF MARMORA VILLAGE COUNCIL.

At the first meeting of the newly elected council for the village of Marmora on Monday, 8th inst., the right of Mr. J. H. Warren to sit in the council was questioned because he had not taken his declaration of property qualifications. The council decided to adjourn to the following evening to secure legal advice. The appointment of a clerk was very keenly contested, three of the members, including Mr. Warren, being in favor of Dr. Jones who had applied, the remaining two being in favor of the old clerk, Mr. R. Snell.

At the adjourned meeting the village solicitor, Mr. J. F. Wills, of Belleville, explained that there should have been no election as Mr. Warren, by not making said declaration, had resigned and the remaining four had been elected by acclamation. Mr. John McWilliams, the fifth man, then took his seat as councillor in place of Mr. Warren. The appointment of a clerk was then taken up, and Mr. Snell, being supported by Mr. McWilliams, was elected.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. PROVED IN MOUNT FOREST.

Every doctor in this town tried his best to relieve Mrs. J. Withom, of asthma: none succeeded. "For years," she states, "I was a dreadful sufferer; nothing gave relief. At times I found it necessary to have all the doors and windows open to get my breath. When in despair I heard of Catarrhozone. I used it and now am perfectly cured." This proves beyond doubt that any case of asthma is curable with Catarrhozone. No remedy so pleasant, none so absolutely certain to thoroughly cure; try Catarrhozone yourself; it's guaranteed.

IRISH HISTORY.

New Book of Great Importance and Timely Interest From Pen of Prof. Goldwin Smith.

Whether the Liberals introduce Home Rule bills or not, much will be heard at the next session of the British Parliament on the subject of a separate Legislature for Ireland. The Nationalists, who are likely to number nearly a hundred members, will keep the subject to the fore, believing that their best chance in ten years has come. In these circumstances a new book on "Irish History and the Irish Question" is particularly timely, and, coming from the pen of Goldwin Smith, of great importance. The author, as a Liberal-Unionist, is not a Home Ruler; neither is he, in this case, a special pleader on the other side. He presents the facts, and leaves to his readers the business of drawing conclusions.

The Saddest of Histories.

In the first line of the recital the note of sympathy is struck. The author finds that "of all histories, the history of Ireland is the saddest. For nearly seven centuries it was a course of strife between races, bloodshed, massacre, misgovernment, civil war, oppression and misery." Turning to the country's geographical position and natural resources, he reminds us that the theatre of the tragedy is a large island lying beside one nearly three times larger, which cuts it off from the Continent of Europe, while on the other side it fronts the wide ocean. "The climate is, for the most part, too wet for wheat. The pasture is very rich. Ireland seems by nature to be a grazing country and a country of large farms. Tillage and small farms have been enforced by the redundance of the rural population consequent upon the destruction of urban industries. In coal and minerals Ireland is poor, while the sister island abounds in them, and in its swarming factories and mines furnishes the first-rate market for the produce of Irish pasturage; so that the two islands are commercial complements of each other."

Economic Problems.

Economic rather than political he regards as the real problem of Ireland to-day. In the most favorable circumstances, can Ireland support even her shrunken population? A separate Legislature cannot alter laws of nature. "Patriotic eloquence will not change her skies or render it otherwise than cruel to induce her people to stay in a land in which they cannot earn their bread. Instances there may be of barren soil made by the loving industry of the small owner fruitful and capable of supporting a large population; but the industy of the small owner, though it can improve the soil, cannot alter the skies." Then he asks the following questions, which he seems inclined to answer in the negative:

"Is Ireland generally capable of being turned with advantage into an arable country? Can wheat or grain of any kind be profitably raised there in face of the competition of the great grain-growing countries, like the region now opened; and bidding fair to be greatly expanded, in the Canadian Northwest? Then, again, is there reason to look in any other direction than farming for a speedy extension of Irish industries, such as would provide bread sufficient for the population?"

Protestant and Catholic.

So much is said of Ireland's present condition, and as the subject is acutely controversial, this phase may be dropped here. The author reviews the early, unhappy story of the Celtic race, and arrives at an epoch when the quarrel began which, till this day, has not been settled. Until the reign of Henry VIII, Ireland had suffered, indeed, as a weaker race, but had not been punished for her religion. But when England, under Henry, turned to Protestantism, Ireland remained Roman Catholic, and to Ireland flocked active emisaries of Rome, with the Jesuits at their head, to carry on the propaganda. After them came many Spanish crusaders, and Ireland seemed about to regain the position held by her at a much earlier time, when she was the religious headquarters of the world. Under Elizabeth the Roman Catholic propaganda was regarded as seditious, and steps to crush it were at once undertaken.

Laws as Terrible as War.

After fire and the sword had done their work a system of laws was devised which was scarcely more humane than war. He quotes Burke's scathing denunciation of the penal laws when he said that the code was "a complete system of coherence and consistency; well digested and well composed in all its parts. It was a machine of wise and elaborate contrivance, and was as well fitted for the oppression, impoverishment and degradation of a people and the debasement in them of human nature itself as ever proceeded from the perverted ingenuity of man." The treatment of the Jews in modern times by the Russians was mild and beneficial in comparison with the treatment of Catholic Ireland by Protestant England, and in all history there is no parallel, except it be that of the Moriscoes in Spain. The author has no reason to believe that the Catholics would have been less ruthless had they triumphed, and, indeed, the horrors of this long period are more fairly attributable to a certain stage through which civilization and religion were then passing than to the particular cruelty and infamy of either body of religious thought.

The Tyranny of Trade.

Added to the persecutions of an alien church, established by force of arms in England, was the tyranny of the English merchants. At once jealous and contemptuous of Ireland's commercial rivalry, the harshest laws were enacted to crush it Under Charles II. the Irish export cattle trade had been killed, and toward the close of the seventeenth century the trade in wool was manacled by prohibition of its export to England or any foreign country. Thwarted in this direction, Irish industrial energy manifested itself successively in the manufacture of cotton, gloves, glass and beer. One after the other was ruined by the rapacity of English merchants, and even the linen industry, guaranteed by Strafford, was practically destroyed by tariff tricks. Of the story of Ireland Mr. Goldwin Smith speaks sympathetically. At the same time he opposes any breach of the union.

EDUCATION.

(New York Sun.)

The family wished to ornament
Their high and cultured station,
And every one save Pa confessed
A thirst for education.

Jack went to Pigskin Institute.
The other teams all licking,
But somehow when it came to bills
'Twas Pa who did the kicking.

Corinda went to cooking school
Compounding grub amazing,
But somehow when it came to dough
'Twas Pa who did the raising.

Tom to a business college went,
Financial ways divining,
But somehow when it came to checks
'Twas Pa who did the signing.

Kate took a high toned boarding school
Sharp angles to diminish,
But somehow after she came out
'Twas Pa who saw his finish.

And Pa! He's plodding right along
And hasn't got much knowledge,
In fact his standing is but this—
A senior in life's college.

A New Yorker has just got $20,000 damages as a result of being bitten by a bear, and some Wall St. people are no doubt wondering if a fellow who has been badly bitten by a lot of bulls might not recover something handsome in the way of damages.

So rapidly are new uses for cement being discovered that there is no danger of over-production for many years to come. An experiment in shipbuilding which may prove revolutionary in its results is the use of concrete decks for steel vessels. Heretofore such decks have been constructed of wood, even in the case of battleships. In the Corey, one of the ore steamers recently built for the lake tarde, the oak decks heretofore used in this type of vessel have been replaced with concrete, one of the chief reasons for the substitution being the greater security from fire. Judging from the extreme durability of well-laid cement when used for pavements the outcome of the experiment should be entirely successful. According to the Cement and Engineering News, all warships are now lined with cement mortar in the water ballast compartments, where it does excellent service in preserving from rusting the steel plates which would otherwise come into direct contact with the salt sea water.

"WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN."

One room I'll have that's full of shelves,
For nothing but books; and the books themselves
Shall be of a sort that a man will choose
If he loves that good old word "peruse";
The kind of book that you open by chance
To browse on the page with a leisurely glance,
Certain of finding something new,
Although you have read it ten times through.

I don't mean books like "Punch" in series,
Or all the volumes of "Notes and Queries";
But those wherein, without effort, your eyes
Fall where the favorite passage lies,
Knowing the page and exact position—
It's never the same in another edition!

"The Vicar of Wakefield" and "Evelina,"
"Ella," "The Egoist," "Emma," "Catriona," Fuller and Malory, "Westward Ho!"
And the wonderful story of Daniel Defoe,
And Isaak Walton, and Gilbert White,
And plays and poetry left and right!

No glass doors, and no "fumed oak"—
Plain deal, and fumed by myself with smoke;
Stained, if at all, to a pleasant brown,
With ledges and places for putting books down,
And there I'll sit by a blazing log
With a sweet old briar and a glass of grog,
And read my "Pickwick," "Pendennis," "Huck, Finn," Cosily there—when my ship comes in.

IRVING ART TREASURES.

Auction Sale Brings In Nearly a Hundred Thousand Dollars.

At the auction sale of Sir Henry Irving's effects the famous Whistler portrait of Sir Henry as King Philip II of Spain was sold for $25,200. Sargent's portrait of Ellen Terry in the character of Lady Macbeth realized $6,300. The Whistler picture goes to America. The name of the purchaser of the Whistler was carefully withheld by the representative of a firm of booksellers of London, who bid it in. It is rumored, however, that J. Pierpont Morgan of New York was the actual purchaser.

The last day of the Irving sale was remarkable for the testimony of the regard in which the actor was held. The sale was confined to pictures and drawings by such artists as Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, Sir Philip Burne-Jones, Sir Joshua Reynolds, John S. Sargent, Whistler and others. The attendance included many well-known persons of the dramatic art and fashionable world. The bidding was lively and largely sentimental, and the prices which prevailed throughout the sale were maintained, when $50,000 was realized. Altogether the Irving sale brought between $75,000 and $100,000.

Shared Scott's Secret.

There were many queer characters in Ballantyne's printing house in Edinburgh, and one of them declared that he knew who wrote the Waverley Novels, "almost as soon as the master," Mr. James Ballantyne.

"I had just begun a new sheet of 'Guy Mannering,'" he would say, "one night awhile after twelve, and all the compositors had left, when in comes Mr. Ballantyne himself, with a letter in his hand and a lot o' types.

"'I am going to make a small alteration, Sandy,' said he. 'Unlock the form, will you? I'll not keep you many minutes.'

"Well, I did as I was bidden, and Mr. Ballantyne looked at the letter, and altered three lines on one page, and one line on another.

"'That will do now, Sandy, I think,' were his words, and off he went, never thinking he had left the letter lying on my bank. I had barely time to get a glimpse at it when he came back, but I kent the hand weel and the signature, and it was Walter Scott.' I had a great lang ballant (ballad) in Sir Walter's ain hand o' write at hame, so that I was nae stranger to it. So you see, gentlemen, I kent the grand secret when it was a secret."

Farthings.

As we have pointed out in these columns, the farthing is almost peculiar to London, while the omnibus conductor, has the strongest objection to the coin. The explanation of that objection is simple. For the omnibus conductor is expected to pay in his day's takings with as few coppers as possible. Therefore on his last journey he gets as much silver as he can in exchange for the coppers at his favorite public house. A public house sells nothing for a farthing, has no use for the coin. Nor has the omnibus conductor.—London Chronicle.

Exporters.

No straight loads of exporters were offered, only a few lots picked out of mixed loads. J. B. Shields of Mount Albert topped the market with 7 choice shipping cattle, 1450 lbs. each, at $5 per cwt. A few other lots sold at $4.50 to $4.75. Export bulls sold lower at $3.50 to $3.70 per cwt.

Butchers.

Trade in butcher cattle was not nearly as brisk for the common grades, which declined in price from 15c to 25c per cwt., but the good to choice qualities held their own fairly well, as there was a limited supply. A few choice picked heifers sold at $4.25 to $4.50; loads of good sold from $3.85 to $4.10; fair to good, $3.60 to $3.75; common, $3.25 to $3.50; cows at $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt.; canners, $1.50 to $2.

A moderate supply of stockers and feeders met a draggy market. Harry Murby bought about 100 at about the same prices as we quoted on Tuesday. Mr. Murby makes a specialty of these classes and had a few orders to fill, otherwise he would not have been able to place them at these prices: short-keep feeders, 1100 to 1200 lbs. each, at $3.90 to $4.25; feeders, 900 to 1000 lbs., at $3.40 to $3.80; best yearling steers, 600 to 850 lbs., at at $3 to $3.35; common stockers, of which there were few sold, at $2.75 per cwt.

Milch Cows.

About 35 or 40 milch cows and springers were offered. Prices ranged from $30 to $70 each, but there was only one brought the latter price.

Veal Calves.

Sixty veal calves sold at $3.50 to $7 per cwt. and more good calves were wanted.

Sheep and Lambs.

Trade in sheep and lambs was active with prices firm, for sheep and lambs were higher, as will be seen by quotations of sales given below. Export sheep, $4.50 to $4.75; bucks, $3.50 to $3.75 per cwt. Lambs, grain-fed, sold at $6.50 to $6.75 for the bulk, with one or two lots reported at $6.80 to $6.90 per cwt.; mixed lots sold at $6 to $6.40 per cwt.

Hogs.

There was a liberal supply, which sold 10c higher than was quoted on Tuesday. Mr. Harris quotes selects at $6.75, lights and fats at $6.50, sows at $4 to $5, stags at $2.50 to $3.50 per cwt.

At several points in the country $6.60 and $6.65 per cwt. was reported as being paid by the Davies and Montreal Packing Companies to the farmers.

Against Departmental Stores.

Montreal, Jan. 19.—At the annual meeting of the Canadian Grocers' Association week after next, a determined effort will be made to get the wholesale grocers to combine to refuse sales to the department stores. The retailers state that their business has been more seriously affected than any other by the departmental competition because of the staple line of goods they have to handle. The movement is headed by the Toronto and Hamilton Grocers' Guilds and strongly supported by Montreal retailers.

THE FOUNDERED GALLEON.

BY

WEATHERBY CHESNEY, AND ALICK MUNRO.

COPYRIGHT, 1902: BY THE AUTHORS.

ketch was slewed round to ride bows on to the waves.

Then there was leisure to look around, and the sight which met the eyes was cruel enough, for the pounding seas had made sad havoc while the Eureka had been rolling helpless in their trough.

Nine days after the adventure with the giant eel Dolly made a mistake which was the cause of giving a great disappointment to the whole crew. This is how it happened:

The Eureka had sunk quietly down to within a fathom or so of the ooze, and the doctor, who always directed the upward and downward movements of the vessel himself, left the conning tower and went down to help the others on the crank. Dolly remained in the conning tower alone. The wheel worked easily. She had the binnacle in front of her and was well able to steer a compass course, and as the pace which the hand driven screw gave along the sea floor was slow, and Dolly's brown eyes were very keen, she was easily able to keep a smart lookout at the same time.

The other seven members of the crew had been grinding stolidly on at the hateful screw shaft for some hour and a half, saying little to one another, and (some of them at least) thinking of little, for the monotony of the never ending work had knocked the spirit out of them. But of a sudden they were electrified into sentient beings again by a cry from above of: "Oh, there she is! There! At last!"

No order was given, but the crank stopped dead at the turn, and save for Cain Laversha, who sat in his place unmoved, one and all rushed up the ladder and squeezed into the conning tower. The Eureka was motionless, and her searchlight was turned full on the object which had caused Dolly's cry.

It was a wreck, lying over on its starboard bilge, with decks facing away from the Eureka. Fore and main masts were standing. Topmasts had disappeared; mizzenmasts had gone by the board and lay trailing on the port quarters by the rigging. Her sides were gapped with gun ports. Her bottom was still green with rumpled copper sheathing.

The doctor's hand stole on to Dolly's shoulder.

"Little girl," said he, "brace yourself up for a disappointment."

"Oh, doctor," cried Dolly, "isn't that the Santa Catarina?"

"Dolly, my dear, I'm very sorry for you. Your smart lookout has done you credit, but this is a little accident that might have happened to any of us. Wrecks are not plentiful down here on the sea floor, and it is natural to steer for the first that one sees, but that is not the one we want."

"Ah, Guthrie, my lad, shake hands!"

"But are you sure, doctor? Hadn't we better go round to the other side of her and make certain before we go away?"

The doctor shook his head. "Unfortunately I am quite sure of what I say," he went on. "That unlucky craft before us has not been down 50 years. She has been built this century. The galleon we are after has very different lines, and, moreover, could not possibly be in anything like such good preservation. I'm very sorry for you, Dolly"—

"Don't say any more about it, doctor. I'm sorry for having hoaxed you all. So if you'll forgive me for that, please don't say anything more."

And Dr. Tring and the rest went below again, and Dolly resumed her solitary watch.

However, though Captain Colepepper could not resist the temptation now and again of alluding slyly to the wonderful things which his daughter's eyes did contrive to pick out, it was to the smartness of those same brown eyes that the success with which the toilers' patient efforts were in the end tardily crowned was due. And it came just in the nick of time. So utterly wearied was every one with the work and sickened with the endless turning of that awful crank that even the two promoters of the enterprise had almost brought themselves to admit that it must be abandoned. Dolly saved it; at the eleventh hour, it is true, but still in time. Dr. Tring admitted afterward that he doubted whether he could have held out a single day longer. Once more on the surface and the feeling of loathing might have proved too strong to be resisted. Canvas would have been bent and the Eureka's bowsprit pointed away from the hateful spot.

But about midway through the "watch below" (as they were wont with grim irony to term their period of toil in the bowels of the sea), after they had been down about three hours, there came a quiet hail of "Doctor!" from the conning tower, and the doctor, jumping from his seat, sprang nimbly up the ladder. Presently the order was passed to stop the crank, and then there was a short hissing as the water entered the ballast tanks and a faint jolt as the ketch grounded on the ooze.

No word had reached the bold yet of what had occurred, but the single great hope which was in each worker's mind made him sanguine. Unable to stand the suspense, Guthrie clambered swiftly up the ladder.

The doctor was standing by Dolly looking out from one of the ports. He turned and saw the young man coming through the hatch.

"Ah, Guthrie, my lad, shake hands! Pleased to see you. Miss Colepepper has made up her mind that it's to be a schooner, a big schooner, with a steam launch in davits so that she can be towed if it falls calm."

Dolly laughed.

"I hadn't quite got so far as that, doctor," she said. "But," she added, turning to the undergraduate, "I think it's possible that I may decide to have the yacht after all. There lies the money to buy it with, anyway."

"Come and have a look at her. The Santa Catarina at last!" said the doctor gleefully. "She isn't in a very good state of preservation as far as her woodwork goes, but I don't suppose the specie will be much the worse for the ducking. Where is she? Why, there, straight in front of you, in the middle of the circle of light. Miss Colepepper must have had remarkably good eyes to spot such a ruin. Don't you think so now?"

CHAPTER IX.

THE HAUL OF THE GRAB.

Those brown eyes of Dolly's must indeed have been keen to make out the site where the Santa Catarina was lying, for, with the exception of a slight mound, covered by the omnipresent ooze, there was little to distinguish the Spanish treasure ship from the ocean floor on which it rested.

Every drop of blood in the girl's body was tingling with excitement at the discovery which her bright eyes had been the means of making, and with a little flush of pleasure she made way for the undergraduate to take her place at the window of the conning tower. Dr. Tring, meanwhile, kept up a running fire of congratulations.

As he looked through the glazed port Guthrie could hardly persuade himself that before him lay the foundered galleon that they had come so far and labored so heavily to discover.

He had pictured to himself a shattered and rotten wreck, which, though eaten by the sea water and broken by the explosion, would still retain a good deal of its old form and appearance. In Dr. Tring's room at 103 Shaftoe street had been, among other things, a volume of old prints which were copies from the sea pictures in the great council chamber of the doges' palace at Venice. Dolly and he had studied these carefully, and from them had obtained a very tolerable notion of the naval architecture of the earlier centuries. He expected, therefore, that the galleon would have some traces remaining of lofty forecastle and aftercastle; that at least one of her great poop lanterns would be left; that she would have, at any rate, one mast standing. He had pictured to himself the size and shape of its heavy "roundtop," and, in fact, though the whole would doubtless be shrouded by a heavy growth of sea shrub and creeper, he had hoped that his imagination, by filling in a few gaps here and there, would still have given him a very fair picture of what the galleon was when she rode in all her bravery of canvas and bunting over the waves of the surface.

But he had forgotten to allow for the corroding power of the brine. Iron nails had dissolved to mere threads, copper had turned to a thin green sirup, the hard ilex oak timbers and sheathing had rotted to a pulpy slime. The whole fabric of the great vessel had disintegrated of its own weight, reclining where it fell, and the ever precipitating diatom ooze had shrouded its identity almost completely. Save here and there, where some charred beam or plank of the hard Spanish timber projected crookedly like a rotten tree snag, the symmetry of the mound was unbroken.

"Bravo, Dolly!" said the doctor. "Whatever we do get now we've to thank you for. D'you know, Guthrie, that this is the third time we have been over this particular piece of ground and that I was on the watch on the other occasions, and must have passed this precious hillock as I did any other inequality of the sea floor!"

"Miss Colepepper," said the undergraduate, "the very next time we pipe down to dinner I shall crave the honor of proposing your health."

"And I'll join you in drinking the toast!" cried the doctor heartily. "But now we won't waste any more time in congratulations. The length of our stay down in this gloomy treasure house is limited. We can't prolong it without danger. So, Guthrie, away with you below again, lift her a bit with the pumps, give a few turns to the crank shaft till I get her under command again and laid fairly up alongside, and then stand by to work the grab!"

At the word down the young man tumbled, full of eagerness as he had half an hour before been full of lassitude and loathing. He told the tale to the others, and never had work in those gloomy 'tween decks been more cheerfully done. The pumps clanked merrily till the ketch was off the ground again, and then the screw shaft hummed round at such a pace that Dr. Tring was forced to shout down to ease her or he should run the hillock out of sight. And afterward, when the doctor had ranged her up into position and dropped her down on to the sea floor again, the others tumbled briskly forward to the set of cranks which worked the grab, every man of them tingling with excitement. For the result of all their weary labors was now to be put to the proof.

This "grab," as its inventor had christened it, deserves a word of description. It was in structure very like those uncouth contrivances yclept "steam navvies," which are usually associated with the making of railway cuttings. Attached to the mainmast, as to an upright, was a heavy moving arm, which was capable of complete control from below. At the end of this was a long strut, armed with a large iron scoop, which would dig up a load of anything within its reach, swing it round and deposit it upon the deck. All the movements of the machine were arranged so that they could be controlled from the 'tween decks.

In practice the grab had many drawbacks; but, considering the enormous difficulties under which it was worked, it did its duties very well. It certainly reflected great credit upon its inventor, Dr. Tring. The machine's movements in a medium so dense as sea water is at that level were sufficient to set up small eddies, and, although these had not been calculated upon beforehand, their presence was noticed with pleasure. Under their influence much of the ooze, which the scoop brought up along with the more solid matter, was swept gently from the decks, and in consequence the weight of the cargoes which had to be carried to the surface was considerably lightened.

There were, as it turned out, many of these journeys to the surface and back again, for the Eureka's people did not by any means hit off the treasure room of the galleon at the first attempt. Under that formless mound, amid which the ruins of the Santa Catarina were heaped, it was impossible to distinguish stem from stern, and for awhile they did not even know bow from broadside. In fact, five journeys forward and back to the surface were necessary before they could gain even this elementary knowledge, and then many, many more before they brought to daylight the first coin of the coveted treasure.

Yet with what keen interest they waded among their slimy hauls may be guessed. Many a page from the history of the past which had long been plucked away from the view of modern man was opened to their eager eyes. In one or another of their trips they brought to the surface heavy culverins, brass sakers and falconets, the shell bound stock of an arquebus, the bronze holder for a linstock—all archæological treasures over which Dr. Tring gloated as he never gloated over the golden harvest which came later. Captain Colepepper picked up the jeweled hilt of some dandy rapier, whose blade had centuries ago dissolved in rust. The doctor found a woman's pouncet box of tortoise shell and gold, perfect as the day it left the jeweler's booth. They picked out a score of pewter plates and dishes and then a lot of earthen bowls, and this find told them that they must be in the neighborhood of the caboose. Once they found some old officer's chest, which, owing probably to pretreatment of the wood, was not injured in the least by the immersion, and had preserved the clothing, books and knickknacks with which it was crammed in the same condition they had been in when the dead hand shot the key for the last time all those generations ago.

But of the whereabouts of the treasure room they could for a long time form no idea, and, although their hauls gave them many things of interest and some of value, the gold which had lured them all across an ocean to find was nowhere to be seen. Tons and tons of the fabric of that old sea ruin, and of its slimy covering, had they laboriously dug out and overhauled. They had found out how she lay, bitten their way through her 'thwart ships and then attacked her fore and aft.

One Ingredient of

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It wont hurt you any more than will the soda.
The other ingredients of Zutoo are just as harmless.
If you knew what the drug cures contain, and their ultimate effect on the system, you would discard them at once and take Zutoo, which is harmless as Soda.

"The treasure room must be under the after cabin floor," had been Dr. Tring's dictum when the work began. "It always lay there!"

So they bored their way sternward and found many more objects of interest, mementos of other days, tiny relics, many of them insignificant, but all, to a student of the past, pregnant with history. Dr. Tring reveled among all these treasures, working over them far into the night. In fact, so keen was his enthusiasm that he could hardly be persuaded to take the rest which the hard work of each day made imperative.

But the store of specie was not found in the after part of the galleon, though they cut their way right through to the sternpost before giving up the hope that it might be there. Their midships section had already told them that it did not lie under the waist, so they drew the only possible conclusion and set to work excavating from the fore part of the vessel. For awhile the work went quickly, for the powder room had evidently been situated forward of the waist, and the charred rubbish gave easily. But farther on the wood, as if hardened by the fire, was the toughest and best preserved they had come across, and many a time the scuttle of the grab got obstinately jammed, and they were forced patiently to grind a way through some sturdy obstruction.

But at last the seat of the Golconda was reached without their knowing it, and they pumped their way up to the surface with nearly £5,000 worth of bullion lying mixed with the litter of slimy mud and rotten splinters upon their decks.

"It seems an unprofitable looking bunch of filth," observed Captain Colepepper as he stooped to tuck his trousers into the tops of his sea boots. The ketch was floating once more in conventional fashion, riding snugly to her sea anchor.

"Eh, but what's this, though?" said Tom Jelly, picking up a dull, gray disk from the ooze and swilling it gently in a pool of water.

"A button," suggested Guthrie. "We've got the pickings of some poor fellow's dunnage sack again."

"With due respect, no!" replied Tom. "It's a coin, sir. Look, when I rub the cankering away! See them two pillars? It's a dollar. The Spaniards have their goldpieces stamped just the same today."

"Here's another," interposed Henrietta, "and another!"

"Himmel! Here was ein vistvul. Unt loog! Zee vat Gain haf pigged op!"

"Gould," said Cain stolidly. "I've seed a boss' shoe made from a smaller bar. Zusan Pierce, I'll buy 'ee a Waterbury watch when I get whoam."

"Heh! What's this?" squeaked Henrietta, who was slopping about among the mud scratching away the rubbish with rapid, eager fingers. "A pig of lead? It's heavy enough and about the color. Lend me your knife, Tom. Ah! Look! See that gleam? Silver! An ingot of it, Tom, and weighing pretty nearly a hundredweight, I warrant!"

"We're getting into the right latitude at last, doctor, I'm thinking," opined the captain, swilling a bucketful of water over the heap and laying bare a couple more heavy ingots. "You've hit upon the dons' strong box at last."

The doctor had mounted his eyeglass amid even a deeper ridge and furrow of puckers than usual. He was scrubbing his hands together delightedly.

"To tell the truth," he said, "I had almost given up hope of getting a single thing after we found the stern empty. These old archives I took the trouble to hunt up at Madrid expressly mentioned that the treasure room was under the great cabin floor. How it got shifted I can't imagine."

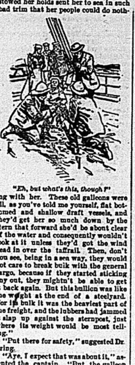
"Simple enough," said the captain. "As I figure it out, it was something like this: The lubberly stevedores who stowed her holds sent her to sea in such bad trim that her people could do nothing with her. These old galleons were all, as you've told me yourself, flat bottomed and shallow draft vessels, and they'd get her so much down by the stern that forward she'd be about clear of the water and consequently wouldn't look at it unless they'd got the wind dead in over the taffrail. Then, don't you see, being in a sea way, they would not care to break bulk with the general cargo, because if they started sticking any out, they mightn't be able to get it back again. But this bullion was like the weight at the end of a steelyard. For its bulk it was the heaviest part of the freight, and the lubbers had jammed it slap up against the sternpost, just where its weight would be most telling."



"Eh, but what's this, though?"

"Put there for safety," suggested Dr. Tring.

"Aye, I expect that was about it," assented the captain. "But the galleon did not intend to make a landfall after leaving her port till she ran into her river in Spain; so, if any of the treasure was stolen in transit, it couldn't be carried away, and they could always find it by searching the hands. So old Don What's-his-name just gives an order, and the whole lot is carted along the decks and stowed in the lazaret forward, and as a result the galleon gets into as good trim again as such a hulking old floating haystack ever could."

"An ingenious explanation, Colepepper, and probably the right one. But we'll talk it out more afterward. For the present, let's get this filth swilled away and the valuables stowed under hatches, and then, after a spell of rest, get ourselves under cover again and go down after more. It is always well to get on with your haymaking while the sun shines."

With eager hopes, the others sprang to do the doctor's bidding, but, as it happened, the £5,000 worth of treasure which lay about the deck was all that they got from the ruins of the foundered galleon for many a long day.

For that night, the Eureka was driven from her station above the Santa Catarina, and the chance of the second dip into the board of gold, which, after so much patient toil, the adventurers had found at last, was taken from them for the present. When the next morning broke, it was not for wealth, but for life itself, that they had to struggle, and when at last the struggle was over, and they had leisure to plan once more, there was none of them so bold as to propose to return just then for the rest of the sunken million.

Neptune had been kind to them so far, but, now that they had found the door of his treasure chamber, he grew petulant, and in his anger he came very near to adding eight more corpses to the unmonumented graveyard of the ocean.

CHAPTER X.

GUTHRIE FINDS PROFIT IN THE TEMPEST.

The sun set big and yellow behind a reef of purple cloud, and the wind, which had been blowing a fresh breeze from the east all day, died away to nothing.

The task of sifting out the gold and silver from the litter of mud and rotted splinters which the grab had deposited on the Eureka's deck, went on merrily, and most of the workers were far too busy and eager to notice the threatening aspect of the sky. Captain Colepepper, however, was too good a seaman not to have observed the coming danger, and that he was worried and anxious would have been perfectly obvious to the others, if they had had eyes for anything else but the pleasant work in which they were engaged. Four times in the space of less than an hour, the captain left the task of mud grubbing on deck and went below to the after cabin, and the furrows on his brow when he rejoined the others grew deeper each time.

After the fourth of these visits to the cabin he approached Dr. Tring and quietly drew him aside.

"Doctor," he said in low tones, "come below with me."

The doctor handed the ingot, which he was cleaning of its coating of mud, to Guthrie and followed his partner.

"Well, Colepepper," he said when they were alone, "what is it?"

"Look at the glass."

Dr. Tring did so and whistled. "By Jove," he said, "it has gone down, and no mistake!"

"An inch and a quarter in the last 20 minutes," observed the captain, "and it's still falling. We're in for something out of the common."

The doctor thought for a moment. "Then, if that is so," he said at length, "we'd better hurry up and get below the surface again before it begins. Now that we've hit upon the spot where the gold lies we can afford to be lavish with our supply of oxygen. We'll just stay down below there till it has blown itself out."

"Aye," assented the captain, "we might do that if it was going to be an ordinary storm. I've no more fancy than you have for leaving the Santa Catarina now that we've got our fingers in her money box at last, but this blow isn't going to be a matter of hours or of days either maybe. It's a regular tornado that we're in for, I tell you. Look at the sea—dancing up and down like a plate of calf's foot jelly, though there isn't as much wind as would blow a match out. I've been in a storm of the kind before, and I know the signs. We shall be precious lucky if we escape with the loss of a spar or two."

"Do you mean that we shall have to leave this spot now, when the Spanish gold is almost in our pockets?"

"Yes, doctor, I do. We shall have to set about putting the ketch into sea trim again as fast as we can and then run before the storm wherever it chooses to take us. If we're lucky and don't go to the bottom, we can come back here afterward for the rest of the gold. If we're not lucky, we shall be dismasted or worse. A West Indian tornado is the holiest sort of terror when it fairly breaks loose, and that's what we are going to have before we are a couple of hours older. Your trick of command is over for the present, doctor, I'm afraid, for there will be precious small chance of any more undersurface work for a spell. It's a pity, but there's no help for it, so we'd best be setting about putting the Eureka into shipshape again."

The two friends left the cabin and returned to the deck. The gold and silver had by this time all been sorted out from among the slime, and Tom Jelly and Henrietta were already busy with the buckets washing down the mud fouled decks. Captain Colepepper explained matters to the others and then put the whole crew to the work of setting up the canvas again. It had to be hurriedly done, for there was no time to be lost, and hardly had the necessary rags of storm sail been set when the tornado broke upon them.

The first squall came down upon the Eureka with a rush, driving a wave of white foam before it. The sea had risen rapidly, even before the wind came, running crosswise in several directions at the same time and giving clear evidence by its confused warring of the nature of the tempest which was coming. It was one of the circular storms of the tropics, than which no wind that blows is more destructive.

The time at their disposal had been too short to allow them to get the running tackle of the mainmast set in order. To make sure that its standing rigging was all taut and firmly secured was all that they had been able to do. They had managed, however, to set the mizzen and a small jib, and under these Captain Colepepper hoped that she might be able to weather the tornado. It might be, perhaps, that even this small sail spread would be too much for her.

As soon as the storm was fairly upon them Guthrie was sent to the forward lookout, not that there was any very strong likelihood of their falling in with any other vessel in these latitudes, but Captain Colepepper would take no unnecessary risks, and the awful experience which they had already had with the P. and O. liner in the bay of Biscay was a sufficient reminder to the most thoughtless that their skipper's caution was by no means unreasonable.

Presently Guthrie was joined at his post by Dolly. In the rapidly growing darkness the young man could just make out that there was an expression of intense disappointment on her face, which even the excitement of the coming battle with the sea did not avail to drive away.

"Alan," she said, "isn't it horrid to be driven away like this, just when we had got to the interesting corner of that galleon thing? It's too provoking!"

Guthrie nodded, and there was a moment's silence, broken only by the increasing voice of the tempest. The young man shared to the full the general disappointment and was thoroughly out of temper with himself and his fate. He was in no mood, therefore, for discussing the situation, even with Dolly, for at that moment it seemed to him that the Flat Holme light had been a lying beacon after all.

The sea had got up quickly, and just then a wave struck heavily against the bows of the ketch. Its top curled over the weather bulwark, and a heavy shower of spray dashed against the girl at his side.

"Hadn't you better go below?" he suggested. "We shall have these big fellows coming aboard bodily by and by."

Dolly shook the water from her curls with a laugh. She was a sailor's daughter, and the delight of a tussle with the sea was taking hold of her and driving away her disappointment. It was not in any case her nature to be melancholy for long.

"No," she said gayly. "I enjoy it. I'll go if it gets much worse, though, or father will begin to be anxious about me. I think, though," she added, with a pout which the darkness did not succeed in hiding, "that I've earned the right to take my share of danger with the others."

"You have indeed!" assented the young man warmly. "But, all the same, I don't see that there's any necessity for you to expose yourself to it needlessly. Please go, Dolly!"

"Does that mean that you would rather be without my company?" asked Dolly mischievously.

"Of course it doesn't! You know that. But"—

"Then I shall stay a little longer," declared the girl decidedly. "It's jolly up here, even if it is dangerous, and down below in the cabin it's—it's slow! Alan, do you think we shall ever get the rest of that gold on board?"

"Thinking of that yacht which you mean to buy, eh?" asked the young man, with a laugh. "I hope so, Dolly."

To be continued.

AFTER A BRITISH DEGREE.

What It Costs the Canadian Aspirant in Post Graduate Work—Walking London Hospitals.

Canada easily leads the colonies in the number of post-graduate students in the great medical hospital schools of London, and Toronto, as usual, leads all Canadian cities, writes the London correspondent of the Toronto Telegram.

It will be a surprise to most Canadians, and even to medical Toronto that there are to-day in London alone, over forty of our physicians either seeking the higher degree or attached to the schools or hospitals as instructors or resident physicians.

The Telegram is able to give the names of 36. Of these sixteen hold appointments in some of the leading London hospitals, five being Toronto physicians, and eleven from other Canadian cities.

Of the other twenty-one physicians seeking degrees and not averse to accepting the other, the lucrative posts, nine are from Toronto and 12 from other Canadian cities.

The first are an inspiration to the second, and all are bringing honor to the Canadian schools.

Have Won Position.

The five Toronto men who have begun brilliant careers in the medical world of London are—

Dr. Donald Armour, assistant surgeon, West London Hospital.

Dr. George W. Ross, pathologist and registrar at Victoria Park Hospital.

Dr. George Badgerow, house surgeon at Golden Square Hospital.

Dr. C. H. Thomas, house surgeon, Great Northern Central Hospital, Holloway.

Dr. Colin Campbell, house surgeon at Moorefields.

Here are the other eleven holding positions in London hospitals, two being at Birmingham:

Dr. C. K. Russell, Montreal, house surgeon at the National Epileptic Hospital.

Dr. George H. MacLaren, of Hamilton, senior resident medical officer at Birmingham Opthalmic Hospital.

Dr. Simpson, also of Hamilton, at Moorefields.

Dr. Hamilton Wright, pathologist at West London Hospital.

Dr. Charles Stuart, senior resident surgeon at Golden Square Hospital.

Dr. Ambrose Stanton, senior house surgeon at London School of Tropical Medicine.

Dr. E. G. Weir, at Greenwich Seaman's Hospital.

Dr. W. Jones, senior house surgeon at St. Peter's.

Dr. W. H. Lowry, house surgeon at Birmingham Opthalmic Hospital.

Dr. Allen, at Hackney Hospital.

Post-Graduate Students.

Of the twenty-one post-graduate students now studying in London, these are from Toronto:

Dr. S. H. Westman.
Dr. F. H. Scott.
Dr. J. A. McCallum.
Dr. E. D. Carder.
Dr. Percy W. Saunders.
Dr. R. D. Sproat.
Dr. A. W. Fisher.
Dr. John Malloch.
Dr. William Hackney.

From Other Cities.

The twelve from other Canadian cities are:

Dr. Allan Rankin, Montreal.
Dr. R. S. Forbes, Montreal.
Dr. Howitt, Guelph.
Dr. Thomas McPherson, Stratford.
Dr. W. F. Smith, Halifax.
Dr. W. R. Alway.
Dr. E. L. Hodgins.
Dr. Cascaden.

Two others who have only recently returned to Toronto are Dr. David King Smith and Dr. C. W. Crane.

Men of Reputation.

It is estimated that there are in Great Britain over fifty Canadian physicians, including, of course, the forty in London.

While Canada is not yet represented among the ten eminent physicians and surgeons in His Majesty's household, it is a Canadian who has reached that much prized and much sought for goal, Regius Professor of Medicine at Oxford, Prof. William Osler.

Of the five Toronto men now climbing the difficult ladder, to medical fame, Dr. Donald Armour is a round or two ahead. As is well known, he is a son of the late Chief Justice Armour, and is a Cobourg Old Boy. He is already one of the leaders among the younger surgeons of London.

The West London Hospital, to the staff of which he was appointed some three or four years ago, has a college for post-graduate students alone.

Dr. George W. Ross, the son of ex-Premier Ross, has in two short years risen to his present position as pathologist and registrar at Victoria Park Hospital.

Both Dr. Badgerow and Dr. Colin Campbell have just completed their terms on the staff of the Golden Square and Moorefields, and are about to return to Toronto.

Dr. C. H. Thomas has only recently been appointed to the staff of the Great Northern.

"Never" Speak of Grandpa Lincoln.

Sir Wemyss Reid wrote of Abraham Lincoln—"One must not blame Englishmen to severely, however, for their lack of appreciation of Lincoln. It is doubtful if even now he is appreciated at his true worth by Americans themselves. Some years ago I had the pleasure of taking in to dinner a charming young lady who was Lincoln's direct descendant. I said to her: 'You can hardly understand how pleased I am to have met you. There is scarcely any man whose name is familiar to me whom I honor as I honor the memory of your grandfather.' The young lady opened her eyes in innocent amazement and confessed subsequently that she had been very much surprised at my little speech. 'At home they never say anything about grandpapa.'"

Qualified.

Mr. Tubbs.—So you want a billet for your baby, eh? Mr. Dodds—Yes. You see he's failed in everything we've put him to, so far, and I'm afraid he's pretty incompetent all round. So I thought the best thing I could do with him would be to get him a post in a Government office like the one you've got. —Pick-Me-Up.

SONG OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Son of all the cities,
With their culture and their code,
What brings you to my doorway
By the lone and starry road
You may come with seven pack mules,
You may walk or steam or ride,
But you'll never, never know me
Till you come without a guide.

You may come with rod and level,
With compass and with chain,
To parcel me for profit
And barter me for gain;
You may tell my age in eons
By the scars on drift and slide,
But you'll never, never know me
Till you learn how I abide.

You may range my slopes for silver;
You may wash my hands for gold;
You may tally every jewel
Till my gems have all been told;
You may cross my wildest canyon;
You may top my last divide,
But you'll never, never know me
Till you watch me wonder eyed.

You must sleep for nights together
With your head upon my breast,
The companion of my silence,
The receiver of my rest.
You may come with all your wisdom
To subdue me in your pride,
But you'll never, never know me
Till you love me like a bride.
—Bliss Carman.

TO A LIVING TOMB.

Young Canadian Father Damien, W. H. P. Anderson, Goes to Lepers.

Mr. W. H. P. Anderson, a young Canadian, who has renounced all the pleasures of the world and decided to risk a living death that he may devote his life to ministering to lepers, has left England for India.

Since the days of heroic Father Damien, says The London Express, no man has given up his life and his career to undertake this work, and the occasion is at once notable and touching. True, the Mission to Lepers have ministers in India, who from time to time drift into leper work. But these men go among the outcasts from time to time merely because their work calls them there now and again.

Born thirty years ago, Mr. Anderson is a tall, well set-up man, with close-croped black hair and a well-trimmed little moustache. He walks quickly and with decision; his manner is quiet, but brisk and business-like. His whole appearance, indeed, suggests a young but successful business man. And this is exactly what Mr. Anderson is.

He is a chartered accountant, who has recently ceased from being the chief of the staff of one of the greatest auditing firms in the United States. He has, too, refused a partnership in another sucessful firm that he might take up his mission work.

It is ten years now since the call of the leper first came home to him, but it was not till a year ago that he set about taking the step that he had decided on long before.

The reason for his delay was, he explained to a representative of The Express, that before taking up so arduous and anxious a task, he wished to prove himself successful as a business man.

"Mind you," he said, "I do not wish for a moment to suggest anything about missionaries as a whole, but I could not bear to have it said that I had taken to mission work simply because I was a failure in other walks of life. I was successful, and I saw that if I had been successful in business I could be successful as a missionary. And to be a failure as a missionary would be an infinitely greater failure than to be unsuccessful in business things."

The station to which Mr. Anderson goes is Chandkuri, in Central India, midway between Calcutta and Bombay. The lepers' settlement lies twenty miles from the railway track, and is practically isolated.

That he may preach the gospel to the five hundred outcasts at Chandkuri, Mr. Anderson is now learning the vernacular; but apart from his spiritual ministry, the Mission to Lepers, under whose auspices he goes, has much for him to do, and relies much upon his business capacity.

New Record For the Railroads.

Saturday before Christmas of 1905 will pass down in Toronto railroad history as the greatest day on record. During the day the railroads operating from Toronto centre carried in and out of the city about 60,000 passengers. Of this number the Grand Trunk handled 40,000 people.

To handle this army of travelers the Grand Trunk sent out or received 84 trains—45 inbound and 39 out. Great credit must be given the operating and despatching offices, particularly when it is considered that this business was handled on six tracks. The total number of passengers handled by the Grand Trunk on Friday and Saturday is estimated at 50,000.

The Canadian Pacific Railroad participated in the holiday rush to an unusual extent, and, while having fewer lines in Ontario than its sister system, broke all its past records. In the absence of Mr. C. B. Foster, district passenger agent, an estimate from an official source could not be secured. The chief despatcher's record, however, shows that 38 trains were moved—19 inbound and 19 out. Estimating from this information, the Canadian Pacific Railroad moved on Saturday about 19,000 people.

The two leading systems moved on Friday and Saturday in and out of Toronto city approximately 80,000 people.

Nothing Like It Out of Eden.

A box of the fruit which took the first prize for collections of winter fruit at the Ontario Horticultural Exhibition, held in Toronto in November, 1905, was shipped to Lord Glenesk, proprietor of The Morning Post, London, England. The president of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, Mr. McNeill, has received an acknowledgment from the noble lord in which he says:

"Did such fruit ever grow out of the Garden of Eden? Surely mortals and angels might well be excused for yielding to such bait. Canada needs little or no inducement to immigration. I must thank you over and over again for this proof that Canada, which can supply all that is necessary, can also supply all that is beautiful. If Chamberlain comes in, there simply must be a bounty on your lovely fruit."

Her Scholarship

By ANNA WEBBLING

Millie sat on the edge of the dock and looked up the road. Far up the dusty line, running between green fields, a toiling wagon spoke of passengers for the ferry, and she swung herself lightly into the launch and busied herself with starting the motor.

It was hard work for a girl, but something had to be done, and the Millie M. was her only resource. It had been fun, in her summer vacations, to play about the boat and help her father at the wheel, but now that he was ill she must take his work and every day, in fair weather or wet, make the hourly trips across the four mile stretch of water which lay between the two states.

Could she have finished her course at college she might have found some other way of supporting herself and her father, but there was an opportunity here to continue her studies, and when rheumatism had laid her father flat upon his back she had given up the last term and had come home to be both captain and engineer of the little ferry.

Between December and April the lake was frozen over, and if business was brisk this summer there might be a chance to take a half year. It would delay her graduation at least a year, perhaps two, but her chief duty was toward her father, who, since her babyhood, had striven so hard to replace that mother she had lost. He lavished upon her the affection a child naturally would expect from both parents.

When Captain Blake had been compelled to take to his bed his first thought was for his daughter, the second for the ferry line. If he gave it up some one else would start a line, and when he should be better he would find his means of livelihood gone.

But even at that he would not hear of Millie's giving up the term, and the girl settled the matter herself by calmly coming home and putting the launch in commission as soon as the ice went out.

It had been a busy season, for after hours the patrons of the big hotel on the bluff were wont to hire the boat for excursions, and the entries on the credit side of the bank book cheered Millie when at times it seemed that she, too, would have to give in.

There were eight in the party that wanted to cross the lake, but only the strapping sheriff attracted her attention as he dropped into the launch and climbed over the partition separating the engines from the space reserved for passengers.

"Most ready to give in, Millie?" he asked as the girl made room for him on the seat beside her.

"Not yet," she answered as she reached for the wheel. "I won't let them say that I married you so as to be able to complete my course."

"I guess they know well enough that we have been engaged ever since I went into long trousers," he urged. "Besides, if you really love me you will not care what people say."

"Can't you understand how I feel?" she demanded. "I do love you, Dick, but they must not say that I married you just because you had the money I needed. They must realize that I married you because I wanted you. You have your spurs as sheriff to win; I have my diploma to work for. Then we can be married."

"And live happy ever after," he completed. "Just wait until I capture the Mayville bank robbers, and I'll win your consent in spite of you."

"Who are they?" she asked curiously.

He laid a slip of paper on the seat, but just then the last of the passengers settled themselves and the boat glided out into the lake, Millie's hands as steady upon the wheel as though the man she loved were not sitting beside her.

She thought no more of the paper until she came down to the dock after supper to get the launch ready for a trip down the lake with a party from the hotel. Then she glanced over the printed slip, offering an aggregate reward of $20,000 for the three men whose robbery of the Mayville bank was the latest of a daring series.

So engrossed did she become that she had to hurry at the last, and just as she looked up from her task, ready to pull out and run down to the hotel dock, she faced an exceedingly businesslike revolver held by a determined looking man.

"We want to cross the lake," he said roughly, "and you can't get across any too quick either."

"This boat is engaged for the evening," she said calmly, though her heart beat high as she realized that there were three in the party—the very men at whose portraits she had been looking.

"You bet it's engaged," was the rough response, "and you want to make a start mighty prompt."

Her quick ear caught the beat of hoofs down the road, and she sought to make a delay, but there was something in the leader's face that meant business, and, with no comment, she turned to the motor and the boat glided out into the lake.

At the direction of the leader she crowded on full speed, and soon the chug-chug of the explosions became a whir as the screw churned the water and the boat shot ahead.

From the talk aft she knew that the pursuers had taken to rowboats, but they had small chance against the Millie M., and the three men amused themselves by jeering at their pursuers.

Once across the lake Millie knew that they would have an opportunity to escape before the officers could be aroused, and the chance of Dick Davis getting the reward would be lost, since the arrest would be made in another state.

All at once an idea flashed through her brain, and she gave the wheel a twist. The men were quick to notice the maneuver, and the leader was at her side in an instant.

"If you're turning round," he declared, "you're going to run right straight into eternity."

"I gathered from your talk that you did not expect friends to meet you at the landing pier," she laughed. "As long as you insist upon being taken across I was heading for a point lower down. There is a small station there where you can take your train if you want one."

The leader lowered his pistol. "You've got sense," he declared admiringly. "Instead of having hysterics you know your business. You'll land us there and we'll make the passage money a hundred apiece. Pretty good pay, ain't it?"

Millie laughed an assent, though her heart was in her mouth. Just beyond was a sand bank, the only one in this part of the lake. At the speed the boat was going she could drive it into the mud so tightly that they could not work it off. This would give Dick a chance to catch up with them.

With eyes straining through the deepening gloom, she drove the boat ahead until, with a crash, it buried its nose in the soft, sticky mud. The shock threw the men to the bottom of the boat, and with a spring Millie possessed herself of the pistol.

"If you make a move I'll shoot!" she cried.

In spite of the warning, one of the men rose to his feet. With a courage born of desperation the girl pulled the trigger. With a yell, he fell heavily to the bottom of the boat, a bullet in his hip.

The shot was answered by one nearer the shore, and, backing toward the engine, Millie blew the whistle at intervals until two rowboats loomed up through the darkness, and Dick Davis sprang into the launch.

There was a short, sharp fight, but the captors were too many for the fugitives.

Millie fainted, and it was not until the launch had been towed and shoved from the mud that she revived, and with trembling hands headed once more for the home dock.

After the posse had been paid there was still $1,900 left, and by the end of the summer Dick Davis' brother had learned to run the launch and Millie Davis went back to college on what she laughingly explained to her husband was the "sheriff scholarship."

Dick had insisted upon her marriage before she went, and, somehow, that evening in the boat had showed her how much she needed him.

Hindoo Conception of Immortality.

Christians believe in the immortality of the soul, as do the Hindoos, but the contrast here is striking. Christians believe that God created man and that there was a time when we were not. Hindoos believe that the soul is uncreated and that it has already existed forever as it will continue to live forever. Christians suppose that at death the soul enters "an eternal state" where it will continue forever, but Hindoos think of death merely as an incident in the long chain of endless changes which go on without beginning or end, unless indeed in rare instances some one attain salvation. Salvation to the Christian means heaven, but to the educated Hindoo it means absorption in the Deity and the loss of our individual existence. Save as it finds this salvation, then, the soul goes on and on forever and exists in a vast variety of forms—on earth, in heaven, in hell, as god, devil, insect, animal, man, having all experiences and undergoing every possible form of happiness and woe, though on the whole suffering predominates.—Chautauquan.

Everything Limited.

The old farmer went to one end of the swaying coach to wash his hands. He could find only a few remnants of soap. "Boy," he drawled, "there don't seem to be much soap here?"

"No, sah," chuckled the porter. "You know dis is de limited. Ebbything abohd am limited."

Then the old man tried to fill a glass from the water cooler. He could force out only a few drops.

"Where's the water, boy?"

"Not much water, sah. Dat am limited too."

Presently the porter brushed the old farmer down, and the latter handed him nine coppers.

"Why, boss," protested the porter, "yo' gib de porter on de udder train a quarter."

"I know that," chuckled the old farmer, "but you know this is the limited, and everything should be limited."—Chicago News.

The Rush of the Pintail.

The species of wild ducks known as pintails have a peculiar habit during the mating season of descending from a great altitude at an angle of about 45 degrees with the wings stiffly outspread and slightly curved downward. The bird is frequently so high that the noise produced by its passage through the air is heard for several seconds before the bird comes into sight. It descends like a meteor till within a few feet of the ground, when a slight change in the position of the wings sends the bird gliding away close to the ground several hundred yards without a stroke of the wings. The sound produced by this swift passage through the air can only be compared to the rushing of the wind through tree tops. At first it is like a murmur; then it rises to a hiss, and as the bird sweeps by it is almost a roar.

THE BIT OF RED

By HONORE WILLSIE

Copyright, 1905, by E. C. Parcells

Bruce sat alone at the head of the herd trying to remember and to forget, trying to remember her voice, her face, her vivid beauty; trying to forget the words that cut short his course as a newspaper man and sent him out on the ranch. Was it, after all, only a year since she refused him? Could he never again close his eyes without seeing the red of her gown? It seemed half a lifetime that he had been guarding these beasts, rounding up stragglers, keeping watch lest the herd stampede for the river. Day after day of burning sun and night after night of stars the loneliness of the plain oppressed him; the cattle irritated him with their stupid docility. The hot noon sun blistered down on their brown backs. The black flies buzzed above them and their—

The broncho raised his head suddenly. It was so unusual for Dick to show signs of life during the noon hour that the man was startled from his reverie. A subtle disturbing wave seemed to sweep through the herd. Here and there a head was tossed, and dilated nostrils sniffed the summer air. The man, vaguely disturbed, looked toward the rear of the herd. Far out on the plain was a buckboard with a bit of red fluttering in it. "Good Lord," he said aloud, "one of the fool beasts has caught sight of that! It's hold tight now or the devil to pay!"

His year on the plain had taught him that the cattle herd is more sensitive to panic than even the human throng. A sudden movement, a strange flutter of sound or color, and far down in the grazing herd comes a sudden closing of ranks, a slow moving forward of a constantly augmented mass that, with quick increase of speed, sweeps on, until a thousand panic stricken steers stampede across the plain.

Bruce sat rigid upon his broncho at the head of the herd. Alone, he knew it was hopeless to attempt to make the herd "circle," the one sure remedy for a stampede. Even the slightest movement on his part might precipitate matters, while absolute quiet might prevent the breaking of the storm which was slowly brewing.

A half mile out on the plain the buckboard and the fluttering bit of red drew nearer. More heads were tossed in the air. On the outskirts of the herd nearest the coming buckboard here and there a steer ceased grazing and moved hesitatingly toward the center. Inquiring heads were lifted to see what the movement meant. Those that spied the fluttering red followed quickly to the center. Those that failed to see the cause felt the vague wave of terror and with short snorts of fear sought to move close to their fellows.

In rapid succession the animals were struck by the panic wave. With brain clear and tense, as full realization of his danger came upon him Bruce held in his restless pony and thought rapidly. Facing him was the herd. Behind him, three miles out across the plain, was the river. If the stampede came, heaven alone knew whether the maddened cattle would plunge headlong over the banks, those in front forced on by the unseeing ones in the rear, or whether the leaders could turn all at right angles and follow the river bank.

For one moment Bruce thought of trying to turn the stampede and by whip and shout endeavor to send the frightened brutes back, away from the river, but danger to the nearing buckboard, now so close that he could see it contained the figures of a man and a woman, precluded that plan. Then all power of controlling affairs was taken from him, for Dick, suddenly attacked by the fear contagion, gave a pitiful whinny of terror and, with the bit between his teeth, bolted toward the river. The sudden sound and movement were all that was needed, and in the next instant Dick's hoof beats were drowned in the roar of hoofs in mad flight about him.

Bruce, with knees that gripped the saddle like iron, gave one glance behind him. He was riding among the leaders, but the heavy hurtling ranks behind them threatened at any moment to ride them down. If he could make an opening Dick had three miles in which to pull away from them, and the roar of the maddened beasts, their wild snorts, and the occasional shriek of one of their number, who fell and was instantly trampled to death, made spur or whip or word unneeded for the broncho. Trembling, with head thrust far forward and nostrils distended, he sped on with all the speed the beasts crowded about him would permit.

Could they turn at the river? If not, Bruce knew that death for him was a matter of a few moments. And suddenly life seemed very sweet to him. Even life without her seemed suddenly bearable. The scent of the linden buds, the red of the gown she wore, how vivid and how lovely even the memory was! And was this all that life was to hold for him—a few years of hope deferred and early destroyed, then a few memories, and then death? And what a death—trampled, mangled, made into a thing unspeakable by those trampling hoofs. Ah, the pity of it, he thought, to have no taste of happiness!

He clinched the reins tighter. No, he would not die. Somehow he meant to live. For a moment he, too, was panic stricken. "Dick, Dick!" he groaned, "Can't you go faster? Pull away from them, old boy! There is no one to care much what happens to us, but we want to live anyhow!"

Again he looked back. Slowly the herd was gaining on the leaders. The forward ranks were more and more massed. Worse than the roar and screech of a hundred locomotives was the din about him. He could see the break in the level stretch of prairie that marked the river banks. Nearer and nearer it came, and closer about the quivering broncho pressed the snorting cattle. Now Bruce could see the rocks on the opposite bank, now he caught a glimpse of the brown water, and then—a sudden stumble, a mad roar, and horse and rider went down together.

For years and years he seemed to have been falling. Sometimes he caught sight of her, and always her lips moved, but he caught no word or sound. Sometimes he ventured to ask her what she said, but his questions when they came were absolutely irrelevant, and he cursed himself for a fool, and gradually the search was becoming painful. Strange aches and miseries racked his body. The glimpses of her face became less and less frequent. Suddenly he opened his eyes to rest them. The walls of his little ranch bedroom seemed familiar enough, but what were these agonies that wrung and wrenched him? Then memory came. Ah, yes—the stampede and the fall. He closed his eyes again and feebly pondered over his rescue. Then a soft rustle and a little murmur near the foot of the bed made him open his eyes once more. It was she! The red gown, the vivid face, the soft parted hair were all the same. If this were delirium, he thought, why, let delirium go on to the end of the chapter, and just for luck he would speak to her once more, just to see if she would faint away, as usual.

"It's a nice day, Alice," he remarked in a strangely small voice.

"Oh, Allen, Allen, do you really know me?" And with a rush of skirts she was on her knees beside the bed.

Know her! Could he recognize his own consciousness?

"You were in the buckboard," he said.

"How did you know?" she asked.

"I didn't know. Did the cattle get me?"

The girl shuddered and moved closer.

"No; the pony fell close to the river's edge, his body shielded yours from the herd, and the cattle used him for a dividing point and went up and down the river. They had to shoot the poor broncho, but we got you into the buckboard and back to the ranch somehow."

Bruce turned a bewildered face toward her, and in response the girl went on:

"Uncle John and I are touring the west, and I wanted to say hello to you. Cousin Frank told me you were here. Then came the stampede."

Her voice trailed into silence. Bruce put up a feeble hand and pressed her soft cheek close to his own. This, then, had been the reason for it all—the lonely vigils, the long hours, the constant desire and the endless misery of loneliness.

"Alice," he said gently, "is it to be yes now?"

The girl caught her breath. Her only answer was to leave her cheek close to his.

And Bruce, nestling closer, closed his eyes and fell asleep.

Love and Laundering.

The Korean mother, anxious to assure her daughter's successful marriage, makes certain that the young woman becomes a good laundress, for ability in this direction counts for more than beauty with the Korean swain. He does not even demand that his wife shall be more than a fairly good cook, but she must be able to keep fresh and spotless the linen garments which every one, from prince to peasant, wears. In spite of the fact that every article of wearing apparel is of white linen, not even the humble flatiron has made its appearance in Korea, and the attempts to introduce such occidental fads as washing machines and wringers have met with marked disfavor. The laundry work is done in the same manner as it was centuries ago, and the first recommendation to a young man's favor is ability as a laundress.

Living Barometers.

Among the best of the living barometers are snails, which do not drink in the ordinary sense of the term, but absorb moisture during the wet weather directly through the skin and exude it afterward. As they are anxious not to have the moisture evaporate too quickly, thus creating a premature thirst, which cannot be conveniently satisfied, they keep during dry weather in strict seclusion, moving abroad only during or just before rain. Immediately before downfall they may be seen climbing the trunks of trees and busily getting in among the leaves. Gnats assemble in clouds under trees, and horses grow restless. Swans, where they are plentiful, may be seen flying against the wind. Spiders crowd on the walls, toads come out of their holes, and pigeons may be seen going to the dovecots earlier than usual.

A Cigar That Saved a Life.

M. Guizot, the great French historian, once owed his life to his cigar. Walking in one of the Paris gardens, he noticed that he was being followed by a shabbily dressed man. M. Guizot calmly sat down on a bench, upon which his unwelcome follower also seated himself, watching him all the time with an uncomfortably threatening air. The historian, however, was not troubled, but took a cigar from his pocket and quietly lighted it. As he did this the stranger rose and, muttering that he had been mistaken, added, "That scoundrel I seek does not smoke." Some days later the man was arrested for a murderous assault upon a public official against whom he had a grudge and for whom he had mistaken M. Guizot, whose cigar was thus a veritable life preserver.

CINDER IN THE EYE.

What You Must and Must Not Do When This Happens.

By cinder we mean any minute particle of whatever nature which lodges in the eye, where it causes much pain and distress.

In most cases when a foreign body gets into the eye it creates a little discomfort for a time, but is soon washed away by the tears without doing any harm. Sometimes, especially when the particle has sharp corners to it, as is often the case with the fine cinders from a locomotive which burns soft coal, the conjunctiva is cut and the body becomes firmly lodged in it, and all nature's simple efforts to remove it are ineffectual. Man then tries to come to nature's assistance and often makes bad very much worse.

The sufferer winks the eye, rubs it with his finger, perhaps inserts an eyestone and does whatever else he can think of to drive the particle deeper into the conjunctiva and excite inflammation. This inflammation causes swelling of the conjunctiva immediately surrounding the offending particle, with the result that the foreign body become firmly imbedded and can be removed only by the little needle or knife of the oculist, or else it loosens itself by exciting an ulceration of the cornea, and this ulceration, when healed, leaves behind it a minute white scar. Lucky is the man if this scar is at one side and not directly in front of the pupil.

One who gets a cinder in the eye must first of all exercise self control. He must not rub the eye. He may take a glass of clean water, throw in a pinch of salt, then put the head down so that the eye is in the water and wink several times rapidly. If this does no good the particle can sometimes be dislodged by taking hold of the lashes and drawing the upper lid down over the lower and letting it slide back into place.

If the speck can be seen on looking into the mirror it may often be removed by the tip of a cone made by folding the handkerchief several times. Sometimes a friend can see the speck by looking into the eye with a magnifying glass and can remove it by gently touching it with the handkerchief cone.

This is all any one should attempt, and if these gentle efforts fail to dislodge the cinder no time should be lost in seeking the help of a physician, who may take it away before inflammation or ulceration comes to complicate the accident.

Curious Cures.

A Sunderland remedy for whooping cough is to shave the top of the head and hang the hair upon a bush, the belief being that the birds, which will presently carry it away, to build their nests with, will convey away the cough at the same time, and the patient will be cured. The Northamptonshire and Devonshire variant of this practice is to put a hair from the sufferer's head between two slices of bread and butter, and give them to a dog, which, it is supposed, will then attract the cough from the patient to itself. A Shetland cure for ringworm is for the patient to take, fasting, on three successive mornings a pinch of ashes from the fire grate and hold them to the affected part while he repeats the lines:

Ringworm, ringworm red,
Never may thou speed or spread,
But aye grow less and less,
And die away among the ash.

On the Invention of Whiskey.

The name of the man who first staggered humanity by the invention of whiskey is lost in the mists of the middle ages, and all the ingenuity of counsel now employed in trying to find out what whiskey is has failed to disclose his identity. The fiery potion was known in England in the eleventh century, but in Scotland not till the fourteenth. But Scotland made up for lost time. She gave the bright liquid its alluring name, the "water of life," and made its production a cottage industry of noble proportions. When the execrable exciseman descended upon the village she carried the still to the lonely hills. "We in these days are inclined to forget that Glenlivet, the home of the smuggler, would never have achieved its bacchanalian fame but for absurd Georgian licensing laws directed against the individual still and not against the magnitude of its output.—London Chronicle.

Postal Methods in Milan.

Postal authorities in Milan, Italy, use an automobile wagon in which to collect part of the mail. The car runs between the central postoffice and the branch offices and boxes in the different districts of the city. The automobile is of large size, on the style of an omnibus, and is fitted out so that the mail can be sorted by one clerk while the car is running. The car stops at each letter box to collect the mail, and between the boxes the clerk sorts and stamps the letters and places them in packages to a second man, who puts them in a series of compartments corresponding to each carrier's route. This car covers a route fourteen miles long and collects the mail from all boxes in an hour and a half.

The King of Tramps.

The "king of tramps" got a term in a French jail the other day. He said he was born of wealthy parents and educated for the bar. He lost money by gambling and to pay the debt broke open his father's safe. "Turned out of doors, I became a tramp and have been ever since a terror to all honest folk. I have toured France twenty times and have been all over Belgium, Germany, Italy, Switzerland and Spain. I have been shut up in almost every prison in Europe." The magistrate having informed him that he would have to go to jail once more, he cried: "Hooray! I have scored my century. I had been sentenced exactly ninety-nine times before by magistrates all over Europe."

Church Bells and Tavern Bells.

Bells in tavern signs not infrequently indicate the number of bells there are in the neighboring church belry. Thus the sign of the "Five Bells" signifies that there are five bells in the church peal, the "Eight Bells" tells that it contains eight, and so on.

WATER IN YOUR BLOOD.

Lots of people have thin, watery blood—they eat plenty, but don't digest. When digestion is poor, food isn't converted into nourishment—in consequence the body rapidly loses strength. To positively renew health, nothing equals Ferrozone. It excites sharp appetite—makes the stomach digest, forms life sustaining blood. Abundant strength is sure to follow. If you need more vitality, extra energy, better nerves, then use Ferrozone, the medical triumph of the age. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty chocolate coated Ferrozone tablets.

Phillips vs. Belleville.

MR. MIKEL ONCE MORE ADDS TO THE GAYETY OF THE NEWSPAPER READERS OF THIS BEAUTIFUL CITY.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

My Dear Mr. Editor, — I am pleased to learn from you that you have recovered somewhat from the "collapse" in which my letter of the other evening in Phillips vs. Belleville put you. Those "body blows" are not intended to harm you, only to keep you in training for the football season.

But say, you did pitch into me in great shape in last evening's paper. Some of the people didn't see the object in attacking me. Of course you had been reading so much law in Phillips vs. Belleville that you got the lawyer habit of abusing the opposing counsel when you have a poor case, and you did it better than some of the leading lawyers could.

I note what you say was the opinion of a "Lawyer" concerning myself when appointed City Solicitor three years ago, and you were certainly kind to that lawyer in not mentioning his name, because by doing so you would have wrecked his reputation. You could tell him now, after three years' experience, that you had approved the city's course in all the litigation the city has had since I have been City Solicitor except Phillips vs. Belleville. You could tell him that the courts so far had upheld Mikel's advice. You could tell him that the city has only brought two actions since I have been Solicitor, i.e., in reference to the Street Railway rails and the Butterfield mortgage. You could tell him that while the Solicitor could give his opinion upon a legal matter when asked that only the Council could authorize the bringing or defending of actions and that your newspaper reports of the Council proceedings would show that the Council's instructions to me to bring or defend each action in which the city has been concerned since I have been Solicitor were given without a dissenting voice. You could tell him the records show that as a law student I stood first in a number of my exams and that as a practitioner out of 126 High and County Court cases in which I have acted only 17 have been determined against me, and that, in attaining this result, I have contended against such men as Chief Justice Meredith and Mr. Justice Clute, when practicing; also A. B. Aylesworth, K. C., W. R. Riddell, K.C., E. D. Armour K.C., George H. Watson, K.C., Hamilton Cassells, K.C., J. B. Clark, K.C., Geo. H. Shepley, K.C., Hon. William Kerr, K.C., H. M. Droche, K. C., and you could tell that lawyer that he hadn't as good a record as that in dealing with the "solid points" of law. You were charitable to that lawyer in not bringing his name before the public. Perhaps later he will get a clearer vision and his reputation as a prophet may be rehabilitated. You seem not to have quite recovered from your "collapse" because you omitted to impress on the ratepayers that the majority of the Council affirm that from a dollars and cents standpoint Caldwell's offer was the higher. See the man on the next block.

W. C. MIKEL.

EDITOR'S NOTE.

No good would result from bandying words with Mr. Mikel, apart from the subject under discussion. He cannot, however, with all his vivid imagination, possibly know how grateful we are to learn that he "intended us no harm." Merciful goodness! How relieved we are; and with what calmness we shall slumber to-night! Had the letter of the learned Solicitor been a plain, truthful statement of facts, without indulging in sneers and sarcasm, it might have been of interest to the taxpayers of the city, and saved us the trouble of exposing the characteristic egotism which pervades some men's minds.

Mr. Mikel should thank us sincerely, and if not too expensive, present us with a leather medal for having quoted a brother lawyer's opinion of him. What an opportunity it gave him to advertise his success and ability as a lawyer! Why all the great men of the profession fell before him. Are we not entitled to 10 cents a line for this advertisement?

• • •

It is the first time we have learned that there was any great or intricate point of law involved in the Street Railway case. The rights of the City were clear enough to the ordinary mind, and as to the tax collector's case, the least said about it the better for those who settled it.

• • •

We have simply to add that it is the first time we have heard it stated that "Caldwell's offer was the highest." It were well if this could be proven to "the man on the next block."

A PROSPEROUS MAN.

A man to look prosperous should be well dressed. Clothes count for more than anything else when first impressions are formed. Good clothes help a man along in life. There are no two ways about it. Quick & Robertson can make a man look prosperous in short order without material damage to his purse.

Special Constable Arnott returned to me the names of owners and harborers of dogs in the city, and acted as special constable whenever called on by me to do so.

It must be very gratifying to the Board, as well as to the citizens, to see the small amount of serious offences in our city.

I would desire to call your attention to the great labor entailed in the collection of the above sums. I feel convinced that perhaps, with one exception, there is no city of the size in the province in which such a large revenue is collected through the efforts of the police force.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief Constable.

First "At Home."

The first of a series of "At Homes" to be given by the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held at the residence of Mr. R. J. Graham last evening. Mrs. Graham kindly placed her home at the disposal of the society and extended a hearty welcome to them and their guests. An enjoyable evening was spent in music and in discussions on the leading temperance questions of the day. The discussions were led by several ministers and prominent temperance workers of the city. Refreshments were served during the course of the evening. At the close several joined the society as honorary members.

The New J. P.'s.

A CORRESPONDENT ASKS SOME PERTINENT QUESTIONS IN RELATION TO THEM.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir, — I have been trying to find out, since I read in The Intelligencer the list of names who constitute the new Justices of the Peace for the County, why men of the standing of Thos. Wills, who has been a Magistrate for about half a century, and Wm P. Hudson, who has also been on the Commission of the Peace for a time, are left off. Can you inform me, and others who are curious, upon this point? I thought at first, that the new names were additions to the old list of magistrates, but this cannot be, for I notice the name of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who is one of the old magistrates, among the new ones. It can't be on account of their politics. They haven't gone back on the party, have they?

I notice also among the names of the new appointees that of a leading Grit. After the doctrine laid down in the last meeting of the party, held in Belleville, I was not a little surprised. How is this? I suppose you know all about it.

Your obedient servant,
CONSERVATIVE.

Belleville, Jan. 18, 1906.

ED. NOTE. — "Conservative" will have to apply elsewhere for his information. We have been as much puzzled over the omission of the names referred to from the new list of magistrates as our correspondent can possibly be. He had better apply to the gentleman responsible for the appointments, M. B. Morrison, Esq., M.P.P. for West Hastings, who, no doubt, can give sufficient reasons for what has been done.

Oh, no! Messrs. Wills and Hudson have not "gone back on the party." They are still of the stalwart class of men, who have opinions, and are not likely to be swayed from the path of duty. Socially, politically and financially they are of our best citizens. There must have been a blunder, mistake or carelessness, inexcusable, in the matter, and no doubt it will be rectified.

The Grit name upon the list is a highly respectable man, and a good citizen. For our own part, we were glad to see, and to find, that the new list was not confined exclusively to Conservatives. In matters of this kind Conservatives should not follow the example set them by the Mowat-Hardy-Ross Governments. Let us emulate their virtues, if they ever had any, and avoid their errors and crimes in [illegible] matters, and all will be well.

Enjoyable Banquet.

HELD BY MEN'S CLUB OF BRIDGE ST. CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

The Men's Club in connection with Bridge St. Church last evening held a banquet in the Sunday School rooms, which proved to be a most enjoyable affair. A large number were present and all heartily participated in the proceedings. The supper provided was all that could have been desired. In the absence of Mr. Wm. Johnson, the chair was occupied by Mr. C. P. Holton and Messrs. G. A. McClatchie and B. E. Sills occupied the vice-chairs.

After supper had been partaken of the following toast list was carried out, and the various speakers did credit to the task assigned them.

During the evening Mr. James Dyer sang a solo, nicely accompanied by Mr. W. A. A. Chown.

At Sign of the Scales.

A NOTE CASE.

John and David Rogers, of Stirling, were accused of refusing to give up a lien note which J. W. Abbott claimed was his property, alleging that, as he had given up the buggy for which the note was given, he should receive the note. After some evidence had been taken the case was enlarged for a week. County Attorney for Crown, Mr. McMahon for private prosecutor and Mr. Halliwell for defendants.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"PECK'S BAD BOY" TO-NIGHT.

Numerous charming features are claimed for "Peck's Bad Boy," which will be the attraction at the Carman to-night. The piece is described as a musical comedy and is the work of George W. Peck, whose name has been associated with some of the cleverest works in this line of recent years. The French Quartette is the chief figure in "Peck's Bad Boy," though special stress is laid on the make-up of the chorus. Whenever you see the name of Leroy J. French attached to a show you can depend that it is a good one. Mr. French's company will be at the Carman to-night.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN."

Al. W. Martin's world's greatest and newest production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is booked for the Carman next Tuesday evening. This is the only Uncle Tom's Cabin company, that appears in all the important cities, and judging from the comments of the press of those cities Mr. Martin this season has surpassed all his efforts of previous years. The escape of Eliza and the death of Uncle Tom and Eva stir our sympathy as no ordinary melodrama ever can, and the fortunes of Uncle Tom keeps us alert and excited. The production which Al. W. Martin will bring to our city will be the same as has been so favorably received in New York City, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago and all large cities.

DEATH OF MRS. LAIDLAW.

SHE PASSED AWAY IN MONTREAL, ON TUESDAY.

Mrs. Laidlaw, relict of the late John Laidlaw, dry goods merchant of Kingston, died, on Tuesday, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Leslie, Montreal. Deceased was born in Quebec province, and married to Mr. Laidlaw, in Montreal, where the latter was in the dry goods business. About 1885, the family went to Kingston, Mr. Laidlaw establishing himself in business there, a business which has grown four-fold. In the spring of 1902 occurred the death of Mr. Laidlaw. For the past three years Mrs. Laidlaw resided with her daughter in Montreal. Surviving is her daughter and two sons, the latter being David G., of Kingston, and John A., of this city. The burial took place in Montreal yesterday morning, in the family plot.

The late Mrs. Laidlaw was a woman of many good qualities, cultured and gracious. She was always ready to assist in all good work, and was esteemed by all her friends and neighbors. During her long residence in Kingston, she was one of the leading workers in Chalmers church congregation.

18 MEN ENTOMBED.

Explosion in a West Virginia Coal Mine—Tons of Wreckage Hurled From Mouth of the Mine.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 19.—Eighteen men are believed to have been killed by a terrific explosion in one of the mines of the Detroit & Kanawha Coal Co. at Detroit, on Paint Creek, this county, twenty-five miles from here.

That more men were not in the mine at the time of the explosion was due to the fact that almost all of the day men were eating their dinners on the outside. The explosion occurred at 12.30.

Had it been either before or after the noon hour hundreds of men would have been killed. The force of the explosion was so great that the hills trembled. Tons of wreckage and debris were hurled from the mouth of the mine, blocking the entrance and making the work of rescue difficult.

The first rescue party, consisting of fifteen men, entered the mine at 5.30 o'clock. The first body reached was that of G. P. Neal, which was discovered 150 yards from the entrance.

Mothers, wives, children and friends of the entombed miners are crowded about the mouth of the pit, declaring they will not leave until they know the fate of the unfortunate men. The explosion is believed to have been caused by a blast igniting the dust which has accumulated in the mine.

Boy Killed by Trolley Car.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—Arthur Rainer, the seven-year-old son of Charles H. Rainer, a street car conductor, who lives at 27 Brookline avenue, was terribly mangled by a trolley car at Queen and Morse street, shortly after 8 o'clock yesterday morning, receiving injuries from which he died at St. Michael's Hospital about two hours later. The boy was on his way to St. Mary's Separate School, on Bolton avenue, when he was struck by the car. There will be an inquest.

His Skull Crushed.

Niagara Falls, Jan. 19.—While a number of men were at work on an elevated flooring at the transformer station of the Toronto & Niagara Power Co., George Steele fell through the scaffolding 35 feet to the concrete floor below, and had his head so badly crushed that the physicians have no hope of his recovery.

A POINTED ADDRESS.

"God's Blockade on the Road to Hell," Subject Handled by Dr. Torrey—2,000 Excursionists.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—Commencing next Monday, Dr. Torrey will address two meetings each evening at Massey Hall.

Outside throngs filled Massey Hall to overflowing at two meetings yesterday. Excursions were run from London, Barrie, Guelph, Trenton and Woodstock. Fully 2,000 came by special train.

At the afternoon service the subject was "The Influence of the Holy Spirit." The evangelist went into the great joy and richness and experience that was imparted to those who had the Spirit springing up in them like a well of water unto everlasting life.

"God's Blockade on the Road to Hell" was the subject of a very pointed address in the evening.

God placed many influences in man's way to draw him out of the wrong path. The Bible was perhaps the greatest of these. Mother's influence and teaching, and mother's prayers had brought back many a wanderer from the fold. Sermons had also a great influence in showing men their lost estate, and teaching them the way eternal.

Prudential circumstances could be cited on every hand where men would have been plunged to hell had not some slight happening interfered and brought them to themselves.

Kindly words and actions on the part of Christian people would redeem thousands of wrecked lives.

Forty persons came to the front in response to the doctor's invitation.

ALLANS GET THE CONTRACT.

For Next Five Years Will Carry St. Lawrence Route Mails.

Ottawa, Jan. 19.—The Allan Steamship Co. has been awarded the St. Lawrence mail contract for a term of five years. There is a provision in the contract under which the term may be extended for another five years on the condition that the Allans improve the service and put on faster steamships.

The subsidy enjoyed by the Allans is in proportion to the service given. Their best two steamers, the turbiners Victorian and Virginian, each earn $5,000 a trip, and the Tunisian and Bavarian, the next two in speed, $3,750 a trip. All four have to make ten trips a year. The Virginian is at present in dock on the other side, and the Bavarian is on the rocks below Quebec. The remaining vessels of the Allan fleet are paid at the rate of $5,000 a trip, and have to make weekly journeys.

DIE CAST FOR RUSSIA

First National Political Party Convention Has Opened.

Constitutional Democrats Discuss Party's Attitude Towards the Elections to the National Assembly — Two Leading Speakers Advise Participation in the Douma So Long As Its Majority Sympathized With Party.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 19.—The first National Convention organization by a political party in the history of Russia, that of the constitutional Democrats, opened here yesterday. Two hundred and fifty delegates, representing 60 provincial organizations, were present. Under the chairmanship of M. Petrunkovitch of Tver, representatives took up the discussion of the party's attitude towards the elections to the National Assembly. Prof. Milliukoff, Editor Hassen and Prince Hakeffsky were the leading speakers.

The two first named advocated participation in the douma, but only so long as it was shown that the majority of the douma sympathized with the principles of the party.

Prof. Milliukoff said, in view of the gathering agrarian storm, unless the representatives in the douma immediately instituted all the liberties demanded and passed a broad and simple election law instead of the present "worthless" law, the "struggle must be recommended along the old lines and all the forces of society must be mobilized to war against the common enemy."

The delegates reported that the party had made good progress, but that the reactionary local authorities were interfering with the propaganda in various sections. Complaints concerning this interference, they said, had been made to Count Witte, but only slight satisfaction had been given.

Revolutionists Get Munitions.

Mr. Walling is interested in social settlement work in this country. Walling is a Harvard man, and a grandson of William H. English, who ran for the vice-presidency on the Democratic ticket in 1880. At one time Walling was state factory inspector in Illinois.

WHAT DO YOU CARE? YOU VE GOT YOUR HEALTH

GREAT NATURES DO NOT DESPAIR AT DISAPPOINTMENT—THEY LOOK FOR SOMETHING ELSE TO DO.

The broad-gauged man of to-day does not get blue just because things don't always come his way unless there is something the matter with him. If he "falls down" on one proposition he immediately starts to look up another. He always looks forward and keeps on hustling. A man with his health and faculties has plenty of opportunities, and the man who gives up or even feels like it has either a small nature or some physical weakness.

Dyspepsia certainly puts the best of man out of condition for work of any kind. You cannot blame the dyspeptic for getting blue. The very nature of his disease is most depressing and calculated to deprive him of ambition, energy and hope. There is hope for him, however, certain and sure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are recognized throughout the length and breadth of the land as the one cure that's safe and sure. Their unbounded popularity—resulting from the thousands and thousands of cures they have effected, prove beyond the shadow of a doubt their greatness as a cure. Wherein lies their greatness? In the very fact that they are Nature's own simple remedy. They do the exact work in exactly the same way that the digestive fluids of the stomach do, because they are composed of exactly the same elements and possess the same properties. They relieve the weak and worn-out stomach of its burden of digestion and permit it without let or hindrance, to rest and grow sound and well. The stomach will get well quick enough in its own natural way if it is let alone. That is what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do. They not only let it alone themselves, but make the food taken into the stomach do the same.

You can satisfy yourself of the truth of this statement by putting the food you would eat into a glass jar with sufficient water and one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The process of digestion will be taken up and carried out just as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids would do it. Their action is natural and they cause no disturbance in the digestive organs. In fact, you forget you have a stomach when they begin to do their work, so mild and natural is the operation. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c a box.

TRUNK LINES AGREE.

C. P. R. and G. T. R. Will Keep Wide Apart In Running Lines From Saskatoon to Edmonton.

Montreal, Jan. 19.—It transpires that an important adjustment of difficulties between the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Pacific railways has been reached this week as the result of conferences at Ottawa between the Government and Mr. William Whyte, the second vice-president of the C. P. R., and Manager Morse of the G. T. P.

The trouble caused by the location of the G. T. P. only a few miles from the C. P. R., which became acute at the end of last summer, is over. The two companies drove stakes on practically an identical route from Saskatoon to Edmonton, which promised fruitful litigation for the lawyers.

Mr. Whyte has been in Montreal for some time, and Mr. Morse has been in the west. On Monday both went to Ottawa, and chiefly, it is said, by the tactful methods of Government Engineer Schreiber, the contentions of both sides were amicably adjusted, and the new routes will be far enough apart to ensure sufficient competition in the public interest, and plenty of business for both lines.

The C. P. R., it is understood had taken strong action inimical to the rival corporation by withdrawing from sale all their lands contiguous to the G. T. P. route so as to prejudice in Canada and in England the prosperity of the line. This retaliatory measure will now be itself withdrawn.

C. P. R. FIGHTS LOAN COMPANY.

Big Railway Moves to Protect Employes From Extortion.

Winnipeg, Jan. 19.—The campaign against the loan companies in Winnipeg took a new turn yesterday when the C. P. R. issued orders to Tolman & Co., an American loan company, which has been operating on a large scale in Winnipeg, that it will no longer honor assignments of wages of their employes in Tolman's favor, and employes who take loans from them will be in danger of dismissal.

Tolman & Co. are said to charge anywhere from 100 to 400 per cent. interest.

The move by the corporation is to protect their employes.

Money Lenders in the Toils.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—The case against Anderson & Co., money lenders, charged with demanding extortionate rates of interest, was commenced in the Police Court yesterday. Instances of high rates paid were given. One woman had borrowed $10. She paid it back in two monthly instalments of $7.10. The same party borrowed $15 and gave a chattel mortgage as security and paid $22.80, six monthly payments of $3.80 each. One man made a loan of $50. In nine months he paid back $78.75, and also gave a chattel mortgage and made an assignment of his salary. He claimed he understood he was to pay at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. Another borrowed $35. He paid it back in six monthly instalments. The interest was $10.40. A woman needed $50. She borrowed for a year. The interest amounted to $31, although she paid it back in twelve monthly instalments. One woman made four loans, amounting to $144. She has already paid $139, and still owes $91.35. The case will be continued on Monday.

NOW GLASGOW SWINGS

Unseats Five Unionists in the Polling Thursday.

Bonar Law and Lord Advocate Dickson Among the Fallen—Six of Ex-Premier Balfour's Ministers Have Now Been Defeated—Summary of the Political Situation in Great Britain at Midnight.

London, Jan. 19.—The following is a summary of the political situation at midnight:

Total seats	670
Elections held	381
Liberals elected	205
Unionists	82
Laborites	32
Nationalists	62
In the last House for same seats:
Liberals	98
Unionists	215
Laborites	6
Nationalists	62

Glasgow Swings Round.

Glasgow's big change constitutes the feature of a section of the returns last night. In five of the seven seats Conservative candidates were defeated, one win being to the credit of Labor. The two remaining seats are held by Conservatives described as free traders.

Bonar Law Among the Fallen.

Glasgow's defeated candidates includes Mr. Bonar Law, a Canadian and one of the prominent men of his party. He redeemed the seat for the Conservatives in 1900 and was appointed in 1902 as Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. This time he failed in a three-cornered fight, the result of which was: Barnes (Labor), 3,284; Law (Conservative), 2,974; Provand (Liberal), 2,058.

A Labor candidate also figured in the Camlachie division and polled 2,568. He is blamed for the defeat of the Liberal, who polled 2,871 compared with 3,119 votes for a Conservative free trader.

A Canadian Elected.

Foster Boulton, the Liberal candidate who defeated Ailwyn Fellowes, Unionist, and late President of the Board of Agriculture, in North Huntingdonshire, is an old Torontonian. For some years he has been a resident of the constituency. He has received many congratulatory telegrams on his success, after a hard struggle.

No less than six members of the Balfour Ministry has been unseated, namely, William St. John Brodrick, Secretary of State for India; A. Bonar Law, Ernest George Prettyman, Secretary to the Admiralty; Lord Stanley, Postmaster-General, Alfred Lyttelton, Colonial Secretary, and Ailwyn E. Fellowes, President of the Board of Agriculture. Henry Chaplin, who was President of the Local Government Board in the Salisbury Ministry, also is among the defeated, who now include ten members of the late Cabinet.

The defeat of A. Bonar Law will be a serious loss to the tariff reformers, as he has been looked upon as one of the ablest advocates of Mr. Chamberlain's policy.

By Acclamation.

The following were returned yesterday unopposed:

Nationalists—Northeast Cork, Abraham; South Wexford, French; West Mayo, Ambrose; North Cork, Flynn; North Roscommon, O'Reilly; West Clare, Halpin.

Unionist—West Down, Liddell.

GRAND TRUNK WILL PAY HALF.

Cost of Depressing Tracks in South Parkdale, Toronto.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—When the scheme for the depression of the tracks in South Parkdale was before the Level Crossings Committee of the Council last year, Engineer Rust was asked to communicate with the Grand Trunk authorities and obtain from them a definite proposition.

He has it. Yesterday he received from Mr. C. M. Hays a letter stating that the Grand Trunk was prepared to bear half the cost if the city would pay half.

The estimate of the G. T. R. engineer submitted with the plans was $1,100,000.

The letter has been sent to the City Clerk, and will be brought before the new Level Crossings Committee at an early date.

Steamboat Man Dies.

Kingston, Jan. 19.—C. F. Gildersleeve, steamboat manager, died yesterday morning at 1 o'clock. He had been ill for two weeks. Mr. Gildersleeve was born here in 1833, studied for the law, but later succeeded his father and brother in steamboat activities, the company they originated being the oldest on the continent. His father aided in building the Frontenac, the first steamer on Lake Ontario. Deceased was from 1894 to 1904 the general manager of the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. He was an ex-mayor, an Anglican and a Liberal. A wife and two children survive.

Suits For Overcrowding Cars.

Chicago, Jan. 19.—Suits were filed by the City of Chicago yesterday in the circuit court against the Union Traction Co., for $1,500,000, and the Chicago City Railway Co., for $500,000, for alleged violations of city ordinances. The actions are based solely on the overcrowding of cars in December. There are 15,000 cases against the Union Traction Co. and 5,000 cases against the City Railway Co.

Montcalm Runs On the Ice.

Quebec, Jan. 19.—After several hours of exciting experience with the ice just above the Chaudiere, the Government steamer Montcalm returned to Quebec early yesterday morning. The vessel had a trying time of it, but sustained no damage whatever. In ramming the ice just west of the Quebec bridge, the Montcalm ran up on the ice, so strong was it that it carried her full weight.

Widening Suez Canal.

New York, Jan. 19.—An Alexandria, Egypt, despatch to The Herald, says that the Suez Canal Co. has begun widening the canal to enable the American naval floating drydock, now being towed to the Philippines, to pass. Traffic will be stopped during the passage.

Teas Get Stale

and you can tell a stale tea the minute you taste it, it lacks the fragrance and the aroma that a fresh tea has.

You Won't Buy Stale Bread

Why buy stale tea? Tea that has been standing around some store for a couple of months or more—generally more. To sell fresh tea it is necessary to buy fresh tea and sell it quick, or it will go stale waiting to be sold. We buy all our tea direct from places of growth and new teas are constantly at our warehouse in Montreal where they are opened, blended, repacked and shipped weekly to our different stores Consequently our teas are always fresh.

"GOT ME WITH THE GOODS."

Ex-Teller Banwell's Remark Upon Being Arrested in Jamaica—Particulars of the Arrest.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—It will be five weeks before ex-Bank Teller F. S. Banwell arrives in Toronto. His little winter trip to southern climes will cost the Crown Bank in the neighborhood of $5,000.

A letter from Detective Black from Kingston, Jamaica, dated the 13th, was received yesterday at police headquarters. It gives some particulars of the arrest.

On Jan. 11, Black, O'Grady and the "Pink" stepped off the steamer at Kingston. They were met at the wharf by a local officer. The quartette took a hack, and had only ridden three blocks when O'Grady excitedly said "there they are."

Not wishing to make an arrest until the money was located, Black and O'Grady remained in the hack. Banwell would recognize O'Grady and possibly Black, too. The Pinkerton man and the local officer left the carriage and followed the couple. They boarded a street car, the officers right with them. They rode seven miles to a swell family resort, the Hotel Constance. As soon as they went to their room the officers followed and made the arrests. In the little valise was $34,000, and $5,000 worth of diamonds. In another valise was $900 more.

They took their arrest very quietly. Banwell remarked, "Well, you've got me with the goods on me, and I may as well go back." They both expressed willingness to return at once without giving any trouble. Banwell is in jail, but his companion is living in a hotel.

Black and his party arrived just in time. The fugitives had all arrangements made to leave for Central America the following morning.

What makes old age so sad is not that our joys but our hopes cease.—Richter.

The Health Of the King.

Causes Much Anxiety According to Court Circle Rumors.

Friday His Majesty Consulted Three Physicians, Including His Physician Extraordinary and Sir Frederick Treves—Unable to Take Exercise Owing to Hurt to Ankle—Finds Difficulty in Breathing.

London, via New York, Jan. 20.—There are persistent rumors in court circles that the King's health causes much anxiety, and the fact that he was in consultation with three physicians yesterday lends an ominous color to the reports.

The King came to town from Sandringham yesterday morning, leaving the Queen there. At noon Sir Felix Semon, physician extraordinary to His Majesty, and the most famous throat specialist in Great Britain, visited the King at Buckingham Palace, accompanied by Sir Frederick Treves, the King's surgeon, and another eminent physician.

THE KING'S LATEST PORTRAIT.

All three were at the palace some time.

Owing to a broken tendon of his ankle, an injury sustained while hunting six weeks ago, the King has been unable to take any exercise. Being of full habit and with an apoplectic tendency, the King is gaining flesh rapidly, and this occasionally occasions difficulty in breathing.

To all journalistic inquiries about the King's health Lord Knollys, his secretary, invariably replies that it is excellent. It is stated that His Majesty's physicians recently insisted that he stop smoking. The King, however, declined.

His Majesty joins the Queen at Windsor to-day.

FRENCH CABINET SILENT.

Discusses, But Makes No Announcement as to Venezuela.

Paris, Jan. 20.—At a Cabinet Council held in the Elysee Palace yesterday, President Loubet, presiding. Premier Rouvier explained the Venezuelan situation. No indication whatever has been given out relative to the Council's decision.

After the Council had adjourned the Cabinet Ministers present Madame Loubet with a superb silver cup as a souvenir from the last Ministry during M. Loubet's term as President.

M. Maubourget, the Venezuelan charge d'affaires, who was expelled from France Thursday, according to an interview in The Patrie, said that being a Frenchman he felt his expulsion greatly, and would return to France at the first opportunity.

To Bring Venezuela to Time.

Washington, Jan. 20.—Three French warships are now off the Venezuelan coast, prepared to deliver the answer of France to President Castro's treatment of M. Taigny, the French representative at Caracas. Two additional warships will join them as soon as they can make the trip across the Atlantic. Until the demonstration has been initiated, the French Government will share only with the President and Secretary Root the knowledge of the exact form which this expression of her displeasure at President Castro's action will take. It can be announced that a French demonstration in Venezuelan waters will be viewed here with complacency.

Innerkip Woman Suicides.

Woodstock, Jan. 20.—Mrs. John Ross, the wife of a respected resident of Innerkip, committed suicide by taking a dose of paris green. Mrs. Ross had suffered from melancholia and for the past few days was unwell. During the absence of husband and family Thursday morning, she took the poison and then locked herself in the barn. She was 44 years of age, and is survived by a husband and two children.

Bolder Game Ends in His Arrest.

Guelph, Jan. 20.—Jas. Edwards, who held up two stores on Wednesday night, played a bolder game Thursday night when he walked into the Chamberlain bakery, and pointing a revolver at Mrs. Chamberlain, emptied the till. He was afterwards arrested. He is 15 years old, and borrowed the revolver from Harry Galloway, night watchman at the General Hospital.

All the Bodies Recovered.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 20.—All of the eighteen bodies have been recovered from the Detroit mines on Paint Creek, the scene of the dust explosion yesterday. The men, except one, were found at their places of work, showing that the explosion came without warning.

Chippewa Man Killed.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 20.—News comes from New York that Wm. Gibbs, a well-known resident of Chippewa, Ont., met his death in an accident in the new East River tunnel, in the construction of which he was employed.

Five Years For Arson.

Gore Bay, Jan. 20.—Louis Glen, who had a previous conviction against him, and was out on suspended sentence, was Thursday sentenced by Police Magistrate W. H. Price to five years in Kingston Penitentiary for arson.

PRINCE ARTHUR'S VISIT.

Will Arrive in Victoria March 28—Will See Our Parliament.

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—Prince Arthur of Connaught, after visiting Japan, is expected to arrive at Victoria on March 28. From there the party will proceed to Vancouver, stopping at Banff and Winnipeg en route for Toronto. When Ottawa is reached Parliament will be in session. They will stay two or three days here. Prince Arthur will be the guest of Lord Grey during the time he is at the capital. The next stop will be at Montreal, afterwards Quebec, and then on to Halifax.

The Deer Slaughter.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—In reporting to the chief game warden the express companies say they carried 3,310 deer carcases during the last shooting season, being 270 more than in the former year. They also carried 150 moose heads, a larger number than in 1904. This number of deer does not represent more than a fourth of the deer killed.

Big Towing Bill.

London, Jan. 20.—The Admiralty Court has awarded the British tank steamer Lucigen $25,000 for service rendered in September last in towing to Halifax the North German-Lloyd steamer Bremen, which became unmanageable by the breaking of a shaft while on a voyage from New York to Bremen.

The Laurier Banquet.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—The Laurier banquet committee held a short session yesterday afternoon. Letters were read from all parts of the province asking for seats for the banquet. The program has not yet been arranged, but a great number of prominent speakers are expected.

Bank President Sentenced.

Philadelphia, Jan. 20.—Henry Lear, former president of the Doylestown, Pa., National Bank, which failed several years ago, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the Eastern Penitentiary for embezzling the funds of the bank.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"PECK'S BAD BOY."

The above attraction had a splendid house last night, but the performance put on could not be said to give the best of satisfaction. The cast could hardly have been worse, unless you want to the Reserve for it If the Bad Boy had only killed his Pa, the Policeman and the Groceryman everybody would have gone home happy. It's lucky the Limburger cheese which was on the stage did not get into the audience, or the actors would surely have been pelted with it. The songs were not so bad, and some of the company may be able to sing — when they grow voices. Taken altogether, "Peck's Bad Boy" was about the worst seen in Belleville for many a long day. And it played to a full house, while a grand high-class concert leaves its promoter with a deficit. "O tempora, O mores!"

A CLASSIC DRAMA.

In many respects Al. W. Martin's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is the most important of the season's productions. Like a poorly composed book, there are many versions of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" now being forced upon the public under embossed covering, which are detrimental to the greatest degree. They are usually short-lived, for the people of to-day are not to be hoodwinked as easily as those of not so many years ago. It is a known fact that Al. W. Martin possesses the original version of Mrs. Stowe's story,

Daily Intelligencer.

A Believer in Printers' Ink.

Many people in Canada think, and may be excused for thinking, that a steady increase in the importation of boots and shoes might be thought to indicate the propriety if not the necessity of revising the tariff more in favor of home manufactures. The only serious competitor is the American, who has by progressive stages of late years taken possession of the Canadian market to the extent of about a million dollars annually. At such a rate our American friends flatter themselves that in course of time they will subdue the whole ground, or at least occupy the better part of it. It was with no little surprise, therefore, says a contemporary, that a Canadian manufacturer of boots and shoes was heard before the tariff commission at Fredericton to discountenance any alteration of the duties on the finished product, which he thought well enough protected by 25 per cent. This attitude was boldly proclaimed by Mr. Chas. E. Slater, the president and general manager of the Slater Shoe Co. He claims that his business has quadrupled within seven years, from liberal advertising backed by superior quality of goods, and he declares that by a similar course, and raising the standard of their output, the boot and shoe manufacturers of Canada generally can eject the foreigners. The increase in importations in his opinion has been caused in most part by the retail dealer who finds competition at home over strenuous.

In an interview, Mr. Slater states: "I contend that we are making shoes in Canada to-day which are better value than the American shoe, and in figures submitted to the Government I have proven my contention. If we had a reasonable reduction in the duties on raw material, we could beat the American manufacturer in the foreign export markets. If our American brethren would agree to give us free access to their markets in return for a like concession on our part, I know that we could command the home market and compete with them in theirs. We have the labor—in fact the best workmen in the shoe factories of Massachusetts are Canadian born

"There is a duty against us of 25 per cent., and that also is the present Canadian tariff. Thus on an American shoe selling in Canada at $6 the duty paid is over $1, and that shoe is no better than the $5 Canadian-made shoe.

"I am content with the present tariff on the finished shoe, and our advertising is evidence of our belief."

This bold pronouncement will in all likelihood settle the tariff question regarding these goods. It is highly reasonable that if one firm can succeed with a 25 per cent. import others should also prosper, by adaptation of means and get along without the help of tariff heel cleats. The call for higher protection, however, may be to some extent justified under the allegation which has been confidently made that certain lines of foreign goods "made for export" unfairly compete by reason of the inferior materials used in their manufacture. It is observed that many persons are influenced by the idea of later fashion or better finish in articles of foreign make, that a thing produced abroad must be superior to that of a similar class made at home; and it is often said that this mental peculiarity is catered to by foreign makers who know that so long as the "style" is right, the buyer does not examine very closely the material in the goods. However this may be, it is certain, according to the Government trade returns, that the import of boots and shoes has enormously increased of late years. If this is due to mere idiosyncracy of the buyer, it may be hoped that in time this will be overcome, and the people of Canada more fully realize not only that they have at home manufactures of boots and shoes equal to the best produced abroad, but that it is a patriotic duty to support home trade and glory in its enterprise, skill, stability and progress.

COLD KILLS THE GERM.

Lieut. Perry Says There Are No Bald Heads in the Arctic Region.

The people who come back from Klondike testify to the fact that no native bald heads are there. The evidence is that the cold climate kills the germs that eat the hair off at the root. Lieut. Perry, who went to the Arctic Regions, gives the same evidence. Newbro's Herpicide has the same effect as the cold climate. It kills the germ that eats the hair off at the roots, and the hair grows again. Herpicide is the first hair remedy built upon the principle of destroying the germ that eats the hair off. Its phenomenal sale demonstrates the correctness of the scalp germ theory. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

To-morrow's International Sunday School Lesson.

THE MYSTERY OF A BOY—GOLDEN TEXT IS "JESUS ADVANCED IN WISDOM AND STATURE, AND IN FAVOR WITH GOD AND MAN."

(By William T. Ellis.)

In the two hundred and fifty-four words which the Sunday Schools are to study we have all that the world knows of thirty years of the life of history's most eminent character, from the days of His infancy to His appearance in public life. How meagre it seems to us alongside of other biographies, which devote chapter after chapter to the important and critical formative period of them reject themselves by their ri- of the boyhood of Jesus, however, is as revealing as a flash of lightning from a dark sky. While the heart covets more in the way of details concerning this most wonderful of all boyhoods, yet the judgment affirms that sufficient particulars have been given.

The story begins with an epitome of a boy's life: "And the child grew and waxed strong, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon Him." The order of the words is suggestive of the way every boy's life should grow. While the legends that centre about the boyhood of Jesus should be rejected—most of them reject themselves by their ridiculousness—there is a proper place for the use of reverent imagination, but it never should transcend the limit of the statements here recorded and of the known character and environment of Jesus. We have abundant evidence that He was a wholesome, healthy, natural, winsome boy, living the ordinary life of a Jewish child in a workingman's home. That His character was of an unusually serious cast goes without saying.

A GLIMPSE OF A HOME.

This home of which the boy Jesus was a member was such as in every time is the mainstay of a nation's greatness. Industry, love and religion were there. It was splendid soil for the growing of the fundamental virtues; just as to-day the majority of the leaders of men spring from the homes of plain people and serve their first apprenticeship in the school of self-denial and toil.

Religion meant much in this home. Every year the father and mother travelled the eighty miles from Nazareth to Jerusalem to share in the great annual feast of the Passover, which commemorated the deliverance of the Hebrew first-born in Egypt from the sword of the destroying angel. The Old Testament was the one supreme handbook of education and life. The book of nature, also, was an open and beloved volume to the Boy, as we may know from His later reference to the life of the field and farm and sky and sea. He was open-eyed, also, to the significance and beauty of the simple life of the plain people with whom His lot was cast.

The Oriental child ripens several years sooner than the more sluggish offspring of the West. At twelve a Jewish boy became a "son of the law," and began to assume religious responsibilities along with His elders. Then it was that Jesus went up to Jerusalem. To us He seems very young at that time; yet it is to be remembered that the period of dependence is being steadily prolonged in youth. To-day the favored boy is supported by his family until he has reached the legal age, and often long beyond that point. He does not early learn to stand on his own feet. Not to be pitied is that boy who early learns to put his shoulder under burdens and responsibilities.

A BOY'S WILL.

On this memorable visit to Jerusalem Jesus tarried behind, after the neighbors had started for home; just as one boy lingers over the machinery exhibit at a fair and another before the display of guns and fishing tackle. Where a boy's natural tendency first inclines him is one of the secrets which his parents should early discover. Mary's perplexity has come to almost every parent since, in supposing her Child to be in one place, when He was somewhere else; fortunate are they whose sons are as nobly inclined as the boy Jesus.

Probably the Nazareth caravan was encamped for the night before it was discovered that Jesus was not in the large company, with any of the friends or relatives. Consternation seized upon Joseph and Mary and they returned to Jerusalem with the break of day. It was not until the day following that they finally discovered him after long and anxious search. They were destined to learn great lessons that are hard for even the best of parents to master; for a boy is no mere fragment of his mother's life. He is an independent personality. "A boy's will is the wind's will, and the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

WHERE ARTISTS FAIL.

The scene that broke upon Mary's gaze has been a favorite theme for the brush of artists. None of them, not even Hoffman, has attained unto the realty of it. There, in the midst of the grave and reverend doctors of the law sat the youth from despised Galilee. Open-eyed, alert, intent, his sensitive features alive with interest, the boy Jesus sat in the midst of the company of teachers in a court of the temple, listening to them as they expounded the law. Most of the pictures make Him the teacher, with the aged men as listeners. There is nothing in the record to warrant this. Jesus was not that sort of boy. He was listening and asking questions. He sat the feet of those learned in His [illegible]'s book.

of infancy. We pity the mother who loses her babe in the boy, and her boy in the man; but we should pity more the mother whose son always remains a dependent child. There is a period of dear delight to every parent when her will is the child's will; but there comes a day when youth must bear its own burdens, solve its own problems, assume its own responsibilities. That day had come for Jesus

In contemplating Mary's sorrow over the gentle rebuke of her Son, we forget the trial of Jesus. It was no pleasure to Him to reprove, though ever so gently, the mother that He loved. One of the heavy crosses of sensitive young manhood is the necessity for asserting his maturity. It is a hard day for the youth who is obliged to say, "Father, I am no longer a boy." Yet to be true to his manhood the youth must insist on his divine right of self-government.

EVERY LIFE TO ITS OWN.

"Know ye not that I must be in my Father's house," was the wondering question with which Jesus greeted His mother's reproach. After all that these twelve years was held—after Gabriel's visit, the shepherd's wondering announcement, the glad surprise of Simeon and Anna, the star in the sky, the Magi with their gifts, Joseph's dream, the close relation in the little Nazareth home. Know ye not that my first allegiance is to the Father who sent me? How blind every other life is to each life's fulfilment of its own destiny! In his innermost self no one is known to anybody else. Earth's rarest soul is here [illegible] fulfilling His destiny. Christ instinctively turned to His Father's house. He could not deny His nature. He had to be about the things of His Father.

MISUNDERSTOOD.

One of the hymns that never fails to awaken response in any audience is, "Sometime we'll understand." Everybody is misunderstood. Some weak souls lament and repine over this, and count it great injustice; strong spirits accept it as one of the inevitable facts of life. But in all the tragedies of earth's misunderstanding there is comfort to the devout in the record of the life of Jesus, that in the very outset He was not understood by those closest to Him. So it ran through all the days, until the hour of His passion. "He came unto His own, and His Own received Him not." The solitude of the Saviour passes comprehension.

But here we come to a sublime spectacle showing how the Son of Man "humbled himself," for after the interview at the temple Jesus went down to Nazareth to take up the life of a carpenter; to put Himself into the limitations of all the life of that gossiping village. He made Himself one of the many, though so far above them. That was true greatness. It is easy to walk apart with one's own thought; it is easy to do and think as the crowd thinks when with them, but it is greatness, as Emerson has pointed out, to preserve the ideals of solitude amid the sordidness of the multitude.

The only person not surprised at many a man's success is his mother. Never a woman receives a new-born son in her arms without hope of a great future for him. Mary kept all these sayings of Jesus, pondering them in her heart.

All conditions are meant by God for human growth. Even during the eighteen years in Nazareth, the unsympathetic and uncongenial years, the unrecognized and unappreciated years, Jesus "advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and men." Wherever God plants a life is good sowing ground. If the Son of God and the Saviour of Men could come to His estate by the Nazareth apprenticeship every life that longs for better things can rise to its height by right use of present conditions.

The book of knowledge—the knowledge of to-day. It concerns the life of the present—its ceaseless activities, its far-reaching commerce, its mighty industries. Its scope is all-embracing.

How to Acquire Knowledge.

There are several ways of acquiring that all-round knowledge which leads to success, but the least expensive and the surest is by a routine of self-education. Evening schools and like systems are excellent in their way, but they do not often fit in with the individual hours of leisure.

A system, to be capable of universal application, must be one which can be freely used at any time. Everyone has hours in a day which can be devoted to study, odd hours which never seem somehow to suit other people's convenience.

A System of Home Education.

This system is probably the best. At least the student can seize precious minutes which would otherwise be wholly wasted. It is the way we fill our minutes which counts. Moreover, the individual can choose his own subjects and select the special means of culture which best suit his requirements.

Of all books of instruction for home tuition the splendidly compiled series of authoritative works known as the HARMSWORTH SELF-EDUCATOR is laid out on a plan most calculated to be of real assistance. The subjects are treated in an eminently practical way by the greatest authorities.

THE DELINEATOR FOR FEBRUARY

For the woman of fashion, the February Delineator, with its display of spring styles, is a most attractive number. Beside the fashions there is much of interest for the general reader, and the departments concerning the practical housekeeper have been abundantly contributed to. There are short stories by Zona Gale and Margaret Beauchamp, with an interesting travel sketch entitled "In Cairo with a Camera," by Horace Wyndham. Miss Winslow's story of club life, "The President of 'Quex,'" is continued gaining much in interest. The "Collector's Manual" is concluded with an article on "Old Time [illegible]." For the children there is a delightful girl's serial "Sunlight and Shadow," one of Alice Brown's "Gradual Fairy Tales," and amusing games by Lina Beard. Mothers will find Dr. Murray's paper on "Exercise and Physical Culture" particularly helpful, and the numerous pages devoted to matters of housewifely interest, such as cookery, gardening, house furnishing, etc., will prove to be of equal interest to the young housewife.

WATER IN YOUR BLOOD.

Lots of people have thin, watery blood—they eat plenty, but don't digest. When digestion is poor, food isn't converted into nourishment—in consequence the body rapidly loses strength. To positively renew health, nothing equals Ferrozone. It excites sharp appetite—makes the stomach digest, forms life sustaining blood. Abundant strength is sure to follow. If you need more vitality, extra energy, better nerves, then use Ferrozone, the medical triumph of the age. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty chocolate coated Ferrozone tablets.

Carry your present load firmly, correctly and cheerfully, and some one will surely note at the proper time that you are equal to a larger one.

Black-Lead.

It was a long while before it was discovered that plumbago, or black-lead, as it is commonly called, was good to polish grates with. At first it was used in medicine as a remedy for weak stomachs. The method of taking it was as much as would lie on a sixpence, in a glass of wine or ale. Later, its use became extended to sheepmarking, then it was employed in crucible making and cloth dyeing, and last of all it was applied to what are now its most popular purposes, black-

After 25 Years' Absence

Mr. George A. Sutherland, only son of the late Major John Sutherland, at one time one of the leading merchants of the city, and the organizer in 1862 of No. 1 company of the 15th Regiment, was in the city yesterday and this morning, after twenty-five years' absence. Since leaving here Mr. Sutherland has resided chiefly in Arizona, being interested in mines. Mr. Sutherland reports his mother and sister, who now reside at Detroit, as being quite well. Major Sutherland was the junior major of the 16th Regiment at Prescott in June, 1866, and was one of the finest-looking officers that regiment has had.

If a man be honest, that is all he can be. There is no superlative.

One flour cannot be purer than another. It can only be more nearly pure.

In these times when all flour manufacturers are claiming purity you should remember these two things:

NOTHING.

(Puck.)

One day they had a falling out
And played the game of sulk and pout,
And what d'ye think 'twas all about—
Nothing!

She went to ma's and meant to stay!
Which made his dinner late that day;
When she returned what did he say?
Nothing!

Although he stayed out late that night
And drank a glass or two for spite,
What did she do to serve him right?—
Nothing!

Now ere the ending of the week
Each caught the other going to speak!
What better ending is to seek?—
Nothing!

Yet friends and neighbors were perplexed,
And some old ladies even vexed,
To wait and find what happened next—
Nothing!

The United States General Staff complains that there is not under the national flag a sufficiently large mercantile fleet to transport an army of invasion to a foreign country. The military authorities are apparently extending their ideas to keep pace with the Roosevelt amendments to the Monroe Doctrine. It was once a principle of United States politics to keep out of foreign entanglements that could make the sending abroad of an army necessary.

An unprecedented use of the King's name was made at Guelph, Ont., a day or two ago. John Coughlin, deliverer of the mail between the station and the post office, knowing that it was likely to freeze up after the rain, desired to have his horse shod expeditiously. Aware that all black-smith shops were crowded, he bethought himself of the fact that he was a servant of the King, and at once secured the requisite order from Police Magistrate Saunders, with the penalties attached. When he went to a shop he was turned away. Then he presented his order, and it is unnecessary to add that his horse was promptly shod.

Mr Robert Mulholland, for many years a merchant of Cobourg, has placed $10,000 at the disposal of the Trustees of the Toronto Free Hospital for consumptives, for the erection of a commodious cottage, so as to make possible to admit at least a limited number of patients in the advanced stages of consumption from outside the city of Toronto. These will be admitted under arrangements with municipalities or friends who are willing to contribute just bare cost of maintenance.

A VISIT TO JERSEY.

(The Haileyburian.)

Being Sunday, we naturally were anxious to find out how Jersey City observed the license laws. We had not far to go, for we saw some men coming out, so we went in. After drinking a glass of lemonade, we asked the witty, and genial bar-tender, whether they closed up on Sunday or not. He answered to the effect that they closed in this manner, instead of having the full glare of all the electric lights, they only had one, that, if possible, the ordinary, noisy babble of the bar-room was suppressed, and that, for effect, a black curtain was drawn across the entrance, so that the piously inclined would not be affected by any glare that even the one light might give. He ingeniously remarked, that only fools like Canadians would be so particular, for of course, we severely reprimanded him. We grieved for Jersey City, and we hope that the day may come, when good men from Canada will go there, as missionaries, instead of to China, and put that one light out.

Hon. James McMullen, who once despised the Upper Chamber, calling it a "hack for political refugees," but is now a prominent member of the Senate, has been defending the increased indemnity accorded to members of parliament. Less than a decade ago the Hon. James was rummaging through the bulky reports of the Auditor-General, criticizing in the Commons, the number of towels used at Government House, the expensive soap, the reckless purchases of cutlery and other items in connection with Government House. Now he is defending the salary grab. Either convictions, change or time has a most mellowing influence on a man's political conscience.

JOHNNY AND HIS GUN.

Johnny had a little gun,
His father had a bigger,
One day they saw a rabbit run
And Johnny pulled the trigger.

He waved his little gun about,
His foot caught on a peg,
He missed the pesky rabbit, but
He got his father's leg.

Now papa's leg's all bandaged up,
And Johnny stands at meals,
And it's very, very hard
To say which one the sorest feels.

Quebec, Jan. 20.—The Government, it is said, have arranged to adjourn the House on Wednesday next, until the following Monday, out of respect to the memory of the late Hon. R. Prefontaine and allow the members to attend the funeral, to take place on Thursday at Montreal.

Vidocq's Memory.

Vidocq, the great French detective, had so excellent a memory for names and faces that after having seen a criminal once and learned his name he never forgot him, but would often identify him under the most subtle disguises. A French forger once escaped from custody, went abroad and remained for eleven years. In the meantime he became quite bald and lost an eye and part of his nose in a drunken brawl. Fancying that no one could detect him, he returned to Paris and went boldly about the streets; but, being arrested on suspicion, he was brought before Vidocq, who at once recognized him and sent him back to work out his term.

Wesley's Mother.

The mother of John and Charles Wesley, the founders of Methodism, was one of the most remarkable characters of her own or any other age. From tender years the principles of religion and practical piety were instilled by her in the minds of her children. She daily took them into a private room and prayed with each, and so imbued their minds with the spirit of religion that the Methodist movement was really born in her home.

QUIT GRUMBLING.

Cease Worrying Over the Inevitable and Court Contentment.

How full the world is of grumblers! Many of the same people who scold in summer because it is warm scold the next winter because it is cold. There is no point between zero and the nineties that suits them. Whether the gray clouds yield rain or snow makes no matter. Neither is wanted. If skies are clear, somebody's cistern needs rain. If the showers descend, somebody's feathers are ruined. It would add much to our happiness and detract much from the fatal tendency to grow old if we would strive after contentment and cease worrying over the inevitable. The truly happy are the happy go lucky, who take everything as it comes and make the best of it.

If it rains, all that is left to do is to put up our umbrella, if we are so fortunate as to have one, and trudge along. Wet feet and bedraggled skirts won't kill any one any more than poverty and drudgery will, if there is something within us too sunshiny for poverty to cloud and too noble for drudgery to debase. The person who spends his life scolding because things don't go to suit him is like the fly on the king's chariot wheel. Things may not be planned exactly for the comfort of the fly, but his protest will never stop the procession. The best tactics for flies and grumblers to pursue is to take what comes along and be glad it is no worse.

Odd Flight of a Deer.

"Strange accidents will sometimes happen to deer," writes a Scotch hunter. "A hind in Caithness came to some crofter's hut near the forest and was poking about to see if there was anything she could pick up when she found an old tin pail lying in some out of the way corner. In went her nose and down came the handle behind her ears. Then somehow the whole pail slipped down her neck, and there she was, caught. She was seen several times with her strange necklace, which prevented her from drinking or feeding properly. The clatter when she got under way was tremendous, and the other deer were frightened for miles. Several unsuccessful attempts were made on her life, but I never heard the sequel. Anyhow, she must have died soon from nervous prostration, coupled with the shock, or from some ladylike disease of that sort."

The Luxurious Romans.

The Romans had no flower shows. There were "bread and circuses," but not bread and flowers. The luxurious Roman used roses in enormous quantities at his banquets. It was a fine joke to have roses fall from above on guests reclining at their tables and the flowers in such quantities as to smother them. A writer recalls a picture of Alma-Tadema's "The Rose Feast of Elagabalus," which shows the superabundance of roses. To spend on a banquet in roses 4,000,000 sesterces, equivalent to about $160,000, is recorded by Suetonius, but possibly Suetonius exaggerates.

Hereditary Names.

According to the invariable custom of the Duke of Richmond's family, it is prescribed that the eldest son and the eldest son of the eldest son shall be named after King Charles II., to whom they owe so much. The same principle is preserved in Lord Salisbury's family, where the eldest sons are named James, after James I., who bestowed the earldom of Salisbury and viscounty of Cranborne on the original founder of the house.—London Graphic.

The Liberty Boys.

The name of Liberty Boys is the name by which the Sons of Liberty of the American Revolution were familiarly known. They were the men who fought the first battles of the colonists, who opposed the stamp act and participated in the Boston tea party. A flag hoisted upon the flagstaff that stood beside Liberty tree, in Hanover square, Boston, was the signal at which they assembled.

Surely Not.

Customer—Can't you wait upon me? I've been here for nearly an hour. Two pounds of liver, please. Butcher—Sorry, but there are three or four ahead of you. Surely you don't want your liver out of order?

The readiest and surest way to get rid of censure is to correct ourselves.—Demosthenes.

and I don't see why we shouldn't. If we could find the place once, we can find it a second time. Besides, we know the geography of the sea floor down there pretty thoroughly now, so we've only got to hit upon any part of the five square miles which we have already surveyed to fix our position again relatively to the Santa Catarina easily. The only thing I'm doubtful about is whether we shall have the chance."

"Why not?"

The young man did not answer her for a moment. Was there, he asked himself, any need to frighten the girl? Pooh! She was as brave as he could be and braver!

"We may not live the night through," he said simply at length.

Dolly gave a little shiver which was not wholly due to the chill of the wetting which she had received. "Is that what father thinks?" she asked presently.

"Yes."

"I won't believe it, Alan! We have deserved to succeed, and I'm just going to go on believing that we shall succeed. Let's talk about something pleasanter. Do you know what Cain Laversha told me today?"

For answer Guthrie turned a quick look of admiration upon her. He felt the infection of the girl's cheerful bravery and quite forgot to be interested in what Cain Laversha had said.

"Dolly," he cried, "you're a brick! The Eureka shall live through this night, and we will go back afterward for the rest of that Spanish million. I'll believe that, too, for your sake. But Dolly," he added tremulously, and his arm stole round her waist, "if we should be wrong and the ketch should do down tonight, I should like to feel in that last struggle with the waters that you knew first what I am going to tell you now. Dolly, I love you. Will you be my sweetheart?"

With a little struggle the girl freed herself from his arm. "I'm going back to the cabin now," she declared. "Father will be getting anxious about me if I stay here any longer."

"But Dolly, answer me first!"

At that moment a heavy wave struck the ketch. She heeled over to it and a mass of dark, green water came in over the bows. Dolly had started to run for the cabin hatch, but the wave caught her and pinned her against the lee bulwarks.

With a cry of horror Guthrie dashed after her to save her from being washed overboard. Just as he reached her another big green sea broke over the Eureka's quarter and, racing across the sloping deck, covered the pair of them before it found its way out through the lee scuppers. Then there was a quieter interval, and Guthrie took advantage of it to make a dash for his old station by the mainmast, with Dolly clinging to him convulsively. As soon as they had reached a place of comparative safety again and Guthrie had ascertained that the girl was unhurt, except for the slight bruises which the wave had given her when it pinned her against the bulwarks, he drew her closer to him and, without waiting to ask for permission, kissed her.

She did not repulse him, nor did she say anything more about trying to regain the cabin. It seemed, in fact, that she had quite forgotten about her father's anxiety on her account.

But the storm was raging at its fiercest again, and without Guthrie's assistance she could not have hoped to make her way in safety along the slippery decks. And, of course, the young man, having been stationed on the lookout, could not leave his post.

With a cry of horror Guthrie dashed after her.

The wind grew fiercer in its fury of destruction. The mizzen sail split with a sound like the rattle of a volley of musketry and stood out straight from the mast in a row of fluttering ribbons. One by one these were torn away by the blast and vanished into the darkness to leeward. Guthrie held the girl closer to him and, clinging with his free arm to the mast by which they were standing, watched with a kind of wondering amusement the awful evidences of the tempest's rage. He had no fear, for in the newness of the happiness which filled him there was as yet no room for any thought of doubt.

But presently the moon shone bright and clear through a circular rift in the stormclouds. With a wild shriek the wind died away to nothing, and with the suddenness of a thunderclap there came an awful pause in the turmoil of the air.

They had run into the dead, windless center of the tornado.

Relieved of the steadying strain of the wind, the ketch plunged madly every way and shivered helplessly in the heavy seas. Guthrie knew that the lull was but for a moment, and that if they let this opportunity go there might be for hours no other chance for Dolly to regain the cabin. The respite, brief as it was, must be used at once.

A heavy wave came on board. When most of it had escaped again by the broken and gaping scuppers, they made their dash. The companion was reached, and with no chance to give him more than a hand squeeze Dolly went below to the shelter of the cabin.

The young man made his way forward again to his post with his shoulder bruised and tingling from a blow against the combing of the hatch. Then the tempest spoke again and, with a shriek, wilder and more awful than before, struck the ketch. But this time it raged from exactly the opposite quarter of the compass.

In the space of those few seconds the dead center of the tornado had been passed, and the Eureka was caught once more in the tearing circle of the storm wind.

CHAPTER XI.

PIPER'S CAY.

For three days the storm raged unceasingly, and then the weather moderated. The ketch behaved in this fearful turmoil of the ocean like the splendid sea boat which Captain Colepepper had declared her to be. But the interval for preparation had been too short. Between the time when the two leaders of the enterprise had decided that they must give up for the present all hope of being able to take the Eureka down to the bottom for another deck load of the Spanish gold and the moment when the first blast of the tornado had struck her there had been a breathing space of barely two hours. And this had not been enough.

The damage to the imperfectly secured spars and rigging had in consequence been very great. The whole of the gearing of the mizzenmast had gone by the board, and at every roll the broken bulwarks let in the big green seas through half a dozen gaping rents.

"We must run in somewhere to refit," declared Captain Colepepper, regretfully, for the necessity of abandoning the Santa Catarina just when she was becoming profitable had been a great disappointment to him. "No use to think of anything else till we've seen to our repairs."

A council was being held in the after cabin, consisting of the two leaders, Dolly and the undergraduate. Miss Colepepper was unwontedly silent and seemed to find a difficulty in meeting Guthrie's eye. This was the first time they had seen one another since the episode during the storm, so, perhaps, the young lady's bashfulness was natural.

The captain, who while the canvas remained unbent and the ketch was transformed into a diving bell had seldom ventured on an opinion, had now resumed his authority. He was in command again now that his ship had returned to her proper functions, and he understood what was due to himself. Dr. Tring, therefore, reverted naturally to his sea position of mate.

"H'm!" said the doctor, shoving his wig over his brows and rubbing his ear perplexedly. "I don't altogether admire the idea."

"Of what?" inquired Captain Colepepper.

"Of running into any of these West India islands. As I've told you before, I know 'em rather well—Spanish, English, Republican, all the lot. I was out here naturalizing, if you remember. Can't we manage some sort of makeshift to repair our damages and rub along somehow without calling anywhere?"

"No," said the captain decidedly, "we can't. I wouldn't undertake to sail the Eureka through another blow in her present trim. Besides, our supply of fresh water is running short, and by the time we had found the Santa Catarina again and got the rest of the dollars out of her the barrels would be about empty. We shall have to run in somewhere in any case to get them filled before we can point our bows to the Bristol river again. What have you against the islands?"

"They aren't a healthy neighborhood for folk in our position, Colepepper; that's all. Our enterprise has been pretty well talked about, and if it got round, as it most assuredly would, that the ketch had got any of the Spanish [illegible] her hatches we should [illegible] even chance of getting [illegible] They're awful rapscal- —English and all the lot [illegible]ands used to be the head- [illegible]stern piracy only a cen- [illegible] there are blackish tales [illegible] air about the thing bo- [illegible] freely even now. A black [illegible] African wilds is bad, [illegible]o has been exported [illegible] and the tinted folk hereabouts have a pretty nasty reputation, I know. But there's Jamaica. We should be snug enough in Port Royal."

"Revenue mulcts on treasure trove; difficulties with a colonial admiralty court; yellow fever, which is usually pretty virulent, and about as good a chance of a raid from niggers and 'mean' whites as we should have at Havana itself. That's all that occurs to me at present, Colepepper. I think I could guarantee that little selection at Port Royal."

The captain tugged some ends of beard from under his chin and fixed them between his teeth. The others knew the sign. He was thinking and did not intend to speak for a minute or so.

When the accustomed interval had elapsed, he got up and pulled a cylindrical tin case from a locker. He selected one sheet from the contents and spread it out on the table.

"Section 33 of Detailed West India Islands Chart; British Admiralty, '68," he announced. "The latest I could get, doctor; not altogether accurate, perhaps, but the most reliable information obtainable, except from local knowledge. Here's where we are now." The captain marked the spot with a stumpy red forefinger. "And there, you see, to leeward of us, are half a score of cays, ranging in size from a few hundred yards across to a dozen miles. Guthrie, my lad, reach me over that blue backed pilot book. No, not him, the next—yes, that. Thanks. Now, doctor, we'll see what the sailing directions say. H'm! 'Reefs bare at half ebb.' H'm! H'm! 'Shoal; sea breaks, with winds N. E. to S. E.' H'm! 'Turtle cay.' This looks better. Ah! 'No water. Approach must not be attempted by strangers.'"

The captain turned over some dozen pages of the book, reading the fine print carefully and giving others scrappy extracts and comments, but he found no place that was suitable for their purpose. The sea to the westward was covered with these small sandy islets, with their encircling reefs and shoals, which bear the name "cays," but all were either too barren, too much exposed or too hard of access to provide the Eureka with a quiet refitting dock. However, at last the captain read out the name "Piper's cay," and the doctor looked up from the chart, exclaiming, "I forgot that was here!"

"Alternative name, Ignacio's reef," read the captain; "westernmost of the Ladrone group. There should be three of them, according to this."

"Yes, here they are," said the doctor, picking out the spot with a leg of the compasses.

"D'you know the place, then?"

"Been in there once, Colepepper."

"But, could you serve as pilot, doctor?" asked the other anxiously. "The pilot book says, 'Entrance dangers for strangers impossible during hard blow from E.' There's good anchorage inside and water and turtle, so that we should be all right if we got there. But that same getting there is the rub. I don't want to pile the ketch up on one of those blessed reefs, and that's easy enough done."

"Yes, here they are," said the doctor.

"It is," replied the doctor. "You're out of soundings with the hand lead. You think you're in deep water, and"—

"The sea suddenly gets pale green bang under your bowsprit end," put in the captain, "and then a comber breaks, and then before you know what you're doing you're jammed hard and fast with the honeycombed rock grinding and tearing your bottom out. That's what has happened times without number."

"Exactly," assented the doctor gloomily.

"Yes," went on Captain Colepepper, "there's many a good ship been lost in just that way. That's how the brigantine Scarlet Runner was cast away in 1873 and all on board drowned except two deckhands and the captain's dog. They say she was knocked into staves in less than ten minutes. Pass me the tobacco jar, Dolly. I must have a smoke over this. Doctor, help yourself. Your cigarette papers are in the drawer."

"Is this Piper's cay inhabited?" asked Dolly as she passed the tobacco.

"Inhabited! Bless the girl, no!" returned the doctor. "It isn't a spot one would care to reside in for long. It is scarcely ever visited now. I'd the trouble of the world to find any one [illegible] knew enough about the place to [illegible] me there."

"Aye," observed the captain, "it's a lonely enough spot now. But the island has seen some strange things done in bygone times, though."

"You're right, Colepepper," answered Dr. Tring. "But its popularity has declined sadly of late. In the good old times, when the ocean wasn't the well policed highway that it is now, Piper's cay was a very favorite resort for gentlemen in the buccaneering interest. They used to go there to fill up their water casks, careen and repair shot holes, or even simply to stretch their legs ashore without any fear of being disturbed at the exercise. Yes, Piper's cay has certain unholy memories attached to it, which I may yarn to you about some day when you catch me in a good humor, but at the present time its glory has departed, and you'll find it a dismal enough paradise, from which I venture to prophesy that you will be most uncommonly thankful to get away."

"Any sport to be had on it?" asked Guthrie.

"No, I shouldn't say that there was," replied the doctor dryly. "The chief living things you'll find are mosquitoes—mosquitoes in swarms—and sand flies as big as your thumb nail by way of variety. The mosquitoes are bad, but the other monsters bite knobs off you and then fly away to a neighboring tree to eat them. Oh, yes, you may laugh, Miss Colepepper! You don't believe me, I see. But I advise you to get a veil rigged in front of that hat of yours in readiness."

The captain was tugging at his fringe of beard. It was obvious that he considered the conversation frivolous. The doctor turned to him:

"Pardon, Colepepper, for the digression. I'm enlarging these young people's ideas of natural history. Where were we when I maundered off?"

"Discussing what harbor we should run to, doctor. Is it to be this Piper's cay or not? It would do well enough if we could make the anchorage, but I tell you candidly I'm not going to risk picking up one of these infernal reefs by taking the ketch in myself. If you think you remember enough about the spot to play pilot, then we'll chance it; but if not, Nicholas Colepepper's not going to venture his own hand this deal."

"Colepepper, you're putting a big responsibility on my shoulders!"

"I know it, doctor. But I hold no certificate for pilotage hereabouts, and I'm just as capable of taking the ketch through those reefs as that lubber Cain Laversha would be. If a shipmaster hails a pilot anywhere, he hands over the whole responsibility of sailing his vessel so long as the man is aboard and in charge. For which, see board of trade regulations. Section, pilotage."

The doctor took a turn round the cabin. "There's no help for it," he said at last. "I must attempt it. I think, I trust, I shall succeed."

He paused and inhaled a deep breath of smoke.

"Colepepper, I will remember that channel! I will take the ketch through!"

"That's it!" cried the captain, delightedly. "If you've made up your mind not to fail, doctor, I shall have no hesitation in handing her over to your charge when the time comes. And now, if you'll go on deck and see about setting all hands to repair damages, I'll just stay to pick [illegible] a course on the chart here and follow you in a couple of minutes. We'll have her under way by nightfall for Piper's cay."

The wind was blowing freshly from the west northwest. The ketch took a long leg and a short one, and by the late afternoon of the next day the white line of surf on the outlying reefs of Piper's cay was visible from the third hoop of the mainsail.

"Sundown in another hour," remarked the captain, after consulting his sheet fast to wind'ard—so! Lash the helm as she likes it, Henrietta! No, a bit more over. Yes, about there! Now she'll lie to like a mooring buoy till we're ready to pick a way through the reefs."

CHAPTER XII.

THE PASSAGE OF THE REEFS.

At daybreak "All hands!" was called.

They got the ketch under weigh and beat her to within a quarter of a mile of the entrance through the outermost reefs. Then, heaving to again, they took the mainsail off her altogether and started afresh under number three jib and cringle headed mizzen trysail. The fore staysail was on deck, hanked, with the halyards hooked and moused, ready for instant hoisting, so that, if it should be required, the sail could be aloft in five seconds. But Captain Colepepper admitted that he did not expect to need it, unless, perhaps, for some sudden canting off by the head.

The slower, within reasonable limits, that the ketch forged along, the greater would be her safety, and therefore the captain had taken the extra precaution of getting the topsail and its yard bent on to a warp, ready to lower away astern by way of a floating drag, if the pace had to be still further retarded.

When these various preparations had been completed, way was got on the Eureka again. She ceased bobbing lazily over the swells and turned in toward the reefs.

Captain Colepepper was at the tiller, Henrietta stood in the port channels ready with the hand lead, Tom Jelly was perched on the crosstrees, Cain Laversha was on the mizzen sheet, Hans, Dolly and the undergraduate were all stationed ready for emergency duty on the forecastle. Dr. Tring as pilot had taken up his position on the heel of the bowsprit and stood with eyeglasses screwed firmly into their puckered leathery framework, peering anxiously at the water ahead.

The breeze was from the southward, and as their course lay mostly toward north, they expected to have it fair for most of the time. The entrance to the channel which Dr. Tring was making for was about a couple of miles in width. The clear water within its boundaries stood out darkly against the crumbling lines of surf on either hand.

They crept slowly into this pass and worked their way carefully along, jibing frequently. The lead was kept going constantly, but it was in reality of less use than the sharp lookout which was kept by the young eyes forward. At this work the depth of water can be plumbed quickly, and with a good deal of accuracy by merely watching the color indications. The different depths are shown by different surface tints, and with a little experience it is as easy to read these as it would be to prick out a course on a shaded chart.

Had it not been for these chromatic indications they could never have picked their way along, for many times, when Henrietta's shrill voice was calling out "No bottom!" the doctor was singing out for "Down helm and hard in sheets!" to avoid some covered rock that rose sheer up from the deep directly ahead of her.

They happened to be close to one of these hidden shoals when a sea broke, and as the ketch slipped away close hauled from along its edge Dolly looked over to leeward and saw a wonderful sight—lovely, yet almost fearsome in its irresistible grandeur.

"Watch it, Alan!" she cried. "It's going to break!"

A huge green roller had risen as if by magic from the smoother water of the channel. Driven along in a grand, solemn rush by some unseen force, it swept over the outermost barriers of the shoal till it reached the shallowest part. Then its crest bowed slowly over. It was a majestic movement. The bending was done as quietly and evenly as though the water had been a sheet of metal, and the sun was mirrored off from it in a flashing blaze of emerald light. The head of the wave seemed to grow thinner and thinner, till it became as translucent as fine bottle glass, and at last, when the towering weight of waters grew too great to be supported on its curving base, the whole mass fell with a roar, a shriek, a sob on to the honeycombed coral beneath. And the spume flakes rising into the air fled like light winged sea fowl far away over the leeward waters.

Little by little the Eureka's pilot felt his way along through the mazes of the reefs, twice grazing the ground, though without fortunately doing any harm to her fabric, and once getting hopelessly embayed in a channel which grew narrower and narrower as she progressed along it.

The water was deep under her keel, but the lines of surf on either hand were closing in. The doctor hailed the masthead. Tom Jelly's keen eye could see no way out. As far as he could see the channel filled up ahead and in a mile became impassable. There might be a chance of getting through, but to fail would be fatal. So the doctor determined to retrace his steps while she had yet room to turn.

The helm was put down, therefore, and with head sheets slackened the ketch came round into the wind. The channel was too narrow for her to beat out. So a kedge, which lay on deck ready shackled, was tumbled over the bows and the crew were piped below for a rest and dinner.

In another hour they turned to work again. Tom Jelly, Henrietta, the captain and Guthrie tumbled into the boat and went ahead to tow with Dolly to steer them, and then the hardest work of the day began.

The Eureka seemed to the crew in the boat to be as loath to move as a quayside would have been. As soon as the strain on the hawser slackened they

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

They are the prescription of a specialist.

This is an age of specialists,—men who give all their time, study, and practice to some particular branch of medicine. There are specialists of the eye, specialists in diseases of the lungs, specialists in diseases of women. It costs something to get a prescription from a specialist, but it is worth all it costs, when you get it.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are the prescription of Dr. Hugo, of Paris, a specialist of forty years' experience in diseases of women.

It embraces the latest medical discoveries of the other skilled physicians in the world. It might be called a compound prescription of the world's best specialists.

No ordinary physician can prescribe such a remedy. The better the physician, the nearer will be his prescription to that of Dr. Hugo.

Thousands of women in Europe have paid $50 for a consultation with Dr. Hugo and got the same remedy. Considering the benefit they received from it, it was worth $50, but it costs women now only 50c. for six dozen tablets—enough for an extended treatment.

It is a compound remedy containing all the tonics and alteratives that any woman can need, no matter what her condition. For women suffering from a run-down condition, or any weakness peculiar to her sex, it is now acknowledged to be beyond doubt or question the best remedy available to-day. It makes healthy women.

BABY'S HEALTH.

"When a child is well, give it no medicine," is a wholesome adage. But at the first sign of trouble the careful mother will give Baby's Own Tablets, which promptly cure indigestion, colic, constipation, diarrhoea, simple fevers and teething troubles. They contain not one particle of opiate or poisonous "soothing" stuff, yet they give refreshing sleep because they remove the cause of sleeplessness and the child awakens bright and well. Mrs. F. McIntosh, Wabigoon, Ont., says: "Baby's Own Tablets wrought a wonderful change in my little one. When he was two months old he began to fail and cried almost night and day. But after giving him the tablets he grew well and is now a bright, laughing baby, who scarcely ever gives any trouble. The

WHAT CAUSES HEADACHES?

Blood Poisoning, Always!

The blood is poisoned by retained tissue waste, due to defective action of the bowels, kidneys or skin. The tissue waste, or dead cells, circulating in the blood, irritates the nerves and brain, and headaches and neuralgia are bound to arise. Headache powders and opiates of any kind do harm, by aiding the retention of the blood poison in the system. To cure headaches, purifiy the blood by opening the bowels, and by stimulating the kidneys and skin to increased action.

Chronic Headaches Cured by Fruit-a-tives

To Fruit-a-tives Limited,
OTTAWA, Ont.

"I was a sufferer from fearful headaches for over two years, sometimes they were so bad I was unable to work for days at a time. I took all kinds of medicines, was treated by physicians, and yet the headaches persisted. A short time ago I was advised to try "Fruit-a-tives" and I did so with, I must confess, very little faith, but after I had taken them for three days my headaches were easier and in a week they left me. After I had taken a box of the tablets my headaches were quite cured. My appetite was also poor and my stomach was bad and now my appetite is splendid and my digestion is excellent. I have been taken in all three boxes of "Fruit-a-tives," am exceedingly grateful to "Fruit-a-tives" for curing me and I give this unsolicited testimonial with great pleasure.
(Sgd.) BERT. CORNELL.

"Fruit-a-tives" cure headaches and neuralgia because they purify the blood by their splendid action on the liver, kidneys, bowels and skin, and thus remove all poisonous material from the system.

With these eliminating organs all active and working as nature intends them to work, there can be no poisons in the blood, and there can be no headaches or neuralgia.

A week's treatment will PROVE how thoroughly and quickly "Fruit-a-tives" cure.

WINTER BIRD NEIGHBORS.

Many of These Much Traveled Little Fellows Are Surprisingly Tame.

It is surprising that there are birds which come to us only to spend the winter, leaving us again at the beginning of spring for northern lands and snow banked hillsides, where the long day and pale twilight nights of the arctic reign. Birds that raise their broods in the far, treeless northland, where heather, grasses and stunted alders grow on a shallow, soaking soil underlaid by a great depth of eternal ice, at the approach of winter gather into great roving flocks to surge southward to the gentler climate of our blizzardy "temperate" winters!

Many of these much traveled little fellows are wonderfully tame and seem not to experience fear of man so universal with animals that rear their young in his neighborhood. Pine grosbeaks and crossbills, whose real homes are in the silent, moss filled spruce forests of the great north, will almost allow themselves to be caught in your hand. With the field roving birds, like the snow buntings, horned larks and longspurs, this fearlessness is not found, probably from the constant lookout they are forced to keep against the cunning and hungry white foxes and the daring, trap jawed little ermine that persistently hunt them in their northland home. But the rosy little red polls, the creepers, kinglets, "little friend chickadee," as the northern Indians call him, and all the other deep forest dwellers are as unafraid of us as they are of the gentle porcupines and deer of their home woods.—St. Nicholas.

THE CITY MAN.

His Lot In Life Compared With That of the Farmer.

According to the National Magazine, "men in the cities work twice as hard as the farmers, and they get few or no holidays. Thousands and thousands of professional men, clerks and men in small business enterprises delve and toil their entire lives away and at the end are carted out to the cemeteries without having had any more leisure or enjoyment in their lives than a horse on a treadmill. The rut they toil along in is as narrow as a case knife." This is not the farmer's view of the city man, whom he sees only during vacation, when the city man is taking a brief and much needed rest. The farmer sees him sporting his "glad rags" and mistakenly imagines him to be all the year round only an idle butterfly, consuming the produce of the horny handed son of toil. The truth, it is held, is that the city man, as a rule, is the harder worker and gets much less enjoyment out of life. He longs for the rural scenes and occupations of the farmer; his dearest hope is to get back to the country to spend his last years. A few of the city folks make a big lot of money and get their follies and amusements in the newspapers, but the great majority of city toilers live a very monotonous and stupid as well as a very laborious and poverty stricken life. The farmer, it is concluded, has "the real thing," while the city man has only barren aspirations and disappointments. The contented farmer is not only the wisest but the happiest of mankind.

LILY DOUGALL

The Novelist and Her Work.

In the old homestead, "Ivy Cottage," nestling under the shadow of Mount Royal, Montreal, Lily Dougall, one of Canada's most notable novelists, was born in 1858. In addition to the drop of ink that seems part of the chemistry of the Dougall blood, she inherited the strength of character, the love for humanity and the earnestness of purpose of her father, John Dougall, the founder of the "Montreal Witness." Miss Dougall's brother and sister show the same characteristics in their good work in journalism and philanthropy.

Miss Dougall spent her childhood in Montreal, and since then, because h[illegible] health was not robust enough to stand the bracing rigor of Canadian winters [illegible] spent much of her time abroad. The education she received under private t[illegible] was supplemented by her study at Abbot Academy, Andover, Mass., and a cou[illegible] at Cheltenham and later at Edinburgh University, where she was honored with th[illegible] degree of L.L.A. She has lived much of her time in England and Scotland, and confesses to cycling and traveling in out-of-the-way places unknown to Cook's tourists, as her pet recreations. In 1891 her first book, "Beggars All," appeared and, winning instant acceptance as the strongest and most original romance of the year, was termed a masterpiece of restrained and legitimate dramatic fiction. Two years later her novel "What Necessity knows," received high praise.

In 1895 her two books "The Mermaid" and "The Zeitgeist" won the appreciative approval of the critics and public by the boldness of their conception, the strength of treatment, mastery in the delineation of character, beauty in description, the broadness of view and sympathy they manifested, and the dramatic quality that held the attention of the reader throughout, and more than satisfied it in the ending. So uniformly good is her work that it is difficult to say which is best, many of her admirers, however, claim it is "The Madonna of a Day," in which the heroine, Mary Howard, a selfish young journalist, traveling along the Canadian Pacific Railway, is lost among the vast snowy solitudes of the mountains, and wanders into a lawless mining camp. The story is original throughout, and, though witty and cynical at times, there runs through it the thread of a mighty purpose, worked out with rare force and effectiveness.

BLOOD DISEASES

If you inherited or contracted any Blood Disease you are never safe unless the virus or poison has been eradicated from the system. At times you see alarming symptoms, but live in hopes no serious results will follow. Have you any of the following symptoms? Sore throat, ulcers on the tongue or in the mouth, hair falling out, aching pains, itchiness of the skin, sores or blotches on the body, eyes red and smart, dyspeptic stomach, sexual weakness—enlarged glands. Don't trust to luck. Don't ruin your system with the old fogy treatment—mercury, potash and patent medicines, which suppress the symptoms for a time only to break out again when happy in domestic life. Don't let quacks experiment on you. Our NEW METHOD TREATMENT is guaranteed to cure you. OUR GUARANTEES ARE BACKED BY BANK BONDS that the Blood or Skin disease will never return. Thousands of patients have been already cured by our NEW METHOD TREATMENT for over 20 years, and no return of the disease. No experiment, no risk—not a "patch up," but a positive cure. The worst cases solicited.

HAD BLOOD POISON 12 YEARS

The New Method Treatment Cured Him after Drugs, Mercury, Hot Springs, &c., all failed.

Wm. H. Patterson, of Saginaw, Mich., relates his experience: "I do not like notoriety and especially of this kind, but I feel I owe this much to Drs. K. & K. for the great good they have done me. I had a serious blood disease when 25 years of age. The skin and blood symptoms gradually developed. Pimples and ulcers formed, running sores broke out, hair became loose, pains in the bones and joints, dyspeptic stomach, foul breath, itchy skin, etc. It is needless for me to say I tried doctors. I grew to hate the looks of one. I visited Hot Springs twice for four months each time. It helped me temporarily, but in six months after returning home I was as bad as ever. Finally a Doctor friend of mine advised me to see Drs. Kennedy & Kergan. He said he had known of them for over 20 years, and as they made a specialty of these diseases and treated the worst cases by the hundred they ought to be expert in curing them. I was afraid of advertising doctors, but I took his advice. They agreed to treat me under a guarantee or no pay. I investigated their financial standing and found they were perfectly responsible, so I commenced the new method Treatment. The eruptions disappeared in two weeks, the bone pains in four weeks and in four months I was entirely cured. Yes, sir, I can recommend the New Method Treatment for Blood and Skin Diseases."

Temperature and Butterflies.

Some remarkably interesting experiments are reported from Zurich showing the effect of temperature on the development of species among butterflies. The experiments have been continued through a period of about fourteen years, and it is found, for instance, that the common small tortoise shell butterfly if subjected to warmth of from 37 degrees to 39 degrees centigrade develops into the variety found in Sardinia, while those bred in a temperature of from 4 degrees to 6 degrees produce the Lapland variety. Similarly the application of heat produced the Sardinian form of the swallowtail butterfly and the Syrian form of the Apollo.

The Highest Bedroom.

On the summit of Mont Blanc is the highest bedroom in the world. It was built for Alpinists who have been overtaken by a storm on the summit or have lost their way in the snows. A large camp bed occupies all the floor of the room, and can contain twenty-two persons. Every stick and stone had to be carried up by porters from Chamonix. The work of construction, which lasted two years, was dangerous to the workmen. During its erection the building was demolished twice and filled with snow nine times.

Curiosities of Journalism.

Norway can boast of the northernmost paper in the world; this is The Nord Kap, brought out weekly at Hammerfest. It obtains its news, according to a writer in T. P.'s Weekly, by a ship which calls once every eight days. When items arrive on publishing day they stand over till the next issue, so that the journal's latest news is often fourteen days behind the rest of the globe. A newspaper used to appear at Deccan printed on white cotton, which was used as a pocket handkerchief. Then it was washed and the publisher lithographed on the same sheet time after time, until it was lost. Probably much the smallest-sized paper in the world is a Mexican weekly, The Telegram. It is composed of four pages of printed matter arranged in three columns five inches long and two inches wide. In this limited space is contained the world's news, boiled, or rather stewed down. This curiosity of journalism has adopted for its motto: "Little Straw and Much Wheat."

Fresh Eggs a Year Old.

Some months ago a rumor went around—started by a correspondent of The Lancet—that a chicken had been hatched from an egg which had been preserved by silicate of soda for a year. Another correspondent has just been experimenting and has found that though the eggs would not produce chickens they could not be distinguished from new laid eggs. The produce dealer has long ago discovered the virtue and value of the egg preservative and has laid his plans accordingly, while hens in Russia, Siberia, Morocco and Egypt lay the eggs. The breakfast egg which is eaten as new laid in Cape Colony, for instance, has probably come with a million others from Russia by way of London and is about nine months old. Still it is "as good as new," and perhaps it will be comforting to learn that it won't hatch chickens.—London Daily Chronicle.

HAS ITS HUMORS.

Characteristics of English Politics—Some Ways of Treating Chronic Hecklers—Speakers Prompt.

The best way to treat a heckler at a political meeting is undoubtedly to humor him, not in the sense of tempting him to continue his pursuit, but in that of reducing him to silence by a witty sally, a course that rarely fails to find favor with the other members of the audience, says London Tit-Bits.

There are occasions, of course, on which the candidate finds himself in hopeless difficulties when seeking for a retort. For instance some years ago Mr. Willis was orating at the top of his voice in a most strenuous manner, and he happened to use the well worn phrase from "David Copperfield," "Barkis is willin'," when a man at the back of the hall bawled out, "No, Willis is barkin'," the laugh being against the politician.

One is bound to admit, however, that a ready-witted candidate has frequently extricated himself from a desperate situation in the most triumphant manner when other men would have been covered with confusion.

When Charles Burleigh, the Abolitionist, was called upon to answer a cowardly and despicable "rotten egg" heckler, he did so by calmly remarking as he wiped his face: "This is a striking evidence of what I have always maintained, that pro-slavery arguments are unsound." The late Sir Henry Havelock-Allan got over the difficulty by fixing his eyes on the spot whence the almost winged messenger had been projected into space, and remarking, with just the slightest indication of disgust, "I say, my friend, the hen that laid that egg had a very bad breath."

It is a strange circumstance that, whereas candidates can perpetrate veritable herds of "bulls" without exciting the retort uncourteous from the heckler, the same individual regards a quotation delivered in a language other than his own with feelings similar to those entertained by another species of bull when a red rag comes within his range of vision.

When at the general election of 1900 the chairman of an overflow meeting at Burnley remarked that many of our brave soldiers were sent to the front "without a pair of trousers to their backs," his remark failed to bring forth a comment from the heckler, while the statement of a platform speaker at Chipping Norton, about the same time, to the effect that the Unionist candidate had "laid down his life for his country, and expected to be returned by a large majority," was received with tumultuous applause.

"Why such remarks as these should not be commented upon, when so many others, far less provocative of interpolation, should be seized upon, it is difficult to say; but there are occasions, such as that upon which Sir Lewis Molesworth informed the electorate of Bodmin that "Home Rule is only dead so long as we keep it alive," when the nature of the remark temporarily deprives the heckler of his breathing capacity.

With regard to the foreign quotation interpolation, probably no more effective way of dealing with it could be devised than that resorted to recently at a trans-Atlantic political meeting, when Mr. J. H. Hawthornthwaite, a Lancashire-born man, though a member of the British Columbian Legislature, innocently let drop a Latin quotation, with the usual result that he was admonished to "talk to us in a language we can understand," whereupon, without a moment's hesitation, he turned to the heckler and made the hall resound to a stentorian cry of "Hee-haw! Hee-haw!" When the convulsion of laughter had subsided, the speaker completed his adversary's discomfiture by quietly adding, "I regard it as a duty to oblige my friends to the best of my ability."

Although the sledgehammer retort is very effective in quelling the contumacious heckler, it can scarcely be expected to earn the vote of the victim, where as the gentle answer that turneth away wrath undoubtedly has that pleasing effect at times. The Right Hon. John Morley is one of the few political speakers who can quell a heckler with a smiling retort as effectively as the famous Campbell, of Monzie, who, when he asked an Edinburgh burgess to vote for him and received the angry answer, "Vote for you! I'd sooner vote for Satan himself," sweetly replied, "Yes, but, if your friend doesn't stand, may I depend upon your support?" a remark that earned him a staunch adherent.

A short time ago, when Mr. Morley was speaking at Montrose, a heckler demanded permission to put an important question to the right honorable gentleman, that turned out to be, "Why doesn't he play golf?" in answer to which the sitting member promptly retorted, "I don't think I'm old enough to begin yet," a statement that excited much hilarity and put the audience on excellent terms with the speaker.

That success, however, does not always rest with the candidate was clearly indicated when Mr. J. Balfour Browne, K. C., was recently speaking in Dumfriesshire and an elector remarked: "Had we not better utilize our own resources to the full by allowing labor and capital free access to the land of our own country instead of attempting to bolster up certain industries at the expense of others?"

Said the candidate, with emphasis: "I do not follow the question. It sounds like a question taken from a book on political economy, the author of which did not know much."

Then did the heckler lift up his voice a second time and remark: "It is taken from your own valuable book, Mr. Browne, on fiscal reform."

The situation in which Mr. Browne found himself was not, perhaps, particularly desirable, but it might have been worse. Candidates will recall with a shudder, for instance, that terrible moment when a speaker, wishing to emphasize his strict regard for the truth, remarked that in his youth he had been thrashed for telling it, when from the back of the hall was wafted through the atmosphere the cutting comment, "I guess it's cured yer, guv'nor!"

When straw is used for bedding it should be changed at least once a week.

PROVED IN MOUNT FOREST.

Every doctor in this town tried his best to relieve Mrs. J. Witbom, of asthma; none succeeded. "For years," she states, "I was a dreadful sufferer; nothing gave relief. At times I found it necessary to have all the doors and windows open to get my breath. When in despair I heard of Catarrhozone. I used it and now am perfectly cured." This proves beyond doubt that any case of asthma is curable with Catarrhozone. No remedy so pleasant, none so absolutely certain to thoroughly cure; try Catarrhozone yourself; it's guaranteed.

A Foxboro Wedding.

Foxboro, January 16.—A very pretty wedding took place in the Presbyterian Church on Monday, Jan. 15th, at 10.30 a.m., when Miss Mary Lake, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lake, was united in marriage to Mr. Lisle Anderson, of Roslin. Rev. D. Smith, pastor of the church, officiated. The bride, who looked lovely dressed in white silk trimmed with chiffon, entered the church leaning on her father's arm as the wedding march was played by Miss Aggie Longwell. Her going-away gown was navy blue broadcloth with hat to match. After the wedding luncheon the happy couple left on the 1.40 train for Toronto and other western points. Heartiest congratulations and good wishes are extended to the young couple by their many friends in Foxboro. They were the first couple married in the church and were presented with a beautiful bible and hymn book.

A PETERBORO POET SHOWS REASONS WHY THE TRENT CANAL TERMINUS SHOULD BE AT TRENTON.

The following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Peterboro Review by a poet of that city, John Bell, by name. He evidently trots in the same class as the late lamented James Gay, who formerly resided in Belleville:

Sir,—I have noticed in your paper that Belleville City Council advocates the Trenton route for the Trent Canal. I can prove by my poems and by my correspondence with Sir John A. Macdonald, and many others of authority, that I have taken a deep interest for more than twenty years in the Trent Valley Canal. Over twenty years ago I issued my book of poems of Peterboro. At that time our Legislature was busy discussing the ways and means to build our new Parliament buildings which are now in Toronto, and, as my book contained poems relating to public matters, I sent one to Sir John A. Macdonald, which he answered as follows: "Dear Sir, —I have read your poem book throughout with deep interest, and I hope it will have a wide circulation," also praising my loyalty, etc. His letters I hold as tokens that no money could buy.

Allow me to quote one verse from my poem, entitled "Dominion March":

And now, John A. Macdonald, there is something cost but small,
And that is for you to build the Trent Valley Canal;
We need this waterway to keep the railways at bay,
In this our great and good Dominion of Canada.

Also, three verses entitled "Ontario's Lament":

O Peterborough, I love thee, may thy future be grand,
Ontario's Legislature would be more safe in thy hand;
O Peterborough, may I say in a military point of view,
Ontario's Parliament buildings are due only to you.

Ontario, yes, Ontario, may I presume to advise,
To retain thy Parliament in Toronto
rather unwise;
Toronto being so exposed to the enemy's dreadful fire,
Ontario, yes, Ontario, far beyond all thy desire.

O Peterborough, I love thee, may I demand thy just claim,
Ontario's Parliament buildings are due to thy name;
Thy claim is the same that brought
Ottawa her fame,
O Peterborough, I love thee, thou art worthy the same.

The stand which I took over twenty years ago against Ontario's Parliament buildings being built in Toronto, which Ontario may in time regret, is the same which I take today against the outlet of our great Dominion Waterway at Port Hope, which is not as good from a military point of view as the outlet at Trenton. I hope the military point of view will not be ignored as it was in the case of our new Parliament building in Toronto. Why should we ignore the interests of our Dominion for that of Port Hope or Toronto. I hold no Government office I crave none; my votes always are polled in the interest of our great Dominion, and great Empire. And now, as the Liberals are in power at Ottawa, I hope they will not be guilty of the same blunder which their brother Liberals made by placing our Government buildings in Toronto. The inland route between Peterborough and Trenton would be worth millions of dollars to our Dominion in establishing manufacturing concerns along this part of the canal. In case of war, the harbor and route by Port Hope to Peterborough would be in much more danger and cost more to defend than those by the way of Peterboro inland to Trenton. We should endeavor to send out traffic by the way of Montreal rather than by the Erie Canal to N. Y. Hundreds of other patriotic reasons might be pointed out in favor of the Trenton outlet, of this great Waterway, which will prove, when completed, second only to our great Transcontinental Pacific Railway.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL

FEW PEOPLE KNOW HOW USEFUL IT IS IN PRESERVING HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics, in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says. "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in

*Played Thursday.

The Pea Canners Were Speedy.

Picton's husky bunch of juniors blew into town yesterday, and last night gave Sandy Burrows' team a strenuous run for their money. In fact, the youngsters from Prince Edward performed so well that it was anybody's game till the bell rang for time. The local team was not by any means in its best form, and did not play nearly so well as in the game with Port Hope. Every man on the Belleville forward line seemed to think his business was to play rover, and they held their positions about as well as a tramp holds a job. Just before the game began, Phillips, the Belleville goal-tender, was hit in the eye by the puck and carried off the ice. He recovered and played the match, his black eye looming up like a barn in a fog. The local team had nothing on the Pea Canners in point of speed, and in only one thing could the Bellevilles be said to excel—they beat the other fellows in checking back, and it was that saved the day. Anybody who picked the Picton kids for an easy proposition must have had their minds disabused before the game had been going long. The Bellevilles will have their work cut out to beat them in Picton, but then the locals, when in form, should play at least 25 per cent. better than last night. One very aggravating thing to the local team's supporters last night was the way many of them persisted in doing things which caused them to be ruled off. A player can be excused, perhaps, for tripping an opponent when he can save a goal by so doing. His term on the fence then is cheerfully served and his friends will pat him on the back for it, but there is no sense in indulging in measly little cross-checks, which, even if the referee doesn't see them, can do one's side little good and the other fellows little harm. Cut out such work, boys; play hard but play fair. It must not be supposed that the tricky little Pea Canners were blameless, either. For a bunch which hands out such a song and dance about "clean play" the Pictons ornamented the fence a whole lot last night. To hear the Picton management talk you'd think their players put up a regular Alphonse and Gaston game, but Referee Waghorne chased eleven of them to the boneyard last night, just the same. Manager Poulter should pull in his horns a bit about "rough play." As before stated, Mr. F. C. Waghorne, of Toronto, was on the job with the bell, and it must be confessed that no better or fairer referee has ever performed in this neck of the woods. He caught everything, seeming able to see offsides when his back was turned, and no youngster tried any dirty work and got away with it. The teams lined up this way when trouble began:

Belleville		Picton
	Goal
Phillips		Croft
	Point
Pepper		Tulley
	Cover
Connolly		Bedboro
	Rover
Spangenberg		Illsey
	Centre
Allen		Welsh
	Right wing
Burke		Collier
	Left wing
Weller		Reid

The visitors showed up strongly at first, and there was little to choose between the teams. Connolly, the Belleville cover, was playing the game of his life, and was easily the best man on the ice. Belleville scored, after a nice bit of passing, and repeated the trick later. Then Picton batted in their first from a scrimmage. They were quite keeping up their end with the local lads, and Phillips, Belleville's goal-tend, was as busy as a bee good part of the time. The first half ended 2—1 in our favor.

The second half opened, and play got a little rougher. For a few minutes "Wag" had a procession of lads heading for the timekeepers. At one time there were four lads on the fence. Belleville got the fourth goal on the best piece of work Weller did all night. The pace grew furious now. Spangenberg and Weller were both on the fence, and it was seven against five, but Connolly and Pepper put up such a sturdy defence that Picton could not score. They stuck manfully to their work, however, and finally batted in the fifth goal after a nice bit of combination play. Score 3—2 in Belleville's favor. The locals woke up and for a few minutes the Belleville forwards played their game, capturing the sixth goal. Score 4—2. With Allen on the fence for three minutes the Pea Canners got the next, and it was still anybody's match. Score 4—3. Just before the bell rang the locals got another, and the Pea Canners went down, fighting manfully, with the score 5—3 against them.

Caught in the Net.

The Belleville wings should not fly so far from their positions.

Spangenberg is a game and valuable little player.

Phillips, in goal, never played a better game.

The locals did a lot of useless shooting from a long way out, but then they were checked pretty closely.

Picton people should be proud of their team. They'll ... night, but that happens to the best of players.

"What did he put you off for?" said a timekeeper to a ruled-off player. "I don't know," said the ejected one; "somebody ran into me, and then Waghorne sent me off." Poor innocent kid!

Here is the list of ruled-off players: Belleville: Allen (3), Spangenberg (2), Burke, Connolly (2), Weller: 14. Picton: Reid (5), Bedboro, Welsh (2) Illsey, Collier, Tulley: 11.

The officials were: Timers, Picton, Mr. Morgan; Belleville, Mr. Burke. Goal umpires, Picton, G. O. Croft; Belleville, J. Truaisch.

CURLING.

Belleville Won An Exciting Match by a Close Score.

Lovers of "The Roarin' Game" in Belleville, and there are many, last night had the privilege of witnessing a match here, it being the first in a number of years. It proved to be not only interesting, but, towards the finish, rather exciting, as the score was close and the game was not decided until the last stone had been played. The match was in connection with the schedule of the Central Ontario Curling League, and the opposing rinks were from the neighboring town of Napanee. Owing to the fact that the visitors had, a few evenings previous, defeated the Kingston curlers, it was thought by many that Belleville would meet the same fate as the Limestone City players, but such, fortunately, proved not to be the case. In the early part of the game the visitors took a decided lead, the score, when the match was half completed, being 19 to 8 in their favor. The local players were, however, not discouraged, but played with greater vim and by carefully placing their stones secured end after end until the score was about a tie. Eighteen ends constituted the game, and when seventeen had been played Belleville was leading by 1 shot. At the last end, rink number 1, skipped by the veteran curler, Mr. Frank Dolan, scored 2 shots, whilst on rink number 2, Napanee scored the last shot Belleville thus won the match, to the delight of all Bellevillians present, by a score of 31 to 29. Considering the fact that the local players have had but little practice, the victory achieved by them was certainly creditable, and many congratulations were showered upon the winners by their friends.

At the conclusion of the match the visitors were entertained at the club room adjoining the rink.

WINTER TROTTING.

A Phony Story About Looking Glass.

Toronto Telegram: "This is the age of electricity," remarked the Old Sport this morning. "Now, Looking Glass won the free-for-all at Lindsay yesterday. That was another victory for the juice of the wire? How? Well, you know Looking Glass always could go fast enough to catch an occasional purse—if he wanted to. But the trouble was he didn't want to. And he couldn't be coaxed, either. Then he was connected with a little electric battery. It was a new sensation, and though he expressed his disapproval of it in all kinds of horse language, sometimes talking with all four feet at once, he couldn't shake it off. Then he got scared and tried to run away from it. He couldn't do that, either. So he concluded to give in. Now if he shows a slight inclination to have his own way, a little touch on the spot where the juice once entered his system makes him listen to all kinds of reason. In other words, when you want a race won all you have to do is to touch the button and Looking Glass will do the rest.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Toronto Star says: — "Harold Armstrong of last year's Marlboros, is putting up a great article of hockey for Smith's Falls this season. He and Harry Brown, at point, are playing the western game of carrying the puck right down the ice instead of lifting it.

Lou Dillon and six other famous trotting and pacing mares, owned by C. K. G. Billings, are to be bred to John A. McKerron, Harry Devereaux's renowned 2.04 1-2 trotter. The list includes; Lou Dillon, 1.58 1-4, Masette, 2.04 1-4; Lucile, 2.07; Louise Jefferson, 2.09 1-2; Fanny Foley, 2.11; Bugie, 2.12, Glad News, 2.14.

As there have been numerous requests from out of town, this list is being opened for the benefit of city patrons.

A CRISIS HAS ARRIVED

Grand Commander of the Maccabees on Fraternal Insurance.

Cold Business Methods Responsible For Fraternal Societies Failure—Only Field For a Fraternal Benefit Society Is to Mix Fraternity With Business—Only Upon Old-Line Methods Can Speculative Insurance Be Had.

Detroit, Jan. 20.—"A crisis has arrived in the affairs of fraternal organizations and it has been brought about by the societies being converted into quasi old line insurance companies. When the fraternal feeling disappears and cold business methods take its place, the fraternal benefit societies must go down, for fraternal societies, barring difference in expense of administration, cannot issue insurance at any less than the old-line companies. With the possibilities of bad selections, it is apt to be more. There is an end to everything, and we must not expect our societies to be perpetual. Only when a man can perpetuate himself can he expect to perpetuate an organization such as any of ours."

Uttered in characteristic style by Major N. S. Boynton of Port Huron, grand commander of the Knights of the Modern Maccabees, and one of the best-known fraternal insurance men in America, the above remarks dropped like a bombshell into the annual meeting of the Michigan Fraternal Congress, in session at the Hotel Cadillac.

He followed Rev. W. Warne Wilson of Detroit, prominently identified with the A.O.U.W. of Michigan, who had protested that there must be rates adequate to meet all contracts at the time specified, requiring a sum of money which at compound interest would meet the policy at the expiration.

"You must get the 2 plus 2 from the members in order to have the 4 to pay back to them, or else you will meet dissatisfaction and disorder," said Mr. Wilson.

"What we have to expect is fraternal co-operation, not 'fraternal insurance,'" maintained Major Boynton. "You want blood-letting, strangulation and chloroform. My method is milder. A mill specific would be more to my idea. The only field for a fraternal benefit society is to mix fraternity with business. If you get too much commercialism, the young men will go to the old line orders. If you get too much fraternalism, the confounded craft flops over. But we don't have the fraternalism we had 25 years ago and the orders are weaker for it.

"Fraternal insurance will carry a man over the time when he most needs insurance. If the organization which I have devoted years in helping to build up should go out of business tomorrow I should be satisfied with it for the good it has done. If you are going to give insurance for Tom, Dick or Harry to speculate upon, you have got to do it on the basis of the old-line companies."

FOUR WEEKS ON DESOLATE REEF

Wreck Off B. C. Coast in Which Seven Lives Were Lost.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 20.—Meagre details of the wreck of the ship King David, on Dec. 13, have been received. During a terrific gale the ship was driven ashore on the west coast of Vancouver Island, near Kootka. The mate and six of the crew were drowned.

The remainder were for four weeks marooned on a desolate reef, sustaining life by what food they were able to save from the wreck, and by fishing. The weather was severe and all suffered severely.

They were rescued by the coasting steamer Queen City and reached Clayoquet yesterday.

GREETINGS FOR BRITAIN.

Liberal-Labor Wins Regarded With Satisfaction in Russia.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 20.—There is little prospect of any disorder Monday next, though the revolutionists labor organizations and a vast mass of the Liberals of Russia are determined to honor the memory of the ill-starred followers of Father Capon by the cessation of work and pleasure on the anniversary of their death. "The anniversary of 'Red Sunday' will be observed as a day of mourning and not of strike," said a leading member of the revolutionist committee.

Another manifestation of the abandonment of open revolution was given at yesterday's session of the convention of the constitutional Democratic party, when a proposition to boycott the elections for the douma, though urged by some of the intransigeants, met with scant favor, and when hearty applause greeted those speakers who urged the fullest participation in the elections.

The convention resolved to send a greeting to the Liberal and Labor parties in Great Britain on the victory achieved by them, which the delegates looked on as the dawn of a new and better era for that country.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Only one witness, and that a volunteer, Mr. Samuel Scott, was examined at the civic investigation yesterday morning. He strengthened the alibi set up by Mr. Johnston at the last sitting on behalf of Dr. Lyne.

2,800 CONVERTS.

Results of the First Three Weeks of the Torrey-Alexander Mission in Toronto — Belief in Jesus.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—With the Torrey-Alexander meeting held last night there was marked practically the ending of the third week's campaign in Toronto. It is announced that thus far 2,800 cards of professing converts have been received by Dr. Torrey. This includes 755 children, who came forward at yesterday afternoon's special meeting and the other youthful converts of the previous meeting, making about 1,500 in all or more than half the total number. It includes also the number drawn to the front last night, about forty.

Speaking generally on the theme of faith in Jesus, Dr. Torrey said: "If anyone believed in Jesus he would believe in every one of His words. It might seem difficult or impossible, but true faith would inspire belief against the world. There were lots of people who were willing to accept the contentions of German scholars as against the words of Jesus.

"I am here to affirm that such men do not believe in the Lord Jesus," asserted Dr. Torrey.

The vital question of the day was whether to believe Jesus or the consensus of the opinion of German scholars. His word had stood the test of eighteen centuries. This could not be said of the other opinion.

He went on to define, as an essential duty of the Christian that he should say to the Master: "Use me as Thou wilt." He asked his hearers who among them carried out this conception.

"I do," spoke up someone to a query that the preacher had probably not expected to draw a response, but Dr. Torrey's quick rejoinder was "Thank God for that."

Belief would show itself in obedience, manifesting in personal habits, business, social and political life and everywhere else.

In the afternoon, when the special children's meeting was held, Massey Hall was packed at 3.15 p. m., and many children were turned away.

THE ORIGINAL PROGRAM.

Morocco Conference Will Adhere to That Pre-Arranged by Germany and France—Trade Menaced.

Algeciras, Jan. 20.—Yesterday being the Mohammedan Sunday, there was no session of the international conference, through deference for the Moroccan delegates. A Moorish villa served temporarily as a mosque, where the Moors redoubled their religious fervor, in praying for the preservation of their country.

In the meantime, the exchanges of views between the delegates of the powers have brought an agreement not to consider questions outside of the pre-arranged Franco-German program.

Baron Joostens, the Belgian Minister to Spain, who is one of the delegates to the Moroccan conference, presented to the other delegates last night a written proposal that expensive arms not intended for military use be allowed to enter Morocco, as otherwise the Belgian arms factories would suffer severe losses.

MORE COBALT LITIGATION.

Attorney-General Issues Writs Against White Silver Co.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—The White Silver Co. of Toronto are defendants in one of the suits of the Attorney-General to prevent the blanketing of claims in Cobalt. The writ issued yesterday includes as defendants Edward C. Hargrave, Bay City, Mich.; Frank N. Rutherford, Niagara Falls; Charles G. Williams, Montreal, all mining engineers.

The land the Ontario Government is seeking to recover is in two parcels, containing fifty acres each in Coleman Township. The leases were first granted to Williams and Rutherford in 1901. Later they passed into the hands of the company, of which Hargrave is a director. The Government claims to have secured information that the discovery was not genuine, and that the defendants knew that George Hanes, who is supposed to have made the discovery, did no such thing.

The Government asks for an injunction restraining the defendants from working the land, and for a cancellation of the lease and an accounting of the profits.

Rabbi Gordon, as a witness, said he had not given any Jewish divorces, but he had been present at one. Mr. Curry warned the rabbi for the benefit of all Hebrews in the city that no divorce could be given without a special act of Parliament. If Cohen and the woman live together after his release further prosecution will follow.

Argenine Ex-President Dead.

Buenos Ayres, Argentina, Jan. 20.—Gen. Bartolomio Mitre, former president of the Argentine Republic, died early yesterday. Gen. Mitre was 83 years old. He was President from 1867 to 1871, and general-in-chief of the army of Brazil, Argentina and Uruguay, in the three years' war with Paraguay. He gained considerable distinction also in literature, his work including a translation in Spanish of Dante's "Divine Comedy."

To Attend the Funeral.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—Hon. Jean Provost left yesterday for Halifax, where he will represent the Quebec Ministry at the landing of Hon. Mr. Prefontaine's remains. C. A. Dansereau of La Presse and Laurence A. Wilson very close friends of the late Minister, also left yesterday on the same sad mission.

APPEAL TO ROOSEVELT.

To Secure Peace For the Subjects of the Ottoman Empire.

Washington, Jan. 20.—Prominent European statesmen, educators, publicists and citizens whose fame is worldwide have joined in a petition to President Roosevelt to endeavor to bring about "the concert of the powers of Europe, with the view of securing for the subjects of the Ottoman Empire that condition of public peace and order of which the absence has already drawn down upon that Empire so many disasters, menacing it with the catastrophe of its total annihilation."

All Chicago Honored Him.

Chicago, Jan. 20.—Funeral services for Marshall Field were held yesterday at his late home on Prairie avenue, and in the First Presbyterian Church. Never before in the history of Chicago has such respect been paid to the memory of a private citizen as was shown yesterday. During the hours of the funeral services at the house and the church, all of the large retail establishments on State street were closed, the 1,000 enterprises operated by the members of the Chicago Commercial Club, and situated in all parts of the city, were closed; the board of trade held but a brief session, and upon every clubhouse and prominent office building in the business section of the city flags were displayed at half-mast.

WHAT SULPHUR DOES.

FOR THE HUMAN BODY IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small, chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flours of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patients and physicians alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Urging That $12,000 a Mile.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—The Provincial Government is again pressing upon the Government at Ottawa for a subsidy to the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway. At the last session of the Legislature a resolution was passed that the Federal Government should be asked to give $12,000 a mile toward the road, and the resolution was forwarded, but so far has not been productive of any reply. The Temiskaming Railway Commissioners, who were in Ottawa last week, pressed the matter on the Dominion Government. The request from the Ontario Government will be renewed soon if there is no reply to the latest one.

Attempt to Kill Governor Peabody.

Canyon City, Col., Jan. 20.—Former Governor James H. Peabody, his wife and their daughter were poisoned by food eaten at breakfast Thursday, and the daughter, Miss Cora Peabody, is in a critical condition. Mr. and Mrs. Peabody, although ill for several hours, recovered later. An air of mystery surrounds the affair. Enough was gleaned from friends of the family to show that there is a belief that an attempt was made to destroy the family by poison.

Goodman Committed.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Charles Goodman, whom the police have renamed "King of the Fences," was yesterday committed for trial by Magistrate Denison. Goodman was arraigned on the charge of receiving goods stolen from Moneypenny Bros. and J. & J Lugsdin. The amount of goods supposed to have been handled by Goodman is over $4,000. Further charges of receiving goods stolen from W. R. Brock & Co. and Debenham and Caldecott will also be laid.

Widow Takes Paris Green.

Brockville, Jan. 20.—Dr. Horton, coroner, was called to the village of Algonquin to investigate the circumstances of the death of Mrs. Bain, a widow of fifty years, who died from poisoning by paris green. The woman apprised a neighbor of her action Thursday afternoon, and when her son, with whom she lived, was called in, she protested against the attendance of a physician. To the doctor she acknowledged having taken paris green. She died three hours later,

IN THE "FLOWING TIDE"

All Liberals Elected on Friday But One Were Gains.

Joseph Devlin, Irish Nationalist, Captures the Unionist Stronghold of West Belfast—Candidates Tell the Why of It All In Their Opinion—Sir P. Magnus, Conservative, Redeems London University.

London, Jan. 20.—(C. A. P.)—Out of eight returns of Friday's voting received up to 2 o'clock, seven were Liberal gains. The other seat already held by a Liberal saw his majority increased from 817 to 2,810. Thus the counties, with even greater unanimity than the boroughs, are joining what has become known as the "flowing tide." In all, forty-six seats were decided, but the 8 o'clock closing hour, which prevails renders it impossible to get the returns until next day. The Liberal gains now aggregate 131, and the Labor gains 28, offset only by four Conservative gains.

The one bright spot for the Conservatives was the announcement early in the evening of the close of the poll for London University, where Sir P. Magnus, Conservative, was elected by 24 over Sir Michael Foster, who held the seat for the Liberal party by 863. Last night's returns record the fall of another former Minister in Sir Robert Finlay, former Attorney-General for England, who was defeated at Inverness by 558. He is the eleventh member of the Ministry to follow their leader, A. J. Balfour, to defeat. In fact, Arnold Forster occupies the splendid isolation of being the only member of the late Ministry as yet returned.

Monday will decide the fate of Austen Chamberlain, against whom a strong onslaught is being made in Worcestershire. He had a majority of 2,594, but has been ill during the most of the campaign.

One big turnover in yesterday's vote occurred in Middlesex, where a Conservative majority of 3,268 changed to a Liberal majority of 2,116. In Nottinghamshire, Sir Frederick Milner, who was distinguished for having written 11,000 letters to his constituents, was defeated by 531.

The Why of It All.

On the vexed question of what was the real cause of it all, interesting opinions have been expressed by candidates. Of sixty-four successful Liberal and Labor members, thirty-six affirm that free trade, or the "fears of food taxation," as they describe it, was the first cause; twenty-four others give the chief credit to the desire for social reform, and disgust with the late Government, or local conditions. Two say Chinese labor did it; one, education. They agree that all these factors were at work, but differ only as to their relative influence.

"Misrepresentation" and "Radical lies" are the most frequent explanations offered by seventy defeated Conservatives heard from. Thirty-five place the first blame on Labor or local conditions; twenty say that Chinese labor was the primary cause of their undoing; seven put the Education Act in the first place, while eight confess that tariff reform, or "misrepresentations about dear food," was the chief cause. Many declare they found tariff reform very popular. One riding is said to have been won because the candidate had eighty-two motor cars in his service.

The total votes polled thus far for Liberal and Labor candidates is 1,764,260, and for Conservatives, 1,427,837.

Liberals Elected.

The Liberals elected on Friday were all gains except in Leith Burgs.

Results: Liberals—Huntingdon, Howard Whitehead, 469; Leicestershire, Melton H. de R. Walker, 1,767; Denbigh, Wales, Clement Edwards, 1,273; Inverness, J. A. Bryce, 558; Leith Burgs, R. C. Munro-Ferguson, 2,810; Renfrewshire, Sir T. Glen Coats, 1,268; Middlesex, Enfield J. Branch, 2,116; Nottinghamshire, Bassetlaw, Frank Newness, 531.

Late returns of Thursday's voting: Pembroke, Wales, J. W. Phillips, Liberal, 1,049, gain; Monmouth, Lewis Haslam, Liberal, 592.

The following were elected without opposition: East Mayo, Dillon; North Kilkenny, J. Devlin; North Monaghan, Chare; Southwest Meath, Sullivan; South Armagh, McKillop; Queen's County, Meehan; Connemara, O'Malley; South Galway, Duffy; Tyrone, Narnighan; North Meath, White; Northwest Meath, Ginnell.

The most interesting feature of yesterday's election returns was the capture of West Belfast by an Irish Nationalist, Joseph Devlin. Belfast has been a Unionist stronghold from time immemorial, with the exception of a few years, when the seat now won by Mr. Devlin was held by Thomas Sexton.

Riots Follow at Belfast.

Mr. Devlin's victory at Belfast led to rather serious rioting, in which many houses were partially wrecked.

The Man to Cheer For.

Chamberlain yesterday morning received a thousand letters of congratulation in one delivery. Telegrams were delivered fifty at a time, many from the colonies.

Lineman's Injuries Fatal.

Hamilton, Jan. 20.—Joseph Webb, 106 West King street, a lineman, employed by the Cataract Power Co., who was injured yesterday morning, died during the afternoon. He was hurt while helping to lower a big electric light pole at the corner of McNab and Murray streets. He was holding a crotched stick under the pole. The stick broke, letting the pole fall on him.

Crew Placed Under Arrest.

Portland, Me., Jan. 20.—The crew of the British steamer Cora May, composed of Nova Scotia men, claiming that their agreement was being broken and that they were suffering hardships, was placed under restraint yesterday. A crew of forty-five sailors was picked up here yesterday and the Cora May sailed for Nova Scotia last evening.

New Asylum at Woodstock.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—The new asylum for epileptics at Woodstock was formally handed over to the Government through the Provincial Secretary by the contractors yesterday.

Only a Little Cold often Develops into Catarrh.

Colds are dangerous things to trifle with. They hang on and on, and people keep putting off curing them, until that stuffy feeling in the nose proclaims that catarrh has developed. Stop the cold while it is only a cold. Japanese Catarrh Cure instantly relieves "cold in the head." The balmy, aromatic pomade soothes and heals the inflamed surfaces, clears the air passages, and arrests the development of the trouble. The treatment is so pleasant and so simple, that Japanese Catarrh Cure holds first place in thousands of homes throughout the Dominion.

Teas Get Stale

and you can tell a stale tea the minute you taste it, it lacks the fragrance and the aroma that a fresh tea has.

You Won't Buy Stale Bread

Why buy stale tea? Tea that has been standing around some store for a couple of months or more--generally more. To sell fresh tea it is necessary to buy fresh tea and sell it quick, or it will go stale waiting to be sold. We buy all our tea direct from places of growth and new teas are constantly at our warehouse in Montreal where they are opened, blended, repacked and shipped weekly to our different stores. Consequently our teas are always fresh.

STROUDS

S. S. Dominion Is in Canada.

Battleship With Remains of Hon. Mr. Prefontaine Arrives.

After the Singing of a Libra on Board the Vessel, the Remains Were Received at Halifax by a Guard of Honor—Great Assembly of Civil and Military Dignitaries—Plans For the Funeral at Montreal.

Halifax, Jan. 22.—The battleship Dominion with the remains of Hon. Mr. Prefontaine will arrive in Halifax harbor to-day. A wireless message was received yesterday afternoon by Col. Gourdeau from the Marconi wireless station at Sable Island, 120 miles southwest of Halifax: "Battleship Dominion abeam Sable Island at 3 this afternoon. Be at Halifax sharp 9; very dense fog."

The start will be made from Halifax at 1 o'clock Monday afternoon to arrive at Montreal at 7.30 Tuesday evening. The body will lie in state in the Montreal City Hall from 7.30 o'clock Tuesday evening to 7 o'clock Wednesday evening. From that hour till 9 o'clock Thursday morning the doors of the City Hall will be closed, and none but the immediate family of the dead Minister will be admitted.

A Libra on the Dominion.

The Dominion will enter the harbor at 9 o'clock, and it will be 11.30 before she will be moored at the Imperial dockyards. The only religious services here will be the singing of a libra on board the battleship immediately before the body is landed. In this service, which will consume about ten minutes, Archbishop O'Brien will officiate.

The remains will be received by a guard of honor, and by an assemblage of military and civic dignitaries, including Gen. Sir Charles Parson, Governor Jones, Mayor MacIlreith, and the Federal Ministers, constituting the Tariff Commission, who are in Halifax. The body will leave the dockyards by the north gate, which is nearest to the Intercolonial station, and the gun carriage bearing the remains will be drawn by Jack Tars from the cruiser Canada, through streets lined by troops. From the mooring of the battleship at the dockyards till the funeral train starts not more than an hour and a half will elapse if the schedule is adhered to. The committee here has planned the order of procession at Montreal from the City Hall to St. James' Cathedral in Montreal, and thence to the cemetery. There will be many magnificent wreaths on the bier in Halifax.

An Armed Guard.

A guard of armed men from the cruiser Canada will go with the remains from Halifax to Montreal. Two men will constantly stand sentry in the mortuary car, relieving each other every hour.

The funeral train will consist of ten cars, an ordinary train generally comprising seven. It will be drawn by two locomotives. The interior of the mortuary car has been elaborately decorated in black and purple mourning. The coffin will stand in the interior on a raised platform. No exterior mourning is shown on the train for fear of fire, but no trouble or expense has been spared in the interior. The Intercolonial trains make regular runs from Halifax to Montreal in 27 hours, but this train is scheduled for 30 in order to make it sure that Montreal will be reached at 7 in the evening.

Crete's Olive Crop a Failure.

London, Jan. 22.—In a report on Crete for 1905, issued by the authorities of Caneas, Crete, it is stated that the total trade of the island amounted to $4,881,285, showing a decrease of $253,170 from that of the previous year. Of the above sum, $2,096,610 represents the value of the imports, indicating a decrease of $97,625. This decrease in the amount of the exports is entirely due to the failure of the olive crop, the value of the olives and olive oil exported being $316,920 less than in 1904.

Pilots Union Gets Charter.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 22.—The officers of the Lake Pilots' Association of the great lakes Saturday announced the receipt of a charter from the American Federation of Labor. The Lake Carriers' Association recently announced that they would not recognize the pilots as a union on signing contracts for next season. The mates, it is said, are now assured of the united support of other organizations in the event of trouble with the lake carriers.

Cat Tries to Eat Its Own Body.

London, Jan. 22.—A large cat belonging to Halifax was locked up accidentally in a car of sugar from that city two weeks ago and was only discovered when the car was opened Saturday morning. The cat had been without food or water during the whole of that time and had commenced to gnaw a part of its body. By kind treatment of the men in the car sheds, it is now progressing fairly well.

Lumber Burns.

Sundridge, Jan. 22.—Sieling's lumber mills, at Eagle Lake, were destroyed by fire Saturday night, and one hundred thousand feet of lumber consumed. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin. Loss is estimated at $6,000; partly covered by insurance.

Aged Woman Burns to Death.

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—Mrs. F. Maxwell of North Gower Village was burned to death about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. It is supposed that the curtains caught fire from a lamp. She leaves two sons.

New York, Jan. 22.—Among the passengers arriving on the Umbria yesterday was Capt. H. G. Reid of the British army, assigned to service in the Canadian troops.

Thames Rises.

London, Jan. 22.—The Thames rose six feet yesterday, and the pipe line road was covered. West London's new breakwater did excellent service.

There'll Be No Strike.

Scranton, Jan. 22.—It was officially announced Saturday that there would be no strike of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western firemen.

The First Cow Test.

Brockville, Jan. 22.—The first cow-testing association in the Province of Ontario was organized here Saturday afternoon, the members of which are composed of leading dairy farmers of the Brockville section. The matter of recording the performance of individual cows has been pushed for the past two seasons by the dairy branch of the Department of Agriculture in eight different centres, and is now being taken up in earnest by the farmers themselves.

Roth Jumped His Bail.

Montreal, Que., Jan. 22.—Max A. Roth, manager of the Canadian Finance Co., who was arrested some weeks ago on a charge of conspiracy in connection with alleged seizures on defaulting creditors, was to have come up on the second charge Saturday, but he has fled and is now beyond the jurisdiction of the Canadian courts. The amount of bail forfeited by Roth is $800.

OUR PRICES

We claim and guarantee our prices to be as low or lower, value considered than can be found anywhere in CANADA,

Fifty years of merchandising experience places us in a position to know what GOOD VALUES are and being in constant touch with the largest markets we enjoy inside prices.

Establishments in large cities as Toronto and Montreal have, owing to greater land values, higher rents, etc., expense bills proportionately many times larger than ours.

These expense bills must be paid and can only be met by being added to the retail prices.

Thus while we enjoy ideal buying advantages our lower ratio of expense enables us to mark our goods at a lower margin than is possible in the larger centres.

If you contemplate a purchase, investigate our values before sending out of the city.—It will save you money.

Getting Their Eyes Open.

The Liberals in one of the Ontario Western constituencies have been protesting against the extravagance of the Laurier Government, and asking for a halt. The increase in annual expenditure from $43,000,000, to nearly $90,000,000 in nine years, is creating a panic among the more thoughtful of the party.

The effect which this recklessness is having upon the party has caused the Toronto Globe to rush to the rescue and defence of the spendthrifts. Its defence, however, consists in declaring that the Opposition in Parliament has not in the past opposed the expenditure of these large sums of money. The records of Parliament, however, does not sustain or justify such a defence.

The Liberal whip for Ontario, Mr. George Grant, M.P. for North Ontario, has also gone into revolt, declaring in an interview with an Ottawa Journal reporter, "that unless something happens 18 of them will vote against the Government." Frankly, we have our doubts. We know from long experience of what material Grit M.P.'s are composed. It is just possible that Mr. Grant is sore over his claims not being recognized, or, as a contemporary says, "he was unduly excited." Be that as it may, he told the interviewer that Sir William Mulock's departure is regretted by many Liberals; that older members of the Ministry (Cartwright and Paterson) from Ontario ought to make way for younger men; that the Government is needlessly running up the expenses; that it is not listening to the demands of the farmers for tariff reduction; and that, as one of his party's whips for the province, he knows of 18 Liberal M. P.'s who are more or less dissatisfied.

That all this expresses the sentiments of the more thoughtful of the Liberal party is correct, and if expressed to the opportunist Premier, with a covert threat he will yield and throw overboard Sir Richard and Paterson, and by thus disposing of its ballast, hope to save the ship from being wrecked on the rocks of extravagance, land-sharks, boodling, and election corruption.

The next session will show how far our predictions are verified.

Statistics show that December, 1905, was the mildest since 1891, the average temperature for the month being scarcely one degree below freezing point. The mean temperature for December, 1901 and 1902 was 17 above or 15 below freezing point, which does not seem so bad until one remembers that at times the mercury was far below zero. It is likely that the saving of coal in Ontario amounts to $200,000 as compared with the previous year.

Rev. Dr. Torrey is preaching a literal hell in connection with the big revival in Toronto. The doctor does not mince matters and his burning words have drawn several replies through the newspapers, setting up the contention that there is no place of everlasting punishment, and that a man's existence is merely what he makes it. Dr. Torrey says that he never takes any notice of newspaper criticism and pays no attention to the remarks of such correspondents — which, perhaps, says the Peterboro Review, means that he will not run across them in this life and has but little fear of encountering his opponents in the next.

That local prohibition of liquor selling has now a large hold in Ontario is shown in the current issue of the Pioneer, which states 249 Ontario municipalities are now free from barrooms. These include one hundred municipalities where the abolition is the result of a vote, in 96 of them on local option and in four on the Dunkin Act. The remaining 139 are without licenses for various reasons, such as the failure of applicants to secure enough signatures, too high license fees, overwhelming temperance sentiment, or the refusal of the commissioners for various causes to grant licenses. Contests are now proceeding in five more municipalities, in each of which there was a large majority for the liquor act at the referendum vote in 1902. The temperance people are asked to keep up the agitation, as there is plenty of time to vote on local option to secure its going into effect for May 1st.

The Mercury does not seem to understand Canadian "free trade papers in Canada." The Star assisted the party in obtaining power upon a free trade cry, and supports a government which dare not fulfil its promises. It is power, not principle, that guides and controls them.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

WINNIPEG MAN GIVES ESTIMATE OF VALUE OF COMPANY'S LAND HOLDINGS.

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 20.—Mr. W. Madeley Crichton returned yesterday from Toronto. He was requested by a meeting of Winnipeg shareholders of the York County Loan Company to look into the affairs of that organization with a view to their interests and further information. He said: "I went over the real estate purchased on Roncesvalles avenue by the management. Large sums of money appear to have been expended by the management in laying out roads and streets through the property, and I am afraid that a large proportion of this expenditure will never bring in any return for the benefit of shareholders, inasmuch as in striking the levels of streets, and constructing them a great deal of unnecessary labor and money has been squandered.

"There seems to be no doubt about a certain percentage of land being immediately saleable, but the value of a very large part of it is exceedingly doubtful. It is decidedly not suitable for business establishments on account of its isolation and remoteness from other business centres; and it will hardly be suitable for residential purposes until a satisfactory street car service is put into operation through the property to give it connection with the city.

"It was impossible to ascertain when shareholders might expect the first dividend; and the shareholders can easily understand from the problematical nature of the company's affairs, at the present time, how impossible it is to say what will be the ultimate amount of the dividend paid

"With regard to rumored reorganization of the company, I do not look for anything in that direction. The whole working plan of the company is impracticable and besides it is now bound fast in the toils of liquidation, which would in itself render such a move impossible."

Toronto, Jan. 22. — A block of the York County Loan property will be placed on the market almost immediately. The announcement was made on Saturday by Mr. W. T. White, Manager of the National Trust Company. The statement is coincident with the decision of the Street Railway to extend their tracks along Roncesvalles avenue, where most of the property is situated.

A plan has been prepared, according to Mr. White, showing all the property of the York County Loan in that district. Some of this is already saleable and will be put on the market in the spring. As the lots are sold building operations will be got under way by the purchasers, and the result will be to enhance the value of the remaining property.

London, Jan. 21. — A rumor has been current that Sir Gilbert Parker was asked to give up Gravesend to Mr. Balfour. WHAT CAUSES SNORING.

When asleep people that snore breathe through the mouth instead of the nostrils, which are choked with catarrh. Just use "Catarrhozone" before retiring and you'll quickly cure the snoring habit. By destroying the cause of catarrh and healing the membranes Catarrhozone makes a complete cure in every case; it cleans the nostrils, stops the discharge and prevents dropping in the throat in a few minutes. Nothing so pleasant or certain to cure snoring, catarrh or colds as Catarrhozone—that's worth remembering.

NORTH HASTINGS NOTES

C.P.R. CHANGES — THE MADOC FAIR—MINING MATTERS.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

Madoc, Jan. 19th, 1906.

Some matters of more than local interest have transpired in this part of the county that will no doubt interest your readers generally. One particularly is the change of route of the C.P.R. Railway, as it now runs from Peterboro via Havelock, nearly seven miles south of Madoc Village, bearing still southerly via Tweed, swinging still southerly around the granite range of hills, via Arden, Sharbot Lake, to Perth. This route, it is well understood, was at the time forced on the C.P.R. by the occupation of the only line that could be got through the granite hills of the townships east of the County of Hastings. At the time it was understood that the G.T.R. had acquired this line to head off the C.P.R. into Ontario from Ottawa. It did not succeed, and, though considerable work was done by the G.T.R., it was finally dropped and bridges removed. There is a large staff of surveyors at work, laying out the new line in this neighborhood. The new line will start from Victoria Harbor instead of Owen Sound, near Midland Harbor, run in as direct a line as possible to Peterboro, from Peterboro via Madoc Village, through the pass where the laid out G.T. passes now, north of Tweed, three or four miles, and north of Arden, to Smith's Falls. It is estimated the new line from Georgian Bay to Montreal will be shortened 50 miles, and grades lowered that will be equal as many miles more. This is proposed as the main line from the lakes east. This is in keeping with several other improvements that the C.P.R. has in hand. Twenty years ago, when this part of road was building their stock was quoted in England at below 50—to-day 175! And money supply easy. This will be a great advantage to Madoc.

The district fair was duly organized here on Wednesday and styled the "Madoc District Agricultural Fair," including the Townships of Huntingdon, Madoc, Elzevir, Tudor, Wollaston, Limerick and Cashel. The agricultural fair held here last year was a great success, thanks to the activity of the directors and liberal grant from the Government. In some respects it was one of the best in Ontario, outside the large cities and towns. The exhibit of cheese comprised over 80—a larger number than anywhere else, outside Toronto. It was certainly the best in this county. Mr. A. F. Wood was President last year and strongly urged to continue this, but he declined on the ground that a younger man would better fill the position, as increased work would be required in order to meet the efforts necessary to increased success, but would assist heartily in any way he could. He was named as Honorary President. Dr. Harper, President, and Wm. J. Allen and Henry O'Hara Vice-Presidents. John R. Orr, Secretary; J. C. Dale, Treasurer; Archie Thompson, Patrick Marm, J. A. Caskey, Albert Glover, T. L. Nickle, W. T. Allen, Luther Cornell, T. B. Reynolds, Chris. Wright, Directors. A number of Honorary Directors were also named. Good grounds have been secured, and the grounds for exhibit and speeding purposes cannot be excelled. Cash on hand is between five and six hundred dollars and the promise of addition to the ordinary agricultural grant of a sum for prizes for collection of minerals and reports of mining district has been secured from the Mines Department.

It appears to be pretty well established that the want in North Hastings for the development of the mineral interests is capital. There are mines that have and are working away successfully, and no particular fuss made about it, but the sums expended in the individual cases are as compared to other mining districts, small. It is believed by many experienced persons in mining that the time is coming when this district will be one of great value, and in all cases where shafts are sunk to reasonable depths it has proved successful.

We have our full complement of Justices of the Peace announced. Law and order will now abound.

Yours truly,

NORTH HASTINGS.

EPWORTH LEAGUERS IN 11th ANNUAL CONVENTION

SUCCESSFUL MEETING HELD IN CANIFTON METHODIST CHURCH ON FRIDAY LAST.

The eleventh annual convention of the Belleville District Epworth League was held in Canifton Methodist Church on the afternoon and evening of Friday January 19th, and was most successful in stirring up interest in League work in the district.

The presence of "Dr. Wrinch," the missionary supported by the district in British Columbia, was a great incentive and inspiration to greater endeavor in League work. In the afternoon he spoke on the past, present and future of his hospital at Hazelton, which now occupies a property valued at $9,000; in the evening he spoke of some of the habits, manners and customs of the Indians amongst whom he has been laboring.

The Sunday School work was presented by a paper by Rev. Wm. Coombe, "Is the Sunday School doing the work it was intended to do?" and, by Rev. T. P. Steel, on "Evangelistic work in the Sunday School."

Mr. Plewman discussed the question, "The Relation of the League to the Church," and Prof. Doxsee gave a paper on, "How the Bible has come down to us."

The following resolutions were passed by the convention;

That 75c be the amount aimed at for each member of the Senior League to give per year, for the support of our missionary, and 25c for each member of the Junior League.

That the Executive be given instructions to prepare for a campaign to visit leagues in the district and that the committee having charge of this work be the President, the Secretary, Miss F. Adams, and Prof. Doxsee.

That the Executive be instructed to organize a party from Belleville district to attend the Summer School at 12 o'Clock Park next summer.

The following officers for the ensuing year were elected;

Honorary President—Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A.

President—Rev. H. W. Foley, M.A., B.D.

1st Vice-President—Miss Rush.

2nd Vice-President—Miss I. Martin.

3rd Vice-President—Rev. E. R. Doxsee, B.D.

4th Vice-President—Geo. F. Stewart.

Junior League—Miss F. Adams.

The annual meeting of the Royal Scarlet Chapter for District Orange Lodge No. 1, South Hastings, was held in the hall of L.O.L. No. 274, on Friday evening last, when a number of candidates were exalted, after which the following officers were elected for the current year, viz.:

Sir Knight Companion F. M. Clarke, Worshipful Companion in command.

Sir Knight Companion R. Powell, Excellent Companion.

Sir Knight Companion J. C. Ash, Companion Chaplain.

Sir Knight Companion W. C. Reid, Companion Scribe.

Sir Knight Companion Frank Jeffry, Companion Treasurer.

Sir Knight Companion R. Duffin, Sir Herald Knight at Arms.

Sir Knight Companion James Donaldson, Inward Herald.

Sir Knight Companion P. P. Pettitt, Outward Herald.

The reports of the officers for the past year showed an encouraging increase of membership and finances.

We should be careful about taking things as they come. Many a man has got into jail just that way.

CHANGING SENTIMENT.

Oliver Goldsmith's "Deserted Village."

Goldsmith in his "Deserted Village," spoke of a certain chapel where those who "went to scoff, remained to pray." So in life one often laughs at what he does not understand and later, when he does understand, his laugh turns to praise. There were some who doubted the merits of Newbro's "Herpicide," the scalp germicide and hair-dressing; but since they have tried it, they are now among its best friends and strongest endorsers. Herpicide kills the germ that eats the hair off at the root, and the hair then grows again. As a hair dressing it is incomparable, try it. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

LIFE IN PENANG.

The Misery and the Discomforts of the Rainy Season.

A resident of Penang thus describes the rainy season there: "Our rains have set in with all their attendant comforts and discomforts, and they make one feel something like Robinson Crusoe when he made up the list of his blessings and evils. The planters are all rejoicing and are putting out their seedlings and cuttings and generally doing all they should do. The bullocks are beginning to fill out those ugly hollows between their ribs and about their flanks, for the grass on their limited pastures is growing rich and rank, and these patient, half starved beasts profit by it. Our trees have all put on new coats of brilliant green, and the whole place wears a newly washed appearance, very comforting after the dusty, dry season in which our soup tastes gritty and a piece of bread and butter seems to have had a bit of sandpaper glued on the butter side. But even our rains have their disadvantages.

"When I come home, thoroughly wet and disgusted with everything, and go to bed immediately after dinner, the roof commences to leak, and I have to get out and shift the bed. I interview the landlord in the morning, and he tells me roofs can't be repaired in the rain and that in all probability as soon as the tiles swell the roof will become water tight of its own accord. That doesn't cure either my lumbago or rheumatism, and when I take my bath I discover we are on the Ader Itam water service and have to bathe in pea soup.

"I mention the fact to the municipal president over a stengah at the club, and he says, 'My dear boy, I'm on the same service and have been combing mud out of my hair for a week.' This doesn't make me feel any cleaner. The lizards on the ceiling are waxing fat from the insects which are driven into the house by the rain, and I notice that the soup at dinner seems to have more body in it from the same cause. This does not improve my temper."

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Almost every one has need of more sense than he has.

Ever notice that when your judgment gets in its work it is too late?

A great many men imagine they would be governor if the office really sought the man.

It is awfully hard to believe that the man who catches you stealing jam found you at it accidentally.

When a widower is having a love affair, he must wonder what idiot wrote, "The whole world loves a lover."

When people are too easy with you, be careful. They may be letting out enough rope for you to hang yourself with.

Occasionally a man marries to prove that he can do as he pleases and finds when that is done that he no longer can.

Black Hair Strongest.

Black hair is stronger than golden tresses and will sustain almost double the weight. Recently a German scientist has been experimenting and has found that it is possible to suspend a weight of four ounces by a single hair, provided the hair be black. Blond hair will give way at varying weights, dependent upon the exact tint. A yellow hair will scarce support two ounces, a brown will hold up three without breaking, while a very dark brown will sustain an additional half ounce.

The greater vitality of the black hair is declared to be the reason for the preponderance of blond bald heads, and, according to this experimenter, a person with jet black hair will still enjoy a full growth while the blond will have been bald for seven and a half years.

The Paddy Bird.

One of the best known of feathered creatures in India is the paddy bird. A traveler says of him: "The paddy bird is not afflicted with shyness. He is far too lazy to be disturbed by the approach of human beings. So confiding is he that the natives of India call him the blind heron. I once saw one of these birds standing motionless at the water's edge within ten feet of a grunting, perspiring washerman, who was dashing some clothes to pieces against a stone in a dirty duck pond. That is the way washing is done in India. Neither individual took the least notice of the other."

Trusts Versus Rings.

"What," queried the fair maid, "is the difference between a trust and a ring?"

"I'm afraid I cannot explain the difference in so many words," replied the young man in the case, "but if you'll put your trust in me I'll blow myself for the ring tomorrow."

And she put her trust in him.

PREACHERS' BLUNDERS.

Stories of Queer Mistakes Made in the Pulpit—Some Unconscious Humor —Bulls by Divines.

Each profession has its stock jokes, its stories innumerable, and to each belongs a flavor all its own. That the point of a jest lies not in the tongue of him who makes it, but in the ear that hears, is the testimony of the great dramatist. The doctor on his rounds and the judge upon the bench have both an audience ready and willing to accept as the highest wit the bon mots of the speakers, and there is no club gathering of men that does not acclaim one of its members as supreme in this respect, and are ready to yield due recognition of the gift.

There is, however, a vast amount of unconscious humor always floating about, and to those who perceive it the world is ever very amusing. It must be admitted that the blunders and jests clerical stand for some reason pre-eminent both in number and in mirth producing qualities. The reason, of course, is not far to seek, the very surroundings in which they occur the very upsetting of one's preconceived notions of reverence, all tend to cause a reaction in the ordinary mental equilibrium, and the simplest mistake or accident under such circumstances assumes the proportions of a huge comedy.

The divine who in drawing the attention of his congregation to a special communion service on the following Sunday informed them that "the Lord is with us in the forenoon and the bishop in the evening," is chronicle with praying for the children of his parish in these words: "And now, O Lord, bless the lambs of this fold, and make them meet for the kingdom of heaven." While a Scotch minister innocently, perhaps, hit the mark by telling his people, "Weel, friends, the kirk is urgently in need of siller, and as we have failed to get money honestly we will have to see what a bazaar can do for us."

There is a certain amount of excuse to be made for the young curate who, remarking that some people came to church for no better reason than to show off their best clothes, finished up as he glanced over his audience: "I am thankful to see, dear friends, that none of you have come here for that reason."

An Irish clergyman is credited with having concluded a powerful oration in this fashion: "My brethren, let not this world rob you of a peace which it can neither give nor take away." Which is coupled with the remark of a fellow country colleague who, in reasoning with a woman who had lost her faith in Christianity told her: "Well you will go to hell, you know, and I shall be very sorry, indeed, to see you there."

But what can be said of the negro student, who, conducting the prayers at one of the great missionary colleges, said: "Give us all pure hearts, give us all clean hearts, give us all sweet hearts," to which the entire congregation made response, "Amen."

The giving out of church notices has often proved a pitfall for the unwary. "During Lent," said a rector lately, "several preachers will preach on Wednesday evenings, but I will not give their names, as they will be all found hanging up in the porch."

It was a rector who gave out a hymn beginning, "Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve," before his sermon, and a curate who read in the lesson for the day: "He spake the words, and cathoppers came and grasspillars innumerable," but it was at a young woman's Bible class that, when asked what hymn should be sung at the close they all with one accord chose "Where is My Wandering Boy Tonight?"—Chambers' Journal.

The Tooth Offering.

In Scotland and many parts of England, and, indeed, throughout Europe, it is (or used to be) a popular custom when a tooth is extracted to put a pinch of salt on it and throw it into the fire. This is a survival of a remotely ancient practice, dating from the Gothic days of Sun worship, of which the fire is an emblem; and the action of burning a separated tooth was recognized as "a tooth offering." The alleged penalty for omission of the observance varied in different localities. In one it was said that the next tooth would be a "buck's" or a "dog's" tooth; or that the neglectful owner of the tooth would have to search for it after death in Hades, or that something else equally terrible would happen.

Apple Pips and Peelings.

Apples have long been invested by the superstitious with mystic influence, for the reason that they used to be regarded as the forbidden fruit of the Tree of Knowledge. An old Scottish belief is that if an apple-pip be shot from between thumb and finger its flight takes the direction from which the shooter's partner in life will come. Another, and more general, superstition is to peel an apple in one long unbroken strip of rind, which is then thrown over the left shoulder. If it falls unbroken to the ground the thrower's wedding will be soon, and if in falling it assumes the shape of an alphabetical letter, that letter will be the initial of the surname of the future spouse.

Polite As Ever.

A Frenchman who is staying at a hotel in Edinburgh asked at the cashier's desk for his bill, and was astonished to find it so large.

He felt that he had been plundered, but he paid the bill and asked to see the proprietor. The landlord came down in response to the call, beaming with smiles. The Frenchman rushed up to him, exclaiming:

"Ah, let me embrace you. Let me kees you!"

"But why do you want to embrace me, sir? I don't understand."

"Ah, saire, but look at this bill."

"Your bill? Yes, but what of it?"

"Vot of it? Why, it means zat I s'all nevaire, nevaire, see you again, saire."

The last European engagement in which archery was employed was the battle of Leipzic, in 1813, when the Russians brought into the field a regiment of Bashkir Tartars, whose only weapons were bows and arrows.

LORD LOVELL TO DATE.

Lord Lovell stood at his own front door,
Seeking the hole for the key;
His hat was wrecked and his trousers bore
A rent across either knee,
When down came the beauteous Lady Jane
In fair white draperie.

"Oh, where have you been, Lord Lovell?" she said.
"Oh, where have you been?" said she;
"I have not closed an eye in bed
And the clock has just struck three.
Who has been standing you on your head
In the ash-barrel, pardie?"

"I am not drunk, Lad' Shane," he said,
"And so late it cannot be;
The clock struck one as I entered—
I heard it two times or three.
It must be the salmon on which I fed
Has been too many for me."

"Go tell your tale, Lord Lovell," she said,
"To the maritime cavalree,
To your grandmother of the hoary head—
To any one but me:
The door is not used to be opened
With a cigarette for a key."

ADOPTS NUT DIET.

Lady Charles Beresford and Earl of Buchan Recent Converts.

Fletcherism and vegetarianism, one meaning the chewing of meat and the other the eschewing of it, have done much to cause the butcher to grumble, but the latest cult of the well to do whose digestion has been impaired by too many dinners is quite enough to drive the worthy purveyor of meat frantic with rage. Nuts now form the staple diet of many people who find that a French chef is superfluous. Even the festive vegetable and cutlet are considered inadequate for the purposes of the advanced diner. "Lord Charles Beresford," says Vanity Fair, "has for some time been a vegetarian, and now Lady Charles Beresford has adopted the same form of diet and lives principally on nuts. The Earl of Buchan and Mr. Neville Lytton are also among the recent recruits."

The nuts are served hot or cold and constitute the principal course at many a lordly mansion nowadays. "If the unemployed only knew," said a nutty convert to an Express reporter, "they could live luxuriously on two or three pence a day on the finest food in the world, and it could be varied so much that there would be no monotony of dishes."

A booklet by Sir W. E. Cooper entitled "Errors in Eating" gives some curious figures, purporting to show the difference in the nutriment contained in nuts as compared with flesh foods. Here are some nuts: Total nutriment in chestnuts, 89.3 per cent; walnuts, 88.2; filberts, 59.5; Brazil nuts, 94; cocoanuts, 50.5; pine kernels, 95; almonds, 87.8.

Flesh foods: Lean beef, 28 per cent; veal, 29; mutton, medium fat, 34.8; fat pork, 61; venison, 22.7; chicken, 32.31; white fish or sole, 23.3.

A Decaying Cathedral.

The pinnacles and cornices on the west front of Winchester Cathedral are in so dangerous a state, owing to decay, that the Dean and Chapter have decided to close the three western doors, leaving only the south door as a means of public entrance to the cathedral.

A few days ago large fragments of stone fell to the pavement just in front of the northwest door, and the prevalent frosts threaten seriously to increase the danger of pinnacles and cornices falling away.

It was only a month ago that Dr. Furneaux, the Dean of Winchester, issued an urgent appeal for £20,000 in order that the serious defects which had been discovered in the cathedral might be repaired.

Cracks a foot wide had been discovered in the foundations of the building, caused by the subsidence of the east end, while a progressive subsidence had also been going on in other portions of the fabric.

In that appeal the dean referred to the dilapidated condition of the spires and pinnacles of the west front, and it was intended that these should be covered in the general scheme of repair, but it was not expected that the danger in this part of the building would so soon become acute.

Named It at Once.

Some of Darwin's boy friends once plotted a surprise for the naturalist. They slew a centipede, glued on it a beetle's head, and also added to its body the wings of a butterfly and the long legs of a grasshopper. Then they put the new insect in a box and knocked at the great man's door. "We found this in the fields," they cried, with eager voices. "Do tell us what it can be." Darwin looked at the strange compound and then at the boys' innocent faces. "Did it hum when you caught it?" he asked. "Oh yes, sir," they answered, quickly, nudging one another. "It hummed like anything." "Then," said the philosopher, "it's a hum-bug."—London Tatler.

Rat Hunts In Favor In England.

Rat catching as a pastime in England is fast bounding into popularity, says The London Express. It is claimed by the many fresh devotees of this peculiar hobby that it provides excitement and sport, while, as its aim is the extinction of vermin, its usefulness is beyond question. H. F. Willoughby Greenhill, a stock broker, and a party of friends, with the assistance of four dogs, bagged ninety-two rats in one day recently and nearly as many during the preceding week. The sport is general all over the County of Surrey, and the services of those who follow the pastime are in requisition in all rat infested quarters.

Musical Tinkering.

In the far-back days when the "Cries of London" were more musical than they are now, the itinerant tinker's call for business used to be:

Work for the tinker, pray good wives,
We work like men of metal,
'Twere well if folk could mend their lives,
As we can mend a kettle.

Opinion of Sir Oliver Lodge, Who Disagrees With Wallace Theory.

Sir Oliver Lodge, the famous scientist, is the latest to attempt a reconciliation between science and religion He is delivering a series of lectures upon this subject, which are attracting considerable attention from scientific sources as well as from members of the Royal family. His idea is that where there is a strong personality it will persist continually, and after what is called death may rejoin the larger personality of which it is a part and from which it sprang for a life in this existence.

"I think," said Sir Oliver, indicating his body, "that this is a bit of matter here for seventy years or perhaps less, and then that it will rejoin its larger self. I shall then find I have a larger memory or a larger personality altogether. I am speculating, of course, but I am speculating with some reason for making these assertions, though it would take too long to explain what my grounds are."

Sir Oliver was asked whether in his opinion man existed only on this earth, and whether the sun and the stars and all the universe exist for the benefit of this globe, as was argued by Dr. Wallace.

Sir Oliver replied that Dr. Wallace liked to hold a minority view, and in this respect he certainly did hold the minority view. Wherever scientists probed into this planet they found life. "So I expect," he continued, "that if we probe into other parts of the universe we shall also find life of some kind. It depends upon what you mean by man. We might not find beings with noses and with five fingers on our hands like ourselves. It is improbable that in the universe we are the highest that exist, and it is therefore probable that others exist somewhere."

He continued that worlds might be unoccupied for long periods like our own globe. Besides mistakes might arise in other ways. Astronomers in Mars looking at our earth would probably say it was too wet to be inhabited; it was nearly all water.

THE PRINCE IN INDIA.

Reviews the Greatest "Peace" Army Ever Gathered There.

The Prince of Wales reviewed the greatest army that ever assembled in India at a time of peace at Rawal Pindi, in the Punjab, on Dec. 8th.

It was the concluding item of the great manoeuvres organized by Lord Kitchener, the Commander-in-Chief, and impressed deeply by its magnificence all who were privileged to see it.

British soldiers in scarlet and khaki contributed their color to the military mosaic in which Sikhs, Goorkhas, Punjaubis and Pathans also figured. Fifty-five thousand men in all marched past the prince at the saluting point, mobilized as if they were on a mission of war.

The Comander-in-Chief had prepared his manoeuvres with the completeness of detail for which he is famed. They represented a war game under war conditions, and were made to demonstrate war problems by putting real tests upon the men.

For four days the army had made exhausting marches and engaged in sham fighting. Some of the troops had covered over a hundred miles; others had slept out for two night. But they showed no trace of fatigue when they paraded. What struck one most was the splendid condition of the army.

The prince had spent the greater part of the previous four days on horseback, but he remained in the saddle for five hours at the review and enjoyed thoroughly the superb spectacle that had been prepared for him.

Wooden Shoes In England Again.

The crisis in the British boot and shoe industry has encouraged some enterprising manufacturers from Northern Europe to make a descent on the English market with that particular style of footgear which is known to the trade as the Baltic boot.

The advantage offered by this article is distinctly obvious just now, because it contains no leather. The sole is made of wood, and so far it resembles the Lancashire clog, but there all similarity ceases. The upper is of felt, and the Baltic boot is produced in a great variety of designs. It can be had in much the same style as an ordinary boot, or the felt upper can be continued to the knees, thus forming a wobbly imitation of the "tops" beloved by our grandfathers in the middle of the last century.

The Baltic boot has much to recommend it once you get used to its quaint shape. It is warm and comfortable, and as it keeps the feet dry in all weathers, it is to be preferred to the cheap alleged leather article produced in the East End, and made principally of brown paper. If leather continues to advance in price, as all the experts tell us it must, there is considerable scope for our boot manufacturers to turn their attention to the production of footwear made from wood and felt, rather than leather and its several substitutes. The production of felt footwear would be an easy thing with us, as we have both the skilled labor and the material.—London Daily News.

King James' Courage.

When the redoubtable first King James visited a coal-mine on the coast of Fife a little surprise which had been prepared for him did not prove quite so successful as had been anticipated. Having descended the shaft, he was conducted by an undersea passage to an islet, on which he had no sooner emerged than, finding himself on a tiny patch of land surrounded by the sea, he immediately jumped to the conclusion that he was the victim of a plot, and yelled, "Treason! treason!" with all his might, and kept up the clamor until, taken off in a boat, he found himself uninjured on the main land again.

"Honest Abe."

It is a significant fact that in a community where crime was virtually unknown, where plain, straightforward dealing was assumed as a matter of course, and credit was fearlessly asked and given, Lincoln won an enviable reputation for integrity and honor. In a moral atmosphere of this sort ordinary veracity and fairness attracted no particular attention. Honesty was not merely the best policy; it was the rule of life, and people were expected to be upright and just with one another, but when a clerk in a country store walked miles to deliver a few ounces of tea innocently withheld from a customer by an error in the scales, and when he made a long, hard trip in order to return a few cents accidentally overpaid him, he was talked about, and the fact is that "Honest Abe" was a tribute, not a nickname.—Frederick Trevor Hill in Century.

Early and provident fear is the mother of safety.—Burke.

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE UP-TO-DATE HOUSE.

(Chicago Tribune.)

When we called at William Spiffer's
there was music in the air,
And we complimented William on the talent he had there;
"It must be your wife or daughter who can execute so well
On the difficult piano. Did she learn abroad, pray tell?"
William Spiffer's eye grew winkful;
William Spiffer smole a smile;
"'Tis, he said, "a playerina, and it's playing all the while."

Soon we heard somebody singing, and her tones were clear and sweet,
"Excellent," we said to Spiffer, "such a voice cannot be beat.
Now, that must be Mrs. Spiffer, or perhaps your daughter, Bess—
As an operatic singer she would make a great success."
"'Tis nobody," Spiffer answered, "all that vocal music's from An electric voicerina — it can surely make things hum."

Then he showed us his collection of mechanical affairs—
"Here's a pocket trolleyola that I use for paying fares;
Here's a gilded readeretta that reads
all my books for me;
Here's a polished latherola, twice as salty as the sea;
This is my new cardoplayo, which plays poker with its wheels;
There's the dinerola table, which when running serves the meals."

As we left, the butlerola softly came and swung the door,
And a goodbyetta murmured, "Now be sure to come some more."
Then we wandered to the sidewalk past the hammockina swings,
Thinking of the wondrous progress made in labor-saving things.
At the gate we paused a moment
just to mop our puzzled brow,
And an iron doggyola wagged its tail and chirped "Bow-wow!"

HEROES AND COWARDS.

Fear Prevents Some Who Believe From Confessing Christ Before Man, Says Dr. Torrey.

Toronto, Jan. 22.—Despite the May day weather, which lent decided attractions to being outdoors, Dr. Torrey has not drawn a larger Toronto audience than the one that crowded Massey Hall yesterday afternoon. It was an occasion specially dedicated to the university students.

Dr. Torrey's address was general in its trend. He referred at times to university life, but made no attempt to enter into the special problems that confronted students there.

His subject was, "Heroes and Cowards." One of the discouraging signs of the times, he said, was the proportion of men and women who were lacking in courage to stand up for themselves in all times and places.

"The great need of Canada is heroic men and women with brains," said the speaker.

There were many college men and women who believed in their hearts but didn't make public confession through fear of social ostracism, of being cast out of their set of society.

"You know He died for you on the cross, but Jesus is not popular in your set," said Dr. Torrey.

It had been pointed out to him that confession of Christ might be made in the way in which one's life was lived, "but," objected the preacher, "who knows the source of your life, if you don't confess it with your lips?"

"If you were to tell what is in your hearts, it would shake the university and would shake Toronto," he declared a little later on.

The speaker said that in preparing to visit Edinburgh University, he had been warned that the students were a little peculiar, and that it wouldn't do to ask those converted to stand up.

"I came to the conclusion they were no more cowards than other people," said Dr. Torrey amid applause. At first they made a noise, but this "collapsed," and he had never had better response to his call. At Cambridge, like preliminary demur had been made to his practice, but he had induced 35 fine young men to respond and they were a power for good in the university.

One hundred and twenty men came forward at the evening meeting. Dr. Torrey gave the same address as in the afternoon.

"Come on men," said Dr. Torrey. "This is a great night for Toronto Thank God for so many men."

WEATHER WENT WRONG.

Sunday Was a Veritable May Day—Some Interesting Reports.

Toronto, Jan. 22.—Something went wrong at the weather works yesterday. Instead of the snow and the cold which it had been intended to bring along to end the continued January thaw, there came forth a day that the merry month of May need not have been ashamed of. It wasn't in Ontario alone, either, as reports show. In the middle Western and Eastern States the spring feeling was everywhere, and the mercury ran up in the 70's. It was, however, very cold in the Northwest provinces and in the Yukon. The development of a depression over the Gulf of Mexico, which is moving towards the lake region, kept the weather very mild from the lake region to the Maritime Provinces, accompanied by a few showers.

Minimum and maximum temperatures recorded at the observatory are: Dawson, 64 below—60 below; Atlin, 48 below—36 below; Victoria, 28—44; Calgary, 32 below—10 below; Battleford, 38 below—24 below; Qu'Appelle, 25 below—14 below; Winnipeg, 10 below—4 below; Port Arthur, 10—20; Toronto, 40—56; Ottawa, 24—48; Montreal, 36—44; Quebec, 18—36; Halifax, 10—44.

Looked For Gas Leak With Lamp.

London, Jan. 22.—The acetylene gas lighting tank at the rear of the St. John Methodist Church, five miles from this city, exploded last evening. W. R. Westlake's left arm was fractured, the muscles of his leg was torn and his face and hands badly burned. Charles Nethercott's hands were badly burned and a large part of his hair was singed off. They were looking for a leak with a lamp.

Seven Killed by Snowslide.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 22.—Seven were killed by a snowslide at the mining camp at Alta yesterday, according to a telephone message.

A REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

Odd Incident of the Reign of Terror In Paris.

During the reign of terror in Paris one of the most remarkable escapes was that of M. de Chateaubrun. He was sent to execution with twenty other prisoners, but, after the fifteenth head had fallen, the guillotine got out of order and a workman was sent for to repair it. The six remaining victims were left standing in front of the machines with their hands tied behind them. A French crowd is very curious, and the people kept pressing forward to see the man arranging the guillotine. By degrees M. de Chateaubrun, who was to the rear of his companions, found himself in the front line of the spectators, then in the second, and finally well behind those who had come to see his head cut off. Before the men could get the guillotine in working order night began to fall, and M. de Chateaubrun slipped away. When in the Champs Elysees he told a man that a wag had tied his hands and robbed him of his hat, and this simple individual set him free. A few days later M. de Chateaubrun escaped from France.

CANADIAN PRODUCE IN BRITAIN.

London, Jan. 20.—(C.A.P.)—The demand for Canadian cheese has been very slow, owing to large purchases made early in January. In consequence, it is not expected the demand will resume its ordinary character for a week or ten days. Youth Drowns at Millbrook.

Millbrook, Jan. 22.—About 7 o'clock last night during the high water caused by the heavy rain, while Fred and Charles McIvor were in a boat trying to reach some flume logs, the boat capsized in the heavy current below the mill, and Charles, a lad of 18, was drowned, despite the efforts of his brother, father and a large crowd to save him. Fred was with difficulty rescued. The body was recovered in about two hours at the flume of a mill about a quarter of a mile below. The deceased was a son of William McIvor of this place, and was in the employ of Needler's flour mills.

THE FOUNDERED GALLEON.

WEATHERBY CHESNEY, AND ALICK MUNRO.

COPYRIGHT 1899: BY THE AUTHORS.

were drawn mockingly back stern first. They dipped the oars again, and the rope grew tauter; they set their feet hard against the thwarts and thrust for all they were worth with their bodies lying nearly horizontal. But all that they appeared to achieve was to send their oar blades swirling uselessly through the water. The boat strained and tugged to leap on, but the warp held her back as a chain does a kenneled dog, and as for the Eureka she appeared to the toilers in the boat to be as stationary as a Bristol dock wall. They could not detect the slightest swirl round her bluff forefoot. Indeed, for anything they could tell to the contrary, she was slowly sagging astern.

But, though the inches gained were not apparent from the boat, for the long surf barriers on either hand offered no sufficiently striking landmarks from which to take a departure, still from the higher level of the ketch's deck the doctor could see that she was making progress, sure if slow, in the right direction, and from time to time he encouraged the hot, panting rowers with words to that effect.

The sun blazed overhead with true West Indian relentlessness, and, though there was a slight breeze blowing, it was not enough to temper the remorseless rays, and as the day went on the air seemed to grow hot, even to suffocation. At last they could stand it no longer.

"Spell-O!" bawled the captain, and threw down his oar.

Hans, who was on the forecastle, sent the kedge overboard again with a splash. The boat dropped back alongside, and her crew clambered out of her, panting and exhausted, and threw themselves down upon the warm deck planks, where they lay in a state of limp, trickling moisture till they had recovered a little.

"Miss Colepepper, may I have the pleasure of a walk with you ashore?"

"You seem pretty well used up," said the doctor, who had come up and was regarding them anxiously. "We must try another crew."

"No use," gasped the captain. "If you'd that lubber Cain and the Dutchman in the boat, they wouldn't get the warp taut. No; we'll go on again as before when we've got our winds back a bit."

Dr. Tring went aloft, peered keenly around him for awhile and returned.

"The channel soon widens," he reported. "Another half mile and we shall be out of the worst of this infernal bottle neck. I think we can get canvas on her again then and beat out."

This was encouraging. So they got back to their boat work again with fresh spirits and breath. Both were needed, for the wind presently freshened somewhat, raking the ketch dead on end. Their muscles were tired; the sun as he rose higher in the heavens beat down upon them even more heavily, and when at last the jib squeaked up and the Eureka's bow fell off to begin the beat the undergraduate for one, Oxford oarsman as he was, was feeling that if they had had to go on for 20 more strokes he must have collapsed.

They were not out of the wood even then, for the channel was still perilously narrow and the shoals were more often than not but a few feet from the counter when she went about. It was ticklish work, therefore, but they managed it without touching the ground once, although the margin of safety between the ketch's bottom and the sharp, jagged coral teeth must more than once have been a mere matter of a foot or two. But at last they opened out a good broad lagoon, and, running across to its farther boundary, rose the islet which they had gone to so much trouble to seek.

It was still a good five miles off, and the intervening navigation was by no means plain. But the ketch was in sheltered water now, for the outer line of reefs broke all the heavier seas, and the waves of these inside channels, not having so far to run, never attained any great height. In one way this was an added danger, for heavy surf is a warning easily understood; but, on the other hand, there was little chance now of piling the ketch up badly. She was creeping along at a very steady pace, and if she did chance to take the ground they could probably heave her off without damage or trouble.

But, for all that, there was no diminution of the caution with which she was navigated. Whether or no these are danger and damage to be feared from such a thing, your true sailor has the utmost horror of getting his craft unintentionally ashore. It is an indelible slur upon his seamanship, and no amount of after skill can wash out the stain.

It was work that required nerve too. A timid pilot might well have blanched at the creaming, bellowing surf which was often but a few fathoms away from his lee, and had Dr. Tring lost his head for a moment it might have meant death to every one on board. But the doctor's coolness never deserted him. He rolled and smoked his interminable cigarettes through all that exciting day and, as Captain Colepepper remarked, might have been skippering a brick barge on the Oxford canal for all the nervousness he showed. To which the doctor replied that he much regretted his constitutional defects, but that nerves, in the feminine sense of the word, had been forgotten when his other attributes were dealt out to him.

"It's a great nuisance," said he, laughingly. "I feel desperately slighted that I'm not at times jumpy and jerky like other people, and never experience cold thrills along the vertebræ, or sudden perspirations, or, in fact, any single one of the various luxuries which the possession of nerves gives to most people. But the fact remains, I am debarred from all these pleasures. You needn't laugh, Miss Colepepper. I assure you I do regret it, though for work like today's it perhaps has its compensations."

So the doctor continued to smoke quietly at his post amid all the dangers of that passage. During the whole afternoon they threaded their way through tortuous channels and narrow lagoons, and at last, just as night was beginning to close in, they opened out a deep bay, whose waters lapped the shore they had gone to such pains to seek.

Dr. Tring pointed to a small strip of pebbly beach, which shelved sharply down into the deep water.

"There, I should imagine, is the exact spot which the Mr. Piper who gave his name to the island probably chose for a careening dock," said he. "We can't do better than follow the excellent pirate's example, so far as to make use of the same place; eh, Colepepper? Over with the anchor, Hans!"

The heavy kedge was heaved over the side and fell with a splash into the blue water. About six fathoms of the cable ran out after it, and the Eureka swung round to the anchor.

"Miss Colepepper, may I have the pleasure of a walk with you ashore?" asked the doctor with a courtly bow. "An unknown island to explore! Who knows? Perhaps I shall be able to give you an adventure."

CHAPTER XIII.

NICK'S SNUGGERY.

Ask any sailorman what he feels like when he takes his first run ashore after being cooped up for long months within the narrow bounds of shipboard. Ask him if he feels it a luxury or not to have the firm ground under his feet again and to know that he can walk, if he should chance to want to, right ahead in a straight line for miles and never be pulled up by a ship's encircling bulwark. And provided he has not been long enough ashore for the sea hunger to have got into his blood again you will find that on such a theme the verlest tar soaked shell back can become a man of eloquence.

As soon as the Eureka had swung round to her kedge anchor the boat was hauled up to the gangway, and every one tumbled down into her.

The doctor was in the highest of spirits and kept up a three cornered fire of chaff with Dolly and Guthrie; Hans, laughing and jigging his feet about like a monkey, pointed to a patch of greenery that looked almost "Bafarian;" everybody, in fact, was in high glee except Cain Laversha, whose large, plain face expressed nothing but stolid indifference. Under four eager oars the boat sped rapidly over the smooth lagoon until Dolly, who had got the tiller, sang out, "Way enough!" and ran her skillfully up alongside a natural jetty of coral. And then out they all scrambled upon the hard ground and proceeded straightway to make fools of themselves, always—that is, with the exception of Cain Laversha.

He, worthy man, disembarked from this his first sea trip without demonstration and, going up to a patch of sea moss, slowly settled himself down thereon and directed his gaze heavily toward the toes of his boots. He did not look as if his mind was particularly busy, but perhaps we wrong him; perhaps he was thinking of "Zusan Pierce."

As for the rest of the Eureka's people, they shouted and larked about without ceasing until the land crabs scuttled away to their holes and the gray sea fowl flapped off to shelter with angry screams of protest.

Presently Guthrie, whose eyes never seemed to stray far away from Miss Colepepper, burst into a roar of laughter.

"Oh, Dolly!" he gasped, holding his sides weakly. "Don't!"

"Why, what am I doing that's so very funny?" asked the girl.

"You're rolling in your gait like a portly duck! And look at Dr. Tring! He's swaying like an inverted pendulum!"

"Am I?" said the doctor with an amused smile. "Well, I guess, young man, that if we'd got a pier glass for you to see yourself in you'd find that you are doing much the same yourself, only maybe a trifle worse. We've all got our sea roll on, you see. Now, if Cain there were to condescend to get up and walk I shouldn't be surprised to see him lurch over bodily at the first attempt."

With a quick sign to the others Dolly called to the farmer. He got up slowly, and then the doctor's prophecy was verified to the letter. The whole party broke out into shrieks of laughter, and even the subject of their mirth allowed a thin smile to flicker over his ham colored face. Then he sat down again stolidly and gave up the attempt at locomotion.

But Captain Colepepper was a bit of a martinet in his way, and as there was work to be done on the morrow he presently called all hands to return to the ketch. A good night's rest was sorely needed by every one after the heavy toil of the day, and the captain declared that there had been enough of skylarking for the present. In this he was right, for by the time they had got the Eureka snugged down and had had their supper all hands found themselves too deadly tired to move a limb unless under the impulse of necessity.

"What about an anchor watch, Colepepper?" inquired the doctor, as he leaned back from the table against the bunk behind him and produced tobacco box and cigarette papers.

"As regards weather," replied the captain, "I'd guarantee the ketch to ride snugly where she is till her plating tumbled to bits from sheer old age. You know best whether we're likely to be disturbed from shore."

"There are turtle on the island," said the doctor, "and I should say a tolerably large company of ghosts if its character hasn't been sadly maligned. But, barring these and land crabs and some sea gulls, I don't think there's any one else to guard against. With regard to the ghosts, Dolly there might like—hello, the young woman's gone to sleep, and she'll be nodding over into the mustard directly. Guthrie, just nudge Miss Colepepper's elbow slightly. Thanks. I say, Dolly, as your medical adviser, I should recommend bed or Guthrie will be earning a pair of gloves."

Dolly apparently was sufficiently aroused to understand this remark. She gave the undergraduate a sidelong glance and blushed a little, and then, demurely thanking the doctor for his hint, slipped away to the little stateroom beside the companion, where she had her quarters.

"She's earned her calk," observed her father.

"If ever girl did," assented Dr. Tring. "She's worked like a Briton today and never shown the white feather once, though she might well have done so, for we've come through some pretty tight places, I may remind you. Colepepper, you ought to be proud of your daughter. Here's her health!"

The two sipped their grog to the toast, and then the doctor, at Guthrie's request, became anecdotal on the subject of the island at which they had arrived.

They had come here as to the one safest place in the whole of these seas for their purpose, but they were in the event not fated to go away without passing through a great peril, in which their enterprise itself would come within a little of being wrecked, and, in the case of some at least of the party, even life would have to be fought for against foes whom they as yet little expected to meet.

Piper's cay was a long narrow islet of horseshoe shape, nowhere attaining a height of more than 50 or 60 feet above sea level. Its surface was green for the most part, covered with coarse grass, sea moss or scrub, and here and there bearing a few wind distorted coconut trees. In the windings of its shore there were many caves, some shallow and others stretching for unknown distances in toward the centers of the island. In one of these it was that Cain Laversha met with an adventure. But of that more later.

Into most of these caves the sea washed freely. But some of them were dry, and if their echoes had been phonographic the tales which they could tell would surely be tales of fascination, and at any rate they would not lack the weird thrill which horror gives to stories of bloodshed and treachery.

Owing to the intricacy of the channel which led up to the snug anchorage before the cay, the old sea robbers of the days gone by knew that the heavier government craft could no more reach them there than they could have navigated the gorge to Caracas or the swamps which led to Panama. Boats might have worked their way in, certainly, but a boat expedition is a perilous thing, and a man-of-war captain would not have sent his boats to attack a heavily armed schooner or brig, which could warp her broadside in any direction and blow them out of the water from whichever point they came.

So, in all the history of iniquity—in which massive tome, if it ever came to be written, Piper's cay would occupy many pages—there is no record of invasion by vessels or men who represented the laws of nations. The very existence of the place was little known to the powers of order in the days of its greatest activity, for charts were, in those rough and ready times, far from being the complete maps of the seas that they are now, and the buccaneer was not a person to enlighten the hydrographer's ignorance gratuitously. The longer the cays remained unknown, the longer would be the sea robber's reign. It was only when his lairs were discovered that it became possible to chase him off the seas.

"The deeds of the old time sea rover," remarked the doctor, "were deeds of darkness, of which small authentic record has come down to us. We know where and how he found his fresh beef; we are shown the spots where he careened his broad beamed schooner to clear away the long trailing plants which clung to her and deadened her speed; we have legends of chases, of furious battles, of barbarous executions where a pivoted grating was rigged out from a gangway and captives were cajoled into marching along it till their weight made it tip them overboard to the sharks; but of the men themselves no clear picture has survived. They lived on the sea deserts in red obscurity. If they grew rich and returned to civilization, they dived into the crowd, and no man knew them."

"Colepepper, you ought to be proud of your daughter."

Who the original Piper was the doctor could not tell, but he opined that it was reasonable to judge him a man of some discernment, for the small islet named after him was an ideal place for the purpose for which he no doubt used it.

On the sea side it was effectually defended by the reef fortresses against which old Neptune's artillery was always cannonading, and from any attack of heavy drafted vessels, manned by king's men who did not know the channel, it was absolutely safe. But for the pirate vessels themselves, when once they had been brought by their pilots through the mazes of the reefs, the anchorage inside was perfect.

And there were many other obvious advantages in the place, too; a sloping beach for heaving down upon, a spring of good water where the casks could be filled, dry caves where bulky plunder could be stowed and sea washed caves in whose hidden recesses specie could be snugly cached until the time came for a return to Europe and respectability, for, though the cult of treasure hunters say otherwise, the probability is that these ill got gains were not accumulated only to be forgotten.

But, though Dr. Tring knew of the existence of all these various charms in the island, he did not remember the exact positions where they were to be found, and of the whereabouts of the spring, which the state of their water casks rendered the most important treasure of all to the crew of the Eureka he had no recollection. And so on the morning after their arrival Captain Colepepper announced that he would give Dolly and the undergraduate a roving commission to explore, while the others busied themselves in repairing the breaches which the tornado had made in their craft.

The young man made no secret of the satisfaction with which he heard this decision, but Dolly did not seem to be quite so sure of the advantages of the plan. She remembered the episode which had occurred during the storm of a day or two ago, and as she had not yet made up her mind upon the problem which that incident had set her to solve she was doubtful about the wisdom of spending a whole day just now in Guthrie's company.

"I wonder what we shall find," said the young man to her as they stood on the deck together after breakfast. "I'm prepared for anything, so long as it's romantic. Piper's cay looks as if it ought to bristle with romance, doesn't it?"

The girl kept silence for a moment, and then, without raising her eyes, answered quietly, "I don't think I shall go."

"Dolly!" cried her companion in astonishment. "Why ever not?"

"Well, you see," began Miss Colepepper hesitatingly, "there are—reasons!"

"Do you mean you'd rather not spend a whole day with me?" he asked bluntly.

"No, Alan; not that. But"—

"Well, what?" persisted Guthrie, as she did not seem to be inclined to finish her sentence.

"Oh, can't you see? I mean of course that we were silly the other night in the storm and"—

"You think I might be tempted to be what you call silly again?"

The girl nodded and blushed.

"And if I were you would be angry?"

"Yes, Alan, I think I should. You see, we're both very young."

"Umph! I'm 21 and you're 17—both old enough to know our own minds, I should think!"

"Now, Alan, you know we're not! At least other people would say we're not," she corrected herself. "And in any case I don't choose that there should be any more of that sort of thing just now."

"All right, Dolly; we'll let it stand at that—for the present," said Guthrie. And then with some hesitation he added: "I wouldn't have said anything the other night if I hadn't thought we were in really great danger and that I mightn't ever have another chance of—of telling you—well, of telling you that I loved you, you know! You believe that, Dolly, don't you?"

"Yes," said the girl. "You said so at the time, and, of course, I believed you."

"Then you'll trust yourself with me today?"

"Yes."

"Thank you, Dolly," said the young man, and then he added earnestly: "I'll stick to our bargain for the present, of course; but, mind, I don't mean to give you up for all that. When we've got all the Spanish dollars on board from the Santa Catarina, I shall speak to Captain Colepepper if you will let me."

"When we have got the Spanish dollars on board!" said the girl mischievously. "Very well; I'll agree to that. We may both of us be a good deal older when that day comes."

Guthrie laughed. "I've a better belief in our luck than that, Dolly," said he. "Anyway it's a bargain. And now we'd better start, hadn't we?"

They tumbled into the boat, which had been left lying in the water alongside since the night before. Tom Jelly rowed them ashore, and then returned with the boat to the Eureka.

"Where do you want to go?" asked Guthrie.

"Not having the guidebook of Piper's cay, can't say precisely," laughed the girl. "Where would you suggest?"

"Let's walk straight ahead and see where it leads us."

"The bush up yonder is terribly thick. I shall be torn to ribbons!"

"Jove, yes, so you would. I might perhaps manage to clear it a bit for you if I went first. But there's no need for us to go that way at all unless you like. We may just as well keep along the shore. If we go on long enough, we shall come round again at the other side, and if we get tired of it, we can always take a bee line across country for the Eureka. What d'you say to that?"

"All right, that'll do nicely. Besides, we shall stand the best chance that way of finding the place where the fresh water runs into the sea, and then we can track it up to the spring. Let's set off at once before it gets hotter."

They started along the white, blinding beach. The little wavelets swished and whispered at their feet, throwing up and drawing back again their handfuls of coral shingle in a rhythm of never ceasing effort. The sand flies, which the doctor had predicted, were there in swarms, though his estimate of their size proved to be, fortunately, a little bit exaggerated. There were mosquitoes, too, booming away like a regiment of drummers, but the larger insects were quieter and so more insidious in their attack, and, as in addition to all this, the sun's heat was like the draft from a blast furnace, the walk was not quite the picnic ramble which they had expected it to be.

The foreshore was, for the most part, wide enough to form a pathway, but occasionally some outcrop of rock rose across it and ran sheer down into the river. These barriers necessitated scrambles which, under such a sun as now blazed down upon them, proved somewhat trying. Indeed, as the obstacles increased in frequency, the two explorers began to consider that the shore route was not worth following after all. So they decided that if after crossing one more rocky wall the path did not seem to improve they would strike inland at once and try their luck among the palm scrub and scattered cocoanut trees.

"Look here, Dolly," said Guthrie, as they reached the foot of a new obstruction, a projecting ridge of black, shiny rock, from whose baked surface the heat rose visibly through the air in shimmering, tremulous waves. "I tell you that if the road's no better farther on there's no need for you to claw up this beastly wall. I'll go first and prospect and let you know."

Dolly nodded and sat down with a sigh of relief upon a bowlder. The young man set off aloft, using hands and knees indiscriminately and sometimes pretty hard put to it to get along with both. After five minutes' climbing, he gained the sharp, overhanging ridge and straddled it. He was glad enough to sit there for a space, to regain his wind, for the ascent had been pretty stiff work.

From his vantage point he could trace the sea brink ahead of them. It lapped the edge of honeycombed cliffs as far round as he could follow it. There was no more foreshore. The land ended abruptly in a chaos of tumbled rocks.

"No use going on, Dolly," he sang out, "and no use your scrambling up here. Walk up the rise to that palm tree with the twisted stem, and I'll climb along the ridge and join you there."

For another hour they scrambled slowly along, and the sun grew hotter and hotter. They were making for a peculiarly shaped rock, which showed out boldly at what seemed to be one of the highest points of the island, for they hoped that from it they might perhaps be able to mark down the position of the spring by noting the brighter green of the herbage which would probably surround it, or even, it might be, by catching the glint of the sun on its surface.

But they were not fated to reach that objective without a halt and as it turned out a very long halt.

They came upon a cave suddenly—so suddenly, indeed, that they were almost startled at seeing it; for the mouth did not show till they were straight in front of it, and as a spine of rock rose up directly before it the cave could not be seen at all from the water. Nature, its sole architect, had hidden it with a cunning which seemed almost intentional.

It was evidently one of the caves for which Dr. Tring had said that Piper's cay was celebrated, and the explorers' interest—"archæological interest" Dolly called it—was promptly relighted. Visions of hidden treasure, guarded perhaps by a grim skeleton sentinel, occurred to them both as they pressed forward.

"Come along, Alan!" cried Dolly eagerly. "It's most deliciously exciting!" And she waved him aside with her hand and led the way into the cave.

The entrance was wedge shaped and narrow at first. But the sides very soon began to retreat from one another, though the roof still remained low. Stalactites had evidently hung from above at one time, for the stumps of them still remained, but they had been broken off and carted outside; perhaps, suggested Dolly, because they obstructed the treasure hiders' road. Underfoot the rocky path, though not altogether smooth, was still passable, and the pair got along without much trouble.

The light from the entrance behind grew dimmer as they advanced. But here and there were gaps in the stone ceiling, shafts reaching to the open air, whose upper edges they could see were garlanded with a thick growth of ferns and creepers. Through these shafts there came a gentle twilight glow, and as the rock walls of the cave were almost white the reflection from them gave light enough for the explorers to see the grotto's outlines.

There were plenty of evidences of human agency. Every here and there a footmark could be seen in some dried, muddy patch of the floor, and it was an eerie thought that the foot which had made it might well have been dead a century or even more. And everywhere there were the broken stalactites, which of a surety could not have tumbled down and then marched off by themselves from the floor on which they had fallen.

But of any more valuable relics there was not a trace. There were none of those kegs and barrels, those iron bound chests and piles of rusty armor, those lavish heaps of plunder with which, by all the canons of romance, such a place ought to have been stored. And, as Guthrie remarked, the cave was bone dry and had long been undisturbed, and therefore they were clearly within their rights in expecting to find such relics.

The persistent thought that perhaps the pirates had themselves carried off all they had left there or that some other folk had since rifled the hoard was steadfastly put away. "Whoever heard of people coming out of so romantic a situation as this empty handed?" demanded Dolly, when her companion suggested that their case had affinities with that of the late Mrs. Hubbard.

So on they went, penetrating farther and farther under the surface of the island, and always lighted by the shafts which at intervals gapped the roof above.

At last, after wandering fully three-quarters of a mile from the entrance, they came upon an obstruction which, though it barred their farther progress, sent up the hopes of a find almost to fever heat.

It was a door of hard wood, heavily clamped with corroded metal, set in doorposts that were cleated and mortised into the sides of the cave itself.

The nearest light shaft was 30 yards astern, and so the door was in deep shadow. It was with their hands, therefore, that the eager searchers examined it chiefly, fumbling about it and giving every square inch of it the most curious attention. There was no latch. The door did possess a keyhole, though, surrounded by a heavy plate of iron, which shed wafers of rust when it was touched, but there was no key. They did not expect, of course, that there would be a key. Indeed they would probably have been disappointed if there had been a key, for an unlocked door usually guards nothing. Still, without some means of opening the lock, whether by a magic "Open sesame!" or by a commonplace iron key, the way through that massive portal was not apparent.

Guthrie lit a match. The flame spluttered and went out. He lit another and guarding it from the drafts in the hollow of his hands he held it out toward the door.

"Writing!" cried Miss Colepepper. "But what does it mean?"

Scrawled upon the heavy woodwork was the following legend in five inch letters of tar:

"Writing!" cried Miss Colepepper.

"Nick Colepepper Fecit Anno Domini 1587, Michaelmas Day."

The undergraduate gave a low whistle of astonishment. "It's your piratical ancestor's private sanctum, I fancy, Miss Colepepper!" he opined.

CHAPTER XIV.

TRAPPED.

The match which Guthrie was holding went out, and the gloom closed suddenly round them again. Dolly gave a little gasp.

"Frightened?" asked Guthrie, and he linked his arm in hers.

"No," she replied, but shivered none the less. "I'm not frightened. I was a little startled at reading the name of Colepepper on the door; that's all."

"It was enough to startle any one," said the undergraduate.

Their eyes were beginning to accustom themselves once more to the gloom, which the suddenly extinguished match had for the time exaggerated into darkness. They could see one another's face again.

Dolly drew her arm away gently.

"Yes," said she; "one doesn't expect to be confronted with one's own name in a place like this. Of course I had heard of Nicholas the First, as the doctor calls him, before, and the finding of the Santa Catarina showed that he was not quite a legendary person. But, for all that, I don't think that I had altogether had it brought home to me that he must once actually have existed in the flesh till you scraped that match a minute ago, and then you must own that a notice like that tarry scroll was rather a rude reminder of my questionable ancestry. It isn't so forcibly impressed upon one every day that one has had a pirate in the family, and a pirate, too, who seems to have been in full and active practice in this very island."

She paused.

"He's been dead a long time, though," remarked Guthrie apologetically.

"Yes, I suppose that does make a difference," she agreed. "I hope it does, anyway."

"It does," asserted the other with judicial finality.

"I wonder who Piper was," the girl went on. "Perhaps he's a relation too."

Guthrie laughed. "A crowd of ancestors is a great thing, Dolly," said he, "but I shouldn't claim too many of these all at once, if I were you. Besides, as Piper stood godfather to the cay, perhaps he was here before Nicholas the First. Anyway, we can't settle the question standing out here. What d'you say to going inside to see if he has left a will among other things? You may certainly consider yourself the old gentleman's heiress if he has stored any property here."

"Oh, perhaps he has! Mr. Guthrie, will you kindly act as executor?"

"Most certainly, madam," said the young man with a bow. "Please stand on one side and leave the coast clear for the engine of the law!"

He went back a couple of steps, and then charged the door with all his weight.

It remained exactly as it was. The only tangible result of the experiment was that the experimenter's shoulder came into violent contact with a projecting iron stud.

"Have you hurt yourself?" inquired Dolly anxiously.

"Only a trifle. But I haven't opened the door."

"Give me the matches."

He handed the box across, and the girl lit seven matches in slow succession and made a careful scrutiny of every part of the barricade with both eyes and knuckles.

"The door is not really very strong," she said at last, "and even in its early days a crowbar would have made short work of it."

"But we haven't the crowbar."

"No, and so it is strong enough to stop us now, for it's still in good preservation, and so's the post which holds the lock mortise. But the outside of the frame—here, between the hinges—has got dry rot. Look!" And she split off a crumbling splinter to prove her words.

"All right, Dolly!" said the undergraduate. "I see the trick. Stand out there, on one side, away from the dust, and I'll soon have a hole through."

The work did not, however, prove so easy as it at first sight promised, for there were veins of the wood still sound as ever they had been, but the dry rot had worked all round these sound portions, and after 20 minutes of hard finger work the young man at last got a hole clean through to the other side. To enlarge that was an easier task, and in a very few minutes a space gaped widely enough to admit of their bodies squeezing through.

"What's on the other side?" asked Dolly.

The undergraduate lit a match and examined the country ahead of them.

"A boarded passage," he reported, "leading to another door."

"Open?"

To be continued.

DEAF TAKE POOR PICTURES.

Their Infirmity Gives Them a Hard, Fixed Expression.

"That isn't a good picture," said a photographer, with an air of apology. "The man was deaf."

"How can that infirmity affect the picture?" asked a visitor.

"It gives his face a tense, strained look," said the photographer. "All deaf persons have that expression when placed before a camera. They sit with their heads tilted forward and eyebrows uplifted, as if waiting for the command to look pleasant. Generally, I suppose, that is what they are waiting for. But even after I have given the order to brace their muscles refuse to relax.

"'What's that?' says the deaf man when he sees my lips move.

"'Look pleasant!' I shout again.

"'Oh!' says he.

"He takes his hand from behind his ear and tries to assume a beaming countenance, but he only compromises on a fixed glare. None of the devices known to the photographic trade can dispel that. In fact, the more 'business' I introduce to charm my subject into a joyful state the more rigid his facial muscles become. He is listening always for further instructions. Whether they come or not, the look of expectancy is there. For that reason the deaf are the hardest people in the world to photograph. If an artist's reputation depended upon the pictures he makes of them he would soon be obliged to go out of business."—Exchange.

THE CAMPANERO.

Sweet and Bell-like is the Toll of This Pretty White Bird.

This bird, called dara by the South American Indians and bellbird by the English, is about the size of a jay. His plumage is white as snow. On his forehead rises a spiral tube nearly three inches long. It is jet black, dotted all over with small white feathers. It has a communication with the palate and when filled with air looks like a spire. When empty it becomes pendulous. His note is loud and clear like the sound of a bell and may be heard at the distance of three miles. In the midst of these extensive wilds, generally on the dry top of an aged mora almost out of gun reach, you will see the campanero. No sound or song from any of the winged inhabitants of the forest, not even the clearly pronounced "whippoorwill" from the goatsucker, causes such astonishment as the toll of campanero. You hear a toll and then a pause again, and then a toll and again a pause. Then he is silent for six or eight minutes, and then another toll, and so on. Actaeon would stop in midchase, Maria would defer her evening song and Orpheus himself would drop his lute to listen to him, so sweet, so novel and romantic is the toll of the pretty snow white campanero.—Waterton's "Wanderings In South America."

Arrow Throwing.

An old English sport that still survives from the days when the bow and arrow were in use is that of arrow throwing, and in parts of Yorkshire it is still made one of the features of athletic meets. The arrows are straight shafts three feet long, without either barb or feather, and are thrown by the aid of a bit of string wrapped about the thrower's hand and about the butt of the arrow. A skillful man can send the arrow 150 yards, though it requires some experience to cause the arrow to leave the string without tangling. Once the knack is acquired the sport is said to be more fascinating than putting the shot or throwing the hammer.

TRIBUTE TO TEACHERS

NOBLE WORK OF THOSE WHO MOLD THE CAREERS OF YOUTH.

MEN AND WOMEN OF FUTURE

Powerful Sermon by Rev. Dr. Talmage From the Text, "He That Teacheth on Teaching"—"Every Man to His Trade," Recognized by Paul Nearly 2,000 Years Ago—Men's Gifts Differ—Choose Work Suited to Yours.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 21.—In this sermon the preacher pays tribute to the work of those who are molding the character and shaping the career of the men and women of the future, to the teachers of America, the text chosen being Romans xii, 7, "He that teacheth on teaching."

The adage, "Every man to his trade," is not a child of the nineteenth or twentieth century. Its cradle was rocked by the murmuring waters of the Pison and the Gihon and the Hiddekel and the Euphrates rivers when the world was young. It comes down to us with gray hairs, but with stout limbs of a "Wandering Jew." Its voice has been heard upon every hilltop and in every valley since Abel became a herdsman and Cain a tiller of the soil. No sooner did man combine with man in communities or associations to protect himself from foreign foes than he became a specialist. He said to some members of his community, "You be our soldiers to protect us in time of war." He said to others, "You be our legislators and make our laws." He said to others, "You be our priests and teach us about God." He said to others, "You be our physicians or medicine men and care for us while we are sick." He said to others, "You be our sailors and navigate our ships and bring to us our merchandise from afar." He said to the wives and mothers, "You be our housekeepers and nurses and spinners and rear our young and cook our food and weave our clothing." He said to others, "You be our farmers or our architects and raise our crops or build our temples and homes and aqueducts." And everywhere the necessities of life have compelled man not to do all things well, but to do one thing for the benefit of all. Thus as the centuries have gone on man has more and more become a specialist.

More than that, as the world has advanced in its development trades and professions have been divided and subdivided into specialties. Once the family physician's duties were almost as numerous as the tints of the rainbow. He was not only doctor, but he was surgeon and dentist and pharmacist and oculist as well. If a man had a toothache it was the village physician who pushed in the forceps and pulled out the decayed molar. If the patient needed medicine the physician not only wrote the prescription, but compounded the drugs. If the leg had to be amputated it was the family physician who drove in the knife. If the aged man's eyes were in trouble it was the family physician who cut away the cataract or fitted on the glasses. Now all these different duties are done by specialists. The average family physician would no more expect to be the surgeon or the oculist or the pharmacist than he would expect to do the work of the lawyer or the electrician or the mining engineer. In other words, "every man to his trade" is an adage which has divided and subdivided and kept on redividing the human race into its different groups until men by natural adaptation learn to do one thing well rather than a dozen things poorly.

Paul nearly 2,000 years ago recognized the social law, "Every man to his trade." Writing to the Romans, he said, "Having, then, gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us." That means, having special powers of brain, of body and of consecration, let us do the work God has given to us to do each in his own line and in his own sphere. Then Paul goes on to enumerate the different lines of work to which God has called different men. Among those different lines of work he mentions that of teaching. He seems to say: "O man, if God has called you to the teacher's throne, give to your work the very best energies of your life! Never neglect your noble profession one instant." And of all the professions and works Paul here mentions I do not believe there is one more important than that of teaching. Thus this morning I select a mighty subject. May God help us to show the power of "the teacher's throne" and how we should honor its occupant and recognize the responsibility of the work that is done there and its value!

The first great reason why we send our children to school is to wake up the mind and put it into touch with the outside world. That mental awakening is no easy task to perform. The word "education" comes from the Latin word "educo," meaning "to bring out." "Education means literally," says the lexicographer, "the educing, the leading out or drawing out of the latent powers of an individual." But in order to draw out you must first put in. You must open the avenues of knowledge upon which "thoughts" as charioteers can harness up their flashing eyed verbal chargers and drive. You must have the great wires connecting brain with brain, as the Atlantic cable connects the old world with the new. In other words, the schoolteacher must mold the child's mind so that it can read and write and multiply and spell.

The well of knowledge always seems to me like that great deep well on your father's farm. In order to make the work of drawing the water from that well a little easier for your mother you father bought an iron pump and put it in the shed just outside of the kitchen. But, though that pump was supposed to relieve your mother, it was the pest of your life. In the first place, inevitably the family would use up all the water you drew before going to bed. Then your mother in the morning would call, "Charley, I wish you would bring me a pail of water." Then you would go to that pump and grasp the iron handle and pump and pump and pump, and the water would not come. There was no connection between the top and the bottom. At last, in complete disgust, you would have to take the pail and go clear out to the barn and get some water and pour it down the pipe before you could get the connection with the well below. Well, that pail of water you had to carry from afar and pour down the pipe is the symbol to me of the rudiments of an education which the school-teacher is compelled to pour into the brain of the children. Without these rudiments the child will never be in touch with the intellectual world. When the white man began to build the Central Pacific railroad across the continent nothing amazed the American Indian more than the fact that his white brother could make a few signs upon paper, and then by that paper other white men could go and build his bridges and do his bidding. Thus to-day I salute the school-teacher as the great awakener of the brain. I honor the school desk as the great central station where the wires of intelligence are united, as the telephone wires of the central office are made one. I honor the school-teacher because in teaching the child to read he opens to him the avenue of knowledge.

But, having put the scholar in touch with the intellectual world, the next great duty of the school-teacher is to make the student think for himself and do for himself. The cells of the brain are just the same as the muscles and cells of the rest of the body. In order to become developed and strong and virile, in order to grasp the great problems of life and solve them aright, that brain must have exercise. It must learn to be independent. It cannot be carried around as a valetudinarian by a scholastic nurse. Thus the second great duty of the school-teacher is to inspire in the minds of his students the realization that they can do something. "No truth is really our own," said Ralph Waldo Emerson, "until we discover it for ourselves."

The human brain should be something more than a sponge. The brain should be able to give out as well as take in. The brain should be like a mountain side, gushing forth with brooks and springs, rather than a great cavity or reservoir, capable of holding a lot of water, which in time becomes nothing more or less than a stagnant pool. It is just at this point that Friedrich Froebel, the great German educator, has been able within the last few years to absolutely revolutionize the educational system of the world. The gist of his teachings is this: "To have found one-fourth of an answer to a question by his own effort is of more value and importance to a child than it is to half hear and half understand that answer in the words of another." Thus we find the average schoolroom for our children a far different place from that we used to attend. We there find the children playing games and building blocks and working at carpenter benches and bending over kitchen stoves and drawing pictures and singing songs. They work with their heads; they work with their hands and fingers. The schoolroom is a place where our children are taught not only theories, but practicalities. That is true education.

And here let me state something directly to the parents in reference to this law. Every father and mother ought to be the public school teacher's assistants. They ought to supplement the work of the schoolroom in the home. How are they to do that? By inspiring their children in every way possible to do something for themselves. Buy them all the games they are able to play. Checkers and dominoes and parcheesi and authors and chess and croquet and golf and tennis are not time wasters, but brain developers. The striving for the mastery in games develops the power to succeed in life. When the Duke of Wellington was Prime Minister of England he paid a visit to his old school of Eton. While he was watching the boys play football upon the field he said to the principal. "The battle of Waterloo was won here." If Arthur Wellesley had never contended for mastery upon the playground he would never have been able to conquer England's greatest foe. "One of the greatest difficulties to be overcome in the physical, intellectual and moral training of the negro race in Jamaica," wrote the Rev. William Gillies, a late missionary to that island, "is the fact that the children have lost the play spirit." That means because the black children of Jamaica were indolent in their games; the black men and women were indolent in their life's work.

I see the teacher training the practical child. I see him also training the aesthetic child or the student of the beautiful. I hear him saying to the young student: "Young man, there is something more in life than planting a cabbage patch, or hoeing corn, or digging an oil well. There is something more in life than in owning a mortgage upon your neighbor's farm and squeezing him out of his property in hard times. There is other literature in life than that found in the stock columns of the daily newspapers. There is something higher than the rattle of the miser's gold." The true teacher tries to lead his scholars into the higher realms of the beautiful. He inspires them with the harmonies of nature, of sound and of color. He gets the best pictures he can and hangs them upon the school-walls. He gets the most beautiful flowers he can and places them upon his school desk. And he gets the best books he can to read to them in the extra hours.

He tries to do for his class room what Mary A. Livermore did for her scholars when she was a teacher in Duxbury, Mass. She did not go into her class room and say, "Now, children, you must go to work and work hard and have just as miserable a time as you can." Oh, no. She made play out of work. When she was teaching botany she gathered the beautiful flowers out of the fields and took them into the class rooms. Then on certain Saturdays she took her class out into the woods to find the flowers and to study them in their home retreats. Then, instead of studying the stars by books alone, she would meet her class on a clear night, and together they would roam through stellar worlds. Then, instead of making music a bore, she formed her scholars into singing classes, and ever and anon the teachers and scholars would go off on picnics, taking their games and their violins along. Do you wonder that Mary A. Livermore worked her way into the hearts of her scholars and inspired them with the love of the beautiful?

But the school-teacher has still a higher mission than that of cramming a student's brain full of a few facts and teaching him to love the aesthetic. Art and nature did not make Athens a city of virtuous people. Some of the most loathsome examples of immoral and social licentiousness were practiced under the shadow of the Parthenon. Some of the greatest writers of the ages walked the streets of Rome. But Rome in its day was what Sodom and Gomorrah were in their days, and in modern times the most popular lover of the aesthetic who ever stepped upon our shores was himself so steeped in immorality that he was not only exiled from all decent society, but was incarcerated in a London jail and passed away despised of men to meet his God and to render an account for his misspent life. Thus, my friend, as a teacher you have something more to do than to teach your scholars to love the books, and the trees, and the mountains, and the blossoms, and the harvest fields. You have to teach your scholars to be pure and true and noble and good.

How can a teacher lead his pupils to be pure and true and noble and good? In the first place, by giving them the example of a teacher who is good and true and pure and noble. Only a short time ago I was talking to a lady who for years was a successful teacher in one of our western cities. I said, "What is the greatest essential for a successful teacher's life?" She unhesitatingly answered: "Example. She herself must be a good woman if she wants her scholars to be good."

A few days ago the principal of one of the Los Angeles public schools said to me: "I cannot expect anything better from my students than I am myself. For the last two weeks I have been trying especially to be kind and gentle and forgiving. Why? I know if I am kind and gentle I will make my children kind and gentle also." There is a magnetic connection between the pupil's seat and the teacher's desk. You know it, oh, teacher! I am going to ask you one blunt question. Is there any way easier for a teacher to be true and noble and good than by surrendering his life into Christ's hands. Friedrich Froebel himself said, "All education not founded on religion is unproductive." Ah, school-teacher, I think I can put my finger upon the weak spot of your school teaching: You are spiritually a blind man trying to lead the blind. You want your scholars to be like Christ, and yet you yourself have not surrendered your own heart to the Saviour. Will you do it now in order to give the right kind of an example to your children?

The next way to make your scholars true and noble is to appeal to their best manhood and womanhood. A sneaking teacher will inevitably have a sneaking and dishonest band of students. If a teacher will place his students upon their honor they will be honorable young men and women. If he watches them as a spy would try to ferret out the actions of an enemy he will find his scholars dishonest, and there is no exception to the rule.

How was it, oh, teacher, with your past life? If you had a teacher who never trusted you and was trying to catch you in a dishonest act, did you not cheat under his very eyes? You did, and you know it. On the other hand, were not all the boys and girls honest and true in dealing with that teacher who used to leave the room on the day of examinations and put the members of your class on their honor? It always pays to appeal to the honor of your students. Treat your class as honest boys and girls, and they will be honest. Spy on their tracks, and they will cheat you and deceive you at every step. Thus the two great means by which a teacher is to mold his classes for Christ is, first, to be a Christian himself, and, second, to appeal to the Christian instincts of the scholars by whom he is surrounded.

And now I come to one closing plea for the teacher to give his heart to Christ. Of all professions in the world where a person needs the grace of God to sustain him the pedagogical profession is the foremost. Of all classes of men and women toward whom the world is most blatantly and cruelly ungrateful that class is to be found among the teachers. "Do you know," said a teacher to me the other day, "that of all intelligent workmen a teacher is paid the least? A father pays more to the carpenter who shingles his house than he does to the school-teacher who molds the brains and the character of his child. He pays more to the workman who puts in his plumbing or the mason who rears his walls or to the plasterer who mixes his lime for his inside walls than he does to the school-teacher who is forming the life of his child for time and for eternity." "Yes," I said, "I know it. Shame on the community which does it!"

But, Christian teachers, though your pay is small, though the world may be ungrateful for the good that you can do, remember the greatest opportunities of life are yours. You are the great protectors of society. It is you who can prevent in the twentieth century such an outbreak as the French revolution of the eighteeth century. You are the great conservators of social order. Your work is infinite, though the pay is meager. Christ was never paid a dollar for the work he did for mankind except to be presented with a cross for a dying bed. But Christ saved the world by his sacrifices. You are not building for time, but for eternity. You are molding boys and girls for the future. And if you do your work well there will come a time when you shall have your reward. When on the great day of judgment all the nations of the earth shall assemble to receive their rewards some who are last here shall be first there. On that day, if you have done your work well, Christ will point to the gospel triumph of some of your pupils and say: "Oh, teacher, these men and women wrought for me because thou didst thy work faithfully in the schoolroom! Come forth, oh, teacher, and get thy reward!" Then Christ will say to your old pupils: "Friends, help thy master to his throne. Aged school-teacher, mount and take thy crown." So may it be. I pray God that such heavenly reward shall be thine, because thou a Christian teacher art doing thy work well for the Master now in thy humble sphere on earth. Do you wonder Paul praised the teacher's life work when he said. "He that teacheth, on teaching."

IVORY CARVING.

The Chinese Still Excel In Making Elaborate Fan Sticks.

"You may say that the Chinese still excel in the elaborate carving of ivory for fan sticks," said a fan importer. "Years of labor are represented in some of the fans made in the orient. For nearly two centuries the manufacture of fans for the European market has been an important industry of China.

"The Chinese workmen, brought to Paris in the seventeenth century in order to teach Frenchmen the art, aided greatly in giving the prominence to French fans. At Dieppe and other industrial centers in France fine examples of carved ivory fan sticks are produced, and many of the most beautiful fans reaching the New York market come from there. There is a wide choice of material for the sticks, comprising ivory, mother-of-pearl, tortoise shell, horn, sandal and other woods, with occasionally filigree work in metal.

"The most common materials, of course, are wood and bone, which are decorated with prints or pressed work. One of the most notable fans, made with metal sticks, is the one of carved silver said to have once belonged to Marie Antoinette. This fan is now in the South Kensington collection. The mother-of-pearl sticks give an excellent opportunity for artistic carving and also for clever gilding."

THE KOTOW.

Neither Ungraceful Nor Degrading as Performed by Chinese.

The kotow (pronounced ker-toe and meaning literally to bow the head) is used as a form of thanks and is not a manner of greeting. The actors kotow to their majesties at the beginning and end of each performance at the theater, first to thank for the honor they are to receive in being allowed to act before them and at the end to thank for the privilege granted. The officials "bow the head" to thank for an audience or any favor or gift they have received or are to receive from their majesties. The kotow is not only made by people at the palace and at imperial audiences; it is sometimes used by equals to each other as a proper manner of thanking for some great favor. To make the kotow the person kneels three times and each time bows his head three times, touching the ground with it. The kotow could not be made by a foreigner without looking most awkward and appearing most servile, but the Chinese do it with dignity, and it is neither ungraceful nor degrading. It is a time honored manner of giving thanks, a Chinese tradition surviving from a time when the courtiers were perhaps like slaves, but at present it does not imply any slavelike inferiority on the part of him who performs it.—Katharine A. Carl in Century.

Made Him Cautious.

N. Vickary, formerly for many years a well known taxidermist of Lynn, Mass., had skinned an eagle for mounting one day when an old colored man who did odd jobs about came in.

"Uncle Ben," said the taxidermist, "you can take home that goose over there if you want to."

Uncle Ben bore the "goose" joyfully away. The next time he met Mr. Vickary he looked at him rather queerly, but said nothing. A few days later the taxidermist skinned an owl and again offered Uncle Ben a goose to take home. Uncle Ben removed his hat, scratched his head in some perplexity and then said:

"If it's all the same to you, Mistah Vickary, suh, I'd like to see the feet ob dat goose before I take him home to my ole woman."

A Catchword.

Concerning the term "catchword" the London Chronicle says that its old technical sense "is familiar to those who affect old books. The catchword was the first word of a page, which was printed also by anticipation in the bottom right hand corner below the last line of the preceding page, so as to insure that the pages should follow on properly. In Latin these catchwords were known as 'custodes,' guardians. The device was invented in Venice about 1469 and was in favor for centuries. This is the oldest sense of 'catchword' in the English language. Afterward it came to mean a prominent word heading a column of a dictionary, the rhyming word of a line of verse and an actor's cue."

He Won the Trick.

"Oh, George, dear," she whispered when he slipped the engagement ring on her tapering finger, "how sweet of you to remember just the sort of stone I preferred! None of the others was ever so thoughtful."

George was staggered but for a moment. Then he came back with, "Not at all, dear; you overrate me. This is the one I've always used."

She was inconsistent enough to cry about it.

What She Would Do.

"Johnnie, dear," said his mother, who was trying to inculcate a lesson in industry, "what do you suppose mamma would do for you if you should come to her some day and tell her that you loved your studies?" "Lick me for telling a falsehood" said dear little Johnnie with the frankness of youth.

Good For Baldness.

"Say," said the man who was beginning to have a bare spot on top of his head, "can you tell me what is good for baldness?"

"Yes," replied the barber, "a cheerful determination to make the best of what can't be helped."—Chicago Record-Herald.

SLAVERY IN CHINA.

Savage Cruelty Meted Out For the Most Venial Offenses.

Says an editorial in the Peking Times: "The position of the slave girl in a Chinese home is a very hard one as a rule. These slaves are generally the property of the wife, and no one interferes with the mistress in her treatment of the poor little things, who will as often as not be subjected to the most savage cruelty for most venial offenses. A few weeks ago we recall a case of great hardship being brought into the mixed court, Shanghai, in which a small slave girl had been gagged with a piece of iron and severely beaten because, when half starved, she helped herself to some scraps of food.

"Our attention has now been called to piercing cries which emanate from a house near Canton road and are said to proceed from a little slave girl who for some reason is beaten almost daily with a thick knotted rope, but for what reason is unknown.

"Our informant thinks a word in public, showing that the incident has been noticed, may suffice to check the cruelty without lodging a formal complaint with the municipal police, which might make matters worse for the poor little sufferer in the long run."

The Vocal Cords.

Vocal power depends on the vocal cords. When they are stretched, so narrowing the exit from the air passage, the voice is high pitched. When they are pulled widely asunder the voice is deep. When they are flaccid the voice is nearly lost. Of course, voices vary individually in pitch and resonance, but power is always affected by the state of the general health, and, broadly speaking, loss of nerve tone is more often responsible than anything else for vocal weakness. Fast living, mental strain and similar conditions occasion such impairment of the nervous system. Breathing foul air, especially air saturated with tobacco smoke, is bad for the cords.

Hard on Her Conscience.

The giving of a "character" to domestic servants is one of the severest tests of the employer's character. An Irish master, being called upon to write a testimonial for a groom whom he was discharging for drunkenness, gave him a good character, but omitted to mention one trait. The groom returned the letter, objecting that it did not say he was sober. The master added "sometimes sober," and the man was content. The woman who had to recommend the inefficient cook she had kept for seven years only because she was afraid to give her notice went one better. She had covered three pages with undeserved commendations; she had placed it in an envelope and addressed it, and her conscience pricked her badly. Then she had a happy idea, and broke open the seal, adding to her letter, as a postscript, "God forgive me!" It satisfied her conscience, but history does not relate if it satisfied the other woman.—N. Y. Tribune.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

St. Andrew's.

"Christ's Calculations," was the subject of the pastor's evening discourse. The text was from Mark 12th chapter and 43rd verse:

"And He called unto Him His disciples and saith unto them, verily I say unto you, this poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury."

In the anthem, "God be With Us," Mrs. T. J. Shanks sang the solo.

John Street.

The pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, officiated at both services. In the evening his subject was "What is your line of Defence?" The text was from Job, 31st chapter and 14th verse:

"What then shall I do when God riseth up? and when He visiteth, what shall I answer Him?"

During the service Mr. Cameron sang a solo "Hosanna in Excelsis."

Holloway Street.

In the morning the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, conducted the services, and in the evening the Rev. Dr. Wrinch, medical missionary from Hazleton, B. C., occupied the pulpit. A large congregation was present. The Rev. Dr. gave an address relative to the work in which he has been engaged during the past five years, describing the missionary hospital at Hazleton and the good which was being accomplished, especially among the Indians of that district. The distaste which existed among the red men at being treated for disease by a Christian medical man was fast disappearing, and to-day those who are suffering are anxious to be treated. Many who come as patients to the hospital are heathens, but the care and treatment received by them has the desired effect in many cases and they go away from the hospital Christians, and in this way do much good amongst the tribes. It was a beautiful sight to see the Indians throwing away idolatry and accepting the Saviour. The Indians as a rule were not slow to draw conclusions, and they recognize that the Christian hospital does for them what their medicine man cannot do, cure both body and soul. The Rev. Doctor gave incidents which demonstrated that this branch of missionary work was doing good. The hospital was thoroughly equipped and in charge of a matron from Toronto, who was in every respect capable of performing the duties devolving upon her. There are private and public wards, and 20 rooms in the buildings. The nurses are uniformed, the same as in the hospitals in this province. In concluding his address Dr. Wrinch said that those who were assisting in carrying on this work were doing the Master's will, as He went about not only preaching but healing.

Bridge Street.

Large congregations were present at both services yesterday. The pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, officiated. In the evening his subject was "How the Kingdom Grows," and the text was from St. Matthew, 13th chapter, part of the 33rd verse:

"The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto leaven."

During the service a duet entitled "Blessed Saviour, Thee I Love," was sung by Misses M. Vermilyea and Gertrude Price.

Christ Church.

The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, preached at both services. In the evening the topic was "Ethics in business: early closing." The text was from St. Matthew, 16th chapter and 26th verse:

"For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

Owing to the reported illness of the King the National Anthem was sung.

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

Good congregations were the rule at the above church yesterday, and in the evening the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached on "a bright ray from the priceless pearl." During the offertory Miss L. Hubly sang a solo very sweetly.

Baptist.

There were good congregations at both services yesterday. The evening subject was "A covenant and a promise," the texts being, "My son, give me thine heart," and "A new heart will I give thee." The preacher pointed out that the Bible always appealed to a man's heart, it being the great centre of life, and he entreated the unsaved to seek for the new heart promised by God. The choir sang an anthem, entitled, "Thou, O God, art praised in Zion," in very good time and tune. At the close of the service the ordinance of baptism was administered to a young native of China.

Port Hopers Did the Baby Act.

Port Hope Guide: Cobourg 4 Port Hope 3; such was the result of last night's hockey match in Cobourg. So as to give the locals all the support possible a special train was arranged for and between three and four hundred accompanied the team. The majority of those who attended are of the opinion that a few bottles of "soothing syrup" would be a great help to our intermediates. When it comes to performing the "baby act" we have one or two players that can take the bun and for one half of the game last night they gave a beautiful exhibition of this nonsense. It was all due to changing the positions of a couple of players. The management thought it would be better to put Rowden at centre and Croft on the wing and because they did not consult some of the members of the team as to this change they were seized with the sulks and for the first thirty minutes they gave about as loose an exhibition of hockey as was ever seen. Lucky for the Port Hopers that Mercer was in goal or the chances are the nets would have been all punctured. He stopped a score of shots and worked unceasingly while a couple of his team-mates did the loafing. And at half time Cobourg had scored three goals while Port Hope had failed to find the net. During the rest, the management decided to make the change and Rowden was played on the wing and Croft at centre in the second half.

Then the forward line worked together and soon scored three goals allowing Cobourg only one and this being scored on a lucky lift from centre. The line-up as it was in the first place could have made just as good a showing, but no, one or two players wished to show their authority and refused to take any part in the game until the line was arranged to suit them.

It is indeed a most regrettable occurrence and one that will not soon be forgotten by the Ontario supporters. After going to the trouble of arranging for a special train and the four hundred citizens who went down to cheer them on are treated to an exhibition of this kind. It is a big stain on hockey in Port Hope and will prove disastrous to all future gates.

The locals never had a better chance of carrying off a victory from Cobourg. Bentley, the fastest man in Cobourg, was unable to play; the ice was in excellent condition and they had one of the best referees in the business, Mr. Roy Thomas. But they threw their opportunity away both of winning last night's game or of landing the district championship. As we have mentioned Rowden's name several times in our report we might state in fairness to him that he was not one of the offenders. On the contrary he played a hard game and used every effort to land a victory.

There is at present some talk of entering a protest but as yet the management are undecided.

SPORTING NOTES.

Should the weather man prove at all reasonable, the hockey match of the season will be played here on Thursday night next, when Cobourg's fine juniors will clash with the local septette. Those who saw the home lads trim Port Hope here will remember what an exciting game it was. People who have seen Port Hope and Cobourg play say they are about even, so the Bellevilles, if at their best, are licensed to beat the husky Cobourgs next Thursday night, and they mean to do so if good condition and hard work count for anything.

Southampton, Eng., Jan. 20. — The American Line steamer New York sailed from here to-day, having on board the New Zealand football team. It is said they probably will play an exhibition game at New York against an all-Canadian team, and another at San Francisco against the Vancouver players.

Here are nice conditions for a hockey game as played in Toronto on Saturday night, according to The Globe: "There was no ice to speak of, the boards being coated with a thin, sugary substance that was as shifting as sand and as holding as uncooled asphalt. At the east end of the rink the boards were exposed, and it was almost impossible to shove the puck through the slush. It was not so bad in the vicinity of the other goal, the snow being a little more firm. Three of the four games were made at that end. There was little skating done, the players running on their blades."

Globe: The danger of charging an opposing player from behind had an exemplification in last Friday's Argonaut - Marlboro intermediate match, when an Argonaut forward charged Chappelle into the iron rod of the goal nets and cut his face open. This is the favorite trick of a cowardly player, because the opportunity comes usually when the referee is not looking.

Montreal will have a new rink next winter that will be "the best ever." It is intended primarily for public skating, and hockey will be provided for also. Skating room for a thousand, and seating accommodation for six thousand is what the plans call for. The new rink will be located on Guy street, and will be completed next September. Toronto will have a new rink in 1921, when the street railway franchise expires.

Diphtheria Rampant Outside City Limits.

SERIOUS CASE NEAR ALBERT COLLEGE WHICH CAUSED HEALTH OFFICER A LOT OF UNEASINESS.

Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer, informs us that there is a lot of diphtheria on the outskirts of this city, and the fact that members of infected families have been visiting Belleville freely is causing him a lot of uneasiness.

A couple of weeks ago, the Doctor says, a man came on the market, in whose family there were two cases of diphtheria. The man was warned to stay away, and did so, but since then he has been moving freely in and out among his neighbors.

On Saturday Dr. Yeomans found there was a very serious case of diphtheria just outside the city, near Albert College, and it seems that, since Wednesday last, up to the end of the week, other children belonging to the same family had been attending Grier St. School. Dr. Yeomans, of course, had no jurisdiction over the afflicted family, which was outside the city, but he notified Dr. Faulkner, Medical Health Officer of Thurlow, who promptly quarantined the house.

Dr. Yeomans, while not wishing to unnecessarily alarm people who have children attending Grier St. School, wishes to impress upon them the necessity of great vigilance, and, if any of their children show symptoms of sore throat, to at once call in a medical man. It is better, under the circumstances, to err on the side of safety than to wait till the trouble, however slight at first, has developed.

Dr. Yeomans says he knows of no cases of diphtheria inside the city, but, as before stated, there are many just outside. One child, at Buck's Mills, died this morning.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"UNCLE TOM" TO-MORROW NIGHT

It was in the evening, when the day's work in the cotton fields was done, "Massa" had gone to bed in the darkened days of slavery, that the dusky toilers of the plantation were wont to gather round their humble huts and there hold high carnival under the pale light of the moon. Although these scenes have passed into tradition there is still a strong semblance to those interesting pastimes left in the plantation and levee pictures introduced by Al. W. Martin's big, new, spectacular revival of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which will appear at the Carman to-morrow night.

MARRIED AT ST. MICHAEL'S

NUPTIALS OF MR. FRED D. SULLIVAN AND MISS LORETTA McGINNIS THIS MORNING.

A quiet but pretty wedding took place at St. Michael's Church, at 8 o'clock this morning, when Miss Loretta McGinnis, youngest daughter of Mrs. Jas. McGinnis, of Read, Tyendinaga, and formerly of Chicago, was united in marriage to Mr. Fred D. Sullivan, of this city. Rev. Father Trainer performed the ceremony after which Nuptial Mass was celebrated. The bride was dressed in a becoming costume of blue velvet, wore a polo turban of blue to match, and carried a morocco bound prayer-book. Miss Alice Deveney was bridesmaid and her dress was brown covert cloth with hat to match. Mr. Frank Meagher assisted the groom. Immediately after the ceremony the party drove to the residence of the bride's mother, where a sumptuous wedding breakfast was partaken of. The bride received many handsome and useful presents. The bride and groom are popular among a large circle of friends, who will join in wishing them happiness and prosperity in their wedded life.

BEWARE OF THE FAKIR

BOGUS CATTLE DEALER TRAVELLING THROUGH THE PROVINCE.

The issue of the Farmers' Advocate of Jan. 10th, gives publicity to the actions of a clever fakir who is travelling to purchase stock, etc., and incidentally borrowing sums of money from the farmers. Under the name of R. H. Reid he went through Elgin County, saying he was a breeder from Bruce County, wanting to buy stock.

A short time ago under the name of Duncan, of Toronto, he visited Harwich, presumably purchasing Jersey cattle. He made a sale, on paper, with W. W. Everitt, but, speaking to The Planet this morning, Mr. Everitt said he promised to send a draft for the amount of the purchase, which had not been shipped. He was not successful in borrowing money, Mr. Everitt said.

The man is described as about 40 years of age, 5 ft. 6 in. in height, 140 lbs. in weight, with dark hair and moustache. He was well dressed in black and wore a stiff hat and prairie wolf overcoat. He spoke with a foreign accent, probably French, and was left-handed.—Chatham Planet.

Died on Saturday

Mrs. Elizabeth Cole, widow of Simeon Cole, formerly of Big Island, passed away last Saturday. She had been residing at Toronto with her son-in-law, Mr. W. H. Allison, C.P.R. dispatcher. The remains were interred at the family burying-ground, Big Island.

BOTH FOOD AND MEDICINE.

We like best to call Scott's Emulsion a food-medicine. It is a term that aptly describes the character and action of our Emulsion. More than a medicine—more than a food, yet combining the vital principles of both. It is for this reason that Scott's Emulsion has a distinct and special value in all wasting diseases. There is nothing better to remedy the troubles of imperfect growth and delicate health in children. The action of Scott's Emulsion is just as effective in treating weakness and wasting in adults.

YEAR IN RUSS FORTRESS.

Editor of St. Petersburg Paper Sentenced For Exciting to High Treason and Armed Revolt.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 22.—M. Alexis Alexievich Souverin, editor of The Russ, has been sentenced to a year's imprisonment in a fortress for publishing in December last the manifesto of the workman's council announcing that the Government had declared civil war on the proletariat and saying that the challenge must be accepted. Efforts are being made to secure a mitigation of the sentence. The cases of seven other editors of newspapers, including Prof. Mitukoff of The Svo Bodanarog and M. Hessen of The Pravo are still pending.

The technical accusation against M. Souverian was incitation of the people to high treason by publishing proclamations and statements designed to instigate riot, sedition and armed revolt and tending to cause the bankruptcy of the state. The charge was based not only on the publication of the manifesto, but on a series of seditious proclamations by the Postal Telegraph Union applying to the revolutionary power adjectives traditionally sacred to the Emperor, and also on the appeal of the League of Leagues, in which it was stated that the political liberty of the people was obtainable only through an armed uprising for a great battle against the autocracy.

M. Souverin pleaded in his defence that the communications and the proclamations published in his paper in his opinion gave facts of political life of such importance to all circles of society that it was impossible and contrary to the interests of the Government to pass over them in silence.

Qualified to Vote.

The period allowed for the registration of voters has ended and the number of primary voters registered is 36,000.

No "Red Sunday" Trouble.

There is general confidence that today, the anniversary of the historic march of Father Gapon and his followers to the winter palace, will pass without serious occurrences in St. Petersburg and in Moscow, though there may be collisions in the provincial towns.

Yesterday passed quietly, although all the workmen were at liberty, and last night St. Petersburg was tranquilly sleeping.

LOOK AFTER THE LISTS.

Next Fall's May Be Those On Which Elections Are Held.

Montreal, Jan. 22.—R. L. Borden, M. P., took part Saturday evening in the opening of the new junior Conservative club rooms, and he was accompanied by Mr. Monk, M. P.; Bergeron of Beauharnois, and others. Mr. Borden held out hope for the return of the Conservatives to power, although he declared that it could not be done unless they looked after the lists. Those of next fall would, he believed, be the lists of next general election. He contended that a party that did not hold its own at the bye-elections was doomed to defeat. The Liberals had [illegible] a seat in Ontario, and their ma[illegible]y had been greatly reduced in [illegible]igonish.

Stealing a Constituency.

Prince Albert, Sask., Jan. 22.—The result of the election trials of Deputy Returning Officers Nelson and Sutherland Saturday for not holding an election in their polls in the northern part of Prince Albert district, brought to light one of the boldest and most barefaced efforts to steal a constituency ever attempted in Canada.

The two officers admitted on the stand that they held no election, and yet sent in a vote of 150 cast entirely for Tyerman, Liberal candidate. They were fined $200 and costs.

The election of P. Donaldson, Provincial Rights candidate, is now certain, as Tyerman had a lead of less than 50.

More revelations are expected, as J. McLeod another deputy returning officer, has been summoned, and his case will be heard Monday.

WEEK'S LIBERAL GAINS

177 Seats Change Political Complexion in Britain.

Labor's Growing Strength a Marvel and Will Have to Be Reckoned With—Mr. Chamberlain Likely to Lead the Opposition—No Seat Yet For Mr. Balfour—Home Rule For Ireland Predicted In Two Years.

London, Jan. 22.—Within the last week the political complexion of the United Kingdom has been completely changed by the tide of Liberalism that flowed, and even now is higher than the most sanguine Radical dared to hope for or predict. The new Parliament will be overwhelmingly Liberal.

Up to this time the total number of members elected is 480, of whom 247 are Liberals, 114 Unionists, 40 Laborites, 78 Nationalists and 1 Socialist. This leaves 190 seats still vacant.

Liberals thus far have gained no fewer than 177 seats, counting Labor gains as Liberal or Government gains; and if the same proportion be kept up for the remaining 190 seats the Liberals will have 407 votes in the next Parliament, to which may be added those of 42 Laborites, 1 Socialist and 83 Nationalists, which would give the Prime Minister, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, 533 votes against 137 for the Conservatives.

While this calculation concerning the results in the 190 vacant seats is entirely speculative, it is not in any respect impossible of realization, nor could it be more extraordinary or startling than any of the results declared during the last few days.

Ireland remains practically unchanged. The Nationalists have plucked one seat from the solid northeast corner. The Liberals have broken into the Tory stronghold of Scotland, with prospects for other remarkable successes, while, as already noted, the great fortresses of Unionism during the last ten years have been razed before a storm of undreamed of Liberal sentiment or of opposition to the Unionist policy.

Chamberlain Opposition Leader.

With the exception of Birmingham which is completely controlled by Mr. Chamberlain, all the great centres have shown a determination to change from the old order. Mr. Balfour will probably remain an outsider until he receives a chance in a bye-election, though possibly some safe Unionist seat may be relinquished in his favor before the end of next week. It is understood that several efforts in this direction have been made, but without success. Such reports as these, it is believed, are materially weakening the prestige of the accredited leader of the Unionist party.

In the absence of Mr. Balfour, Mr. Chamberlain probably will take the lead in the next Parliament; at any rate, he is now acknowledged to be the strong man and will have the greatest support of any man on the opposition benches.

Most remarkable in the features of the elections thus far is the number of Labor members elected. The last Parliament could claim but seven Laborite members, while up to the present no less than forty of them have obtained seats, and with the promise of further gains it is not at all improbable that Labor will have a representation of fifty members in the new Parliament. This undoubtedly would have a tremendous effect on future legislation in England, as the Laborites are almost certain to get the support of the home rulers in any reasonable measure introduced by them.

One of the most prominent politicians in England said:

Home Rule In Two Years.

"It is useless to minimize the present revolution, and we might as well begin to take a new view of the situation. In my opinion a Parliament sitting in Dublin may be looked for within the next two years. Assuredly Mr. John Redmond, leader of the Nationalist party, and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman have reached a working agreement, and it is inconceivable that Mr. Redmond would be content with anything less than an Irish Parliament.

"I have no idea that such a Parliament would mean separation, and have good reasons to believe that a plan is now under consideration by which the religious question can be eliminated from the deliberations of such a Parliament, which would act under the Imperial Parliament."

Before the end of next week the elections will be over, the last contest being set for Jan. 26. But so far as the Liberal Government is concerned its life can now be measured not, as was predicted prior to the elections, by months or a few years, but by the limitations of the Septennial Act.

Lieut.-Col. Arthur H. Lee, Conservative, former Civil Lord of the Admiralty, who was British Military Attache at Washington, and later attache with the American army during the Spanish-American war, has been re-elected for the south, or Fareham, division of Hampshire by a greatly reduced majority.

The former Secretary of State for the Home Department, Mr. Aretas Akers-Douglas, Conservative, has been re-elected for the east, or St. Augustine's, division of Kent.

Home Rule For Transvaal.

London, Jan. 22.—That it is the intention of the Government to give the Transvaal responsible Government like that of Canada was announced by Mr. Asquith in his speech on Saturday night. The report has been current that it was to be done in the coming session, and the Minister's words give credence to the report. Mr. Asquith said he was speaking for all his colleagues as well as himself in expressing their earnest desire and intention that the Transvaal and Orange River colonies should at the earliest possible moment be given the management of their own internal affairs.

Chamberlain Not Down-Hearted.

"I am not down-hearted," said Mr. Chamberlain in an appeal to the Shropshire electors on Saturday. "I am not one of those who dread to be in a minority. We who will be returned to present the great ideas of the Empire and fiscal reform may be somewhat small, but I believe we will be a united band. The fewer we are the more essential it should be, to be united in policy and determined in our action on behalf of the true cause we shall have to represent." Mr. Chamberlain expressed the opinion that the Liberals with their great majority and their Labor allies would not be a happy family long.

Unionists Gain Two.

Saturday night's returns included two Conservative gains, both scored in Scotland. In the St. Andrew's Burghs a Liberal majority of 26 has changed to a Conservative majority of 36, and in the Ayr Burghs, where the voting took place on Friday, though the returns were not issued till Saturday night, the Liberal majority of 104 in the bye-election of 1904, was changed to a Conservative majority of 264. These, with the three gains announced on Saturday were hopefully looked upon by the Unionists, as a rift in the clouds. Returns from 13 ridings which voted Saturday have not been received yet.

The total Unionist gains are now nine; the Liberal gains 139 and the Labor 29.

Gallery By Acclamation.

Montreal, Jan. 22.—Ald. Ekers and W. E. Doran were nominated yesterday for the mayoralty, the election to take place Feb. 1. There were 22 aldermen elected by acclamation, making a total of 40 members. Among those returned unopposed was Ald. Dan Gallery, who was recently politically disqualified.

Sporting Baronet Dead.

London, Jan. 22.—Sir James Percy Miller, Bart., who was well known in racing and military circles, died yesterday. He won the Derby twice—in 1890 with Sainfoin and in 1903 with Rocksand. Sir James served with the Imperial Yeomanry in South Africa. He was 41 years of age.

Aeronaut Falls 2,000 Feet.

Fort Worth, Tex., Jan. 22.—Lindsay Cooper, an aeronaut of Caledon, fell 2,000 feet from his balloon at Wolfe City Saturday afternoon and was instantly killed. Cooper was ascending when he lost his hold on the trapeze. About 4,000 persons witnessed the accident.

$1,000,000 In Valuables Burn.

Brussels, Jan. 22.—The Patriot says that the mail car on the Ostend-Herbesthal train was burned Saturday in an accident. The car contained the Indian mail and $1,000,000 worth of valuables which were destroyed. The valuables were insured.

Eighteen Trampled to Death.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 22.—Eighteen persons were killed and probably half a hundred injured in a panic following the cry of "Fire," last night in St. Paul's colored Baptist church on the west side of Eighth street, between Popular street and Girard avenue. The cry of fire coupled with the sight of the smoke threw the congregation into a panic. In the wild rush eighteen persons had the life stamped out of them before the panic ended.

WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU

FEW PEOPLE REALIZE THE IMPORTANCE OF GOOD DIGESTION UNTIL IT IS LOST.

Many people suffer from dyspepsia and do not know it. They feel mean, out of sorts, peevish, do not sleep well, do not have a good keen appetite, do not have the inclination and energy for physical or mental work they once had, but at the same time do not feel any particular pain or distress in the stomach. Yet all this is the result of poor digestion, an insidious form of dyspepsia, which can only be cured by a remedy specially intended to cure it and make the digestive organs act naturally, and properly digest the food eaten. Bitters, after dinner pills and nerve tonics will never help the trouble; they don't reach it. The new medical discovery does. It is called Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and is a specific for dyspepsia and indigestion. It cures because it thoroughly digests all wholesome food taken into the stomach, whether the stomach is in good working order or not.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, by digesting the food, instead of making the worn-out stomach do all the work, gives it a much needed rest and a cure of dyspepsia is the natural result.

When you are nervous, run down and sleepless, don't make the common mistake of supposing your nervous system needs treatment and fill your stomach with powerful nerve tonics, which make you feel good for a little while, only to fall back farther than ever.

Your nerves are all right, but they are starved; they want food.

Nourish them with wholesome, every-day food and plenty of it, well digested, and you can laugh at nerve tonics and medicine.

But the nerves will not be nourished from a weak, abused stomach, but when the digestion has been made perfect by the use of this remedy all nervous symptoms disappear.

Who ever heard of a man or woman blessed with a vigorous digestion and good appetite being troubled with their nerves?

Good digestion means a strong nervous system, abundance of energy, and capacity to enjoy the good things of life.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will certainly set your stomach and digestive organs right; they can't help but do it because they nourish the body by digesting the food eaten, and rest the stomach.

You get nourishment and rest at one and the same time, and that is all the worn-out dyspeptic needs to build him up and give new life to every organ and an added zest to every pleasure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are a god-send to the army of men and women with weak stomachs and nerves and justly merits the claim of being one of the most worthy medical discoveries of the time.

A LACK OF CONFIDENCE

Prevails at Algeciras and Morocco Delegates Are Glad.

France and Germany, Through Their Delegates, Are Unable to Get Inkling of Scope of Each Other's Intentions and Those of Great Britain—How the Conference Will Dodge the Vital Question a Little Longer.

Algeciras, Jan. 22.—Behind the screen of amiability that envelope the relations of the envoys of the powers to the Moroccan conference, a rising feeling of distrust is observed, due seemingly to the unwillingness of both France and Germany to define their positions beyond reaffirming now somewhat wearisomely their adherence to the open door, the sovereignty of the Sultan and the integrity of his territories.

The French delegates in all their conversational reconnaisances with their opponents, have been unable to learn precisely what is the position of Germany, nor apparently have the German representatives been able to ascertain the joint intentions of France and Great Britain.

The Moroccan delegates have become conscious of this and take satisfaction therefrom.

The Contraband Committee.

The committee on contraband of the Moroccan conference met again Saturday. The principal points discussed were the question of the right of seizure by the Sultan or by authorized police, and of the authority of the vessels carrying contraband to enter Moroccan harbors.

The committee has completed the draft of an agreement which will be submitted to the conference to-day. The agreement appears to be purposely framed to defer the main issues between France and Germany.

The conference probably will accept the committee's report provisionally and lay it aside for final action.

The reform of the finances of Morocco will next be considered. Thus the conference for some time will yet dodge the question of the organization of the Moroccan police, which involves the vital issue between France and Germany.

The delegates are beginning to show signs of weariness of the limited diversions of the village, and therefore they welcome the announcement of a bull fight Jan. 28, in which three noted matadors will participate.

PREPARING TO FIGHT.

Venezuela Garrisoning Ports and Furnishing Troops With Supplies.

Willemstadt, Curacao, Jan. 22.—The Venezuelan Government is actively engaged in garrisoning the ports of the republic and in furnishing the troops with supplies.

According to the advices received here the general public in Venezuela received the news of the rupture of diplomatic relations between Venezuela and France with the utmost indifference, but diplomatic circles at Caracas are indignant at the action of the Venezuelan Government in not allowing M. Taigny, the retiring French charge d'affaires, to return to the shore after he had gone on board the French line steamer Martinique at La Guaira Jan. 14, in order to obtain his correspondence.

The Venezuelan Government is considering a project for laying a cable between La Guaira and Porto Rico.

Washington Gives Consent.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 22.—Convinced of the sincerity of the assurances received from France regarding her loyalty to the Monroe doctrine and all that it involves, the Washington Government has given the Paris Government a free hand in the execution of its program for the solution of the Venezuelan problem.

Awaiting Taigny's Report.

Paris, Jan. 22.—It appears to be certain that the French Government has resolved to take no action with regard to Venezuela until the full report of M. Taigny, the late charge d'affaires at Caracas, reaches the Foreign Office. This report is expected to come by way of Washington, where M. Taigny will turn it over to M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador.

Suit Against the Peovince.

Toronto, Jan. 22.—Action has been taken against the Ontario Government by Mrs. McDougall and Miss McDougall, wife and daughter of the late Solicitor to the Provincial Treasury. In affidavits filed at Osgoode Hall they state that they assigned the policies on Mr. McDougall's life to the Government, on the understanding that there should be no prosecution for alleged defalcations in connection with succession duties. Mr. McDougall was prosecuted, but he died before he came to trial. Messrs. Masten, Starr and Spence are acting for Mrs. McDougall in asking for $10,000, from the Government.

Orders Issued For Militia Training.

Ottawa, Jan. 22.—The Militia Department will give authority to train about forty-five thousand men during the present year, the establishment to consist of 29,624 Infantry, 6,325 Cavalry, 5,135 Artillery, 780 Engineers, 185 Guides, 1,166 Army Service Corps, and 90 Signal Corps. This makes a total of 44,801 of the militia, which will constitute the training establishment for all Canada.

Lid on In Victoria, B. C.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 22.—Mayor Morley and aldermen were sworn in Saturday and the new chief magistrate immediately afterwards issued bulletin No. 1 to the police ordering all gambling to stop forthwith. All saloonkeepers were warned. Church lotteries and similar amusements are also tabooed.

Found Dead In a Field.

Thorold, Jan. 22.—Patrick Yourdon, an old citizen of Thorold and lately an inmate of the Industrial Home at Welland, was found dead Saturday in a field about a mile out of town. Yourdon strayed away from the home last Saturday. He leaves a widow and three children.

Teas Get Stale

and you can tell a stale tea the minute you taste it, it lacks the fragrance and the aroma that a fresh tea has.

You Won't Buy Stale Bread

Why buy stale tea? Tea that has been standing around some store for a couple of months or more--generally more. To sell fresh tea it is necessary to buy fresh tea and sell it quick, or it will go stale waiting to be sold. We buy all our tea direct from places of growth and new teas are constantly at our warehouse in Montreal where they are opened, blended, repacked and shipped weekly to our different stores. Consequently our teas are always fresh.

Awful Story Of Hardships.

One of Party of Three G. T. P. Surveyors Reaches Civilization.

Two Companions From Expedition, Who Started With Him Dec. 13, Ill and Maimed, Are Lying in the Woods of New Ontario Without Food—Little Hope of Rescue---A Tramp to Civilization.

Port Arthur, Ont., Jan. 23.—Isolated from the world, ill and without food, Charles Hawkins, an Englishman, lies alone in a fragile little shack in the Lake Nepigon district, awaiting food, medicine and a rescue party which are being hurried to him from the Nepigon headquarters of the Transcontinental Survey. A hundred or more miles to the northwest, in a lonely trapper's shanty, separated by many days' travel from friends and medical aid, J. Beemer lies battling with what must prove a fatal attack of typhoid fever.

Left Camp Dec. 13.

Both men until three weeks ago were members of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad survey, and owing to a quarrel with the engineer in charge decided to walk down to civilization, so left the camp on December 13, in company with a man named Wilson. For the first day everything went as it should, but on the afternoon of the second day the ice gave way as they were crossing a creek which empties into Lake Wawong.

After struggling about in the icy water for some minutes they managed to reach the shore and there collected a quantity of dry sticks with which to build a fire. Then they discovered that their matches had been spoiled by the water, so they were obliged to wring the water from their clothes and continue their journey as rapidly as possible to prevent freezing.

Ten Hours of Agony.

After ten hours of agony they reached a trapper's shanty, and the exile inhabitant of that lone hut received them with open arms. The following morning they were too stiff to move, but on the next day Hawkins and Wilson were able to continue their journey, leaving Beemer in the trapper's care raving in delirium. For three night Hawkins and Wilson wandered about in the bush trying to find their way, each night taking turns to sit up to keep the fire burning.

On the tenth day from camp Hawkins slipped, going down a steep bank, and injured himself so badly that he could not move. For several miles Wilson carried the injured man and at last came to a deserted shanty, where he made Hawkins as comfortable as possible, and again set out for assistance, and in two days met a survey party, whom he directed to the two lone stanties. Small hopes are entertained of finding either of the men alive.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS WIN.

Verdict of the Court Below Quashed in the Court of Appeal.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—The conviction of the four Christian Scientists for conspiracy in connection with the death of Wallace Goodfellow was quashed by the Court of Appeal yesterday. The court held that the charge was wrongly worded and did not come under the head of any indictable offence known by law.

Justice Osler's written judgment reads in part: "It seems to be a mere experiment not to charge the defendants with a conspiracy to commit any indictable offence as described therein, known to the law. It would have been just as sensible to have indicted them for conspiracy 'to deprive him' of a loaf of bread, whereby, etc. The wide field over which the evidence wandered will illustrate the vagueness and uncertainty of the charge. It is very probable, I should say from reading it, that some of the defendants had laid themselves open to prosecution under section 209 or section 21[illegible] of the criminal code."

Justice Meredith rebuked the prosecution, saying that the charge was a "cover all," made with an evident desire to obtain a conviction. "Fairness to the accused should characterize all prosecutions in the name of the sovereign," he stated.

Carl Dodds Drowned.

Mitchell, Jan. 23.—A sad drowning accident happened at Mitchell about 5 o'clock last evening, when Carl, the 7-year-old son of Thomas Dodds, fell into the mill-dam above the flood gates. The little fellow was last seen going over with the tremendous flow of water and carried into the Thames River, where sight was lost of him. The water where he fell in is 22 feet deep.

Nabbed at North Bay.

North Bay, Jan. 23.—The police authorities of Stoke-on-Trent, England, issued a circular on the 8th inst., offering $50 for the arrest of Albert Basnett for embezzlement of a large sum of money. On Jan. 17 Chief Mitchell received one of the circulars, and a few hours afterwards spotted the man and made the arrest yesterday and lodged the absconder behind the bars.

Suspect Foul Play.

Brantford, Jan. 23.—Foul play is now suspected in the death of James Leonard, the farmer from Bright, who was killed by a locomotive here on Saturday night. It is said that Leonard had over $50 on him during the afternoon, while only $10 was found on the body. The police are investigating, and a coroner's jury viewed the remains yesterday morning and adjourned.

Burned Herself to Death.

Ithaca, N. Y., Jan. 23.—Despondent over the recent death of her mother Miss Katie Van Valkenburg, aged 25, of Van Etten, burned herself to death yesterday. She saturated her clothing with kerosene oil, and set fire to herself with a match.

King Edward Buys Colt for $19,000.

London, Jan. 23.—The sales of English thoroughbred yearlings at Doncaster and Newmarket have come to a close, and for the youngsters some fancy prices have been recorded. A lot of 26 fetched a total of $228,900, or an average of a fraction over $8,806. Acting for King Edward, Lord Marcus Beresford bought the chestnut colt Cynosure, by Cyllene out of Nememoosha, for $19,000, and he has been sent to the King's stables.

Gunner Scott Meets Death.

Kingston, Jan. 23.—Sunday afternoon Gunner Scott of "A" battery, aged 24, broke through the ice on the harbor while skating. He sank twice before rescued, but soon after died from exposure. His home was in Prince Edward Island.

OUR PRICES

We claim and guarantee our prices to be as low or lower, value considered than can be found anywhere in CANADA.

Fifty years of merchandising experience places us in a position to know what GOOD VALUES are and being in constant touch with the largest markets we enjoy inside prices.

Establishments in large cities as Toronto and Montreal have, owing to greater land values, higher rents, etc., expense bills proportionately many times larger than ours.

These expense bills must be paid and can only be met by being added to the retail prices.

Thus while we enjoy ideal buying advantages our lower ratio of expense enables us to mark our goods at a lower margin than is possible in the larger centres.

If you contemplate a purchase, investigate our values before sending out of the city.—It will save you money.

Bole's Bail Bonds.

The Toronto Globe of the 19th inst. tells its readers without a word of comment, that—

"The Attorney-General's Department has received a check for $1,960, the amount, less commission, of the estreatment of the $2,000 bail bonds of Duncan Bole. He was charged with committing unlawful acts in the West Elgin election of January, 1899, and Messrs. W. H. Morrison and M. B. Stafford of Shedden, furnished bonds for him to the extent of $1,000 each. Some weeks ago the Government ordered the commencement of proceedings for the estreatment of the bonds, and these, as previously reported, were successful. In addition to the $2,000 collected, the bondsmen also paid $102.90, the amount of costs in the proceedings."

Why did not the Globe tell its readers that this Duncan Bole was one of the prime movers in the West Elgin election frauds, and not merely say "he was charged with committing unlawful acts," and it might have added that he was spirited out of the country by the party which he and others, through fraud, assisted in keeping in power, leaving his bondsmen to the kind consideration of the Ross Government knowing it would never estreat the bonds. It might also have informed its readers that this same Bole was appointed an agent of the Life Insurance company of which Premier Ross was the president and was supported by that company while residing in a warmer climate for the benefit of his health far from the claims which the election law of Canada and his bondsmen had upon him.

Had the Ross Government, or the Grit party under any other Premier remained in power, Bole nor his bondsmen would never have been punished. On the contrary, some of the Liberal organs have been condemning the present Attorney-General for compelling these bondsmen to pay the face of the bonds.

Should not the "party of purity" fly to the aid of these bondsmen? If not, the Hon. George Ross might, out of the sum presented to him by his party and friends, recoup the $2,000 to the supporters of the Bole stripe of politics, who did the work which kept him in power so long?

It's doubtful, honors being easy. Ross has been rewarded for his party services, the bondsmen have had to pay $2000 for Bole's escape, and Bole is rusticating in a warmer climate than Canada, acting as agent for the Ross Life Assurance Company. What more do they want? The only sufferers appear to be the bondsmen. Does it not serve them right?

DISHONESTY DENOUNCED

REV. DR. CROTHERS, FORMERLY OF THIS CITY, SCORES SOME PRESENT DAY PRACTICES.

Peterboro Review: Speaking in George St. Church yesterday morning on Paul as a preacher, about his being given a vision and commanded not to be afraid, Rev. Dr. Crothers said so far as preaching to-day was concerned, there was no lack of topics.

The great plague of this country at the present time was not diphtheria, or smallpox, or consumption, but dishonesty. When a member of the Legislature attempted to bribe another member from his political allegiance, we saw the effect of such an act filtering all down through society, for, did we not read in the public prints to-day all through patrons of cheese factories skimming and watering their milk, or apples being falsely packed, the largest ones being on top? The doctor severely denounced the sin of dishonesty as revealed in many parts of the country to-day, and pleaded for a strict observance of the commandment, "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

THOUSANDS DIE OF CONSTIPATION.

No condition causes so many incurable diseases as constipation. It not only prevents the kidneys from eliminating the poisonous wastes, but causes anaemia, stomach trouble and indigestion. Why won't you use Dr. Hamilton's Pills and get cured? This excellent medicine restores normal bowel action in one night. Thousands say so. Your system will be pure and clean, you'll be free from headaches, no more sour stomach—in short you'll have jovial spirits and perfect good health. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are sold everywhere, 25c a box. Get the genuine.

The expressed intention to lay before the Council the names of all civic servants who are behind in their taxes is certainly a move in the right direction. The names should also be made public. There are, of course, several arguments in favor of adopting the plan favored by the Council, some of which were introduced by the Mayor last night.

ABUSE OF PRIVILEGE.

(Toronto Star.)

Only a few days ago, when Mr. Phillips was placed under arrest in connection with the York Loan affair, he is reported to have exclaimed to the officer who took him in charge, "I did nothing except under legal advice."

The remark made by Mr. Phillips shows the point of view that prevails in the business community. The lawyer is coming to be the business man's father confessor. Questions of right and wrong disappear, and a man does what will make money for him; his lawyer grants him absolution. It is which will pay him the greatest profits, and it is for the lawyer to show him how he can do it without becoming liable under the law framed to prevent the doing of that very thing.

It is not for work of this nature that lawyers are made a privileged class. Their professional privileges arise out of the assumption that they assist justice and are not its expert enemies. The Law society should take up the question discussed by Chancellor Boyd, and not let it blow over with the occasion, or public opinion will some day take it up in its rough way.

Sir, — Through your columns, always open to right the wrong, I would take exception to a statement made in one of our leading churches, i.e., That "the people are responsible for the late closing habit so prevalent on Saturday nights." If the merchants ALL agreed to close at nine, how could the people shop? But "there's the rub." Each one is afraid the other will get the last quarter. If our merchants would work together and support our Board of Trade as they should, this trouble would soon be a thing of the past. Many of our best stores were closed at nine last Saturday night; let us support these by our patronage, thus showing a decided approval of good methods.

Sir John Macdonald had one implacable assailant, whom time does not soften nor the grave disarm. That is Sir Richard Cartwright. From his retirement in the Senate Sir Richard emerged on Saturday to belittle Sir John's part in Confederation. Luckily Sir John had the assistance of Liberals in that nation-making work. If he had done it alone Sir Richard would now be denouncing Confederation as the most stupendous blunder and criminal folly in history.

WIPE OUT COUNTY COUNCILS

RADICAL PROPOSAL OF MR. JOHN AULD, M. P. P.

Amherstburg, Jan. 22. — Mr. John Auld, M.P.P., believes that the County Councils can be dispensed with. About the only business transacted by the County Councils, he says, is equalization of assessments, and in numerous counties special commissions have had to be appointed to do this work. He believes that the entire business done by County Councils could be done as well by the different municipal Councils in each county, and the taxpayer be relieved of the expense of the present body. He will advocate this at next session.

Saturday Night Shopping.

Peterboro Review: Although the process of time has brought us well on the road of 1906 there appears to be no improvement in the matter of shopping early on Saturday nights in Peterboro. It is the same old story and citizens may be seen in many stores long after the hour of ten o'clock, making purchases. It seems to be an utter impossibility to get some people to do their buying early. They give little heed to the extra work they are imposing on clerks and particularly employees who have to do the delivering of parcels. It is safe to say there is not one in ten but who could have all his or her shopping done by nine o'clock if they would only put forth a little effort and make a small sacrifice.

Perhaps the purchasing public is not entirely to blame and if the merchants would unite they would do something to bring about a more desirable state of affairs. A little "unionism" in their case would accomplish a great deal. As it is now the long Saturday and its great amount of work is so trying and wearisome that comparatively few persons engaged in business places—particularly in groceries, restaurants, bakeries and barber shops—are in a fit physical condition to properly enjoy the day of rest and to attend the services in the different city sanctuaries on Sunday. The majority of those employed work from fourteen to sixteen hours on Saturday which is an unusually busy day, and, when they drag themselves home at night they are so tired that no one can reasonably blame them for "sleeping in" on Sunday, the only morning of the week when they can do so.

The subject of early Saturday night closing is an old one. Now and then a spasmodic effort has been made to remedy the existing state of affairs, but as the years go on and we boast of our progressive civilization and ameliorated conditions, it is doubtful if, during the last decade, there has been any material improvement or decided advance. But constant, consistent, aggressive agitation is bound to win in the end and those, who are doing their utmost to further this very desirable object of early Saturday closing, should not despair.

ST. PETERSBURG.

The Terrors of Its Climate in the Spring and Autumn.

"There is something repulsive in the climate of St. Petersburg in the early spring and autumn," says a writer, "when the thermometer often falls 30 degrees in a few hours, when the roads are ankle deep in snow broth or mud, when the winds blow raw and cold from every quarter of the compass and the quick moving droskies shower the abominations of the roads impartially upon noble and peasant. It is no consolation to the visitor to know that the Neva is sealed by ice early in November or late in October. Long indeed before the frost king has stalked down to the latitude of St. Petersburg the lordly river is completely blocked. Great ice sheets from stormy Ladoga float down the current. They crash against the mighty buttresses of the bridges, cling to the banks and gradually accumulate until the whole length of the river, which unites the greatest lake in Europe with the gulf of Finland, is completely choked. The ice is reared higgledy piggledy at every conceivable angle. It is a strange sight, this broad stretch of water, impassable and icebound while the temperature of the surrounding country is often many degrees above freezing point."

PELICAN ISLAND.

Home of All the Pelicans of the East Coast of Florida.

In that long, narrow lagoon on the east coast of Florida known as Indian river there is a muddy islet three or four acres in extent. Originally it doubtless did not differ from hundreds of similar neighboring islets, but, for some reason past finding out, this islet, and this alone, forms the nesting resort, the home, of all the pelicans of the Indian river, if not, indeed, of the east coast of Florida. The brown pelican, unlike its white cousin, nests normally in low trees and bushes, and there is evidence that when the original pelican colonists landed on the islet which now bears their name it was well grown with black and red mangroves, in which the birds placed their scaffolding of sticks. Exceptionally low temperature and high water—perhaps also excessive use by the birds, which sometimes build as many as seven nests in a single mangrove—have killed tree after tree, until at present only three serviceable trees remain. Still the birds come back, the impelling motive which prompts them to return to this particular spot being evidently stronger than that which induced them to nest in trees.—Frank M. Chapman in Century.

ACTION OF THE RAIN.

The Wonderful Factor It Is in the Disintegration of Rocks.

The rain falling on the rocks sinks into every crack and crevice, carrying with it into these fissures surface material which has been degraded by the weather and thus affording a matrix sufficient to start the growth of vegetation and afterward to maintain the plants. The fibers and roots of these plants, bushes and trees thus brought into life, growing and expanding, act as wedges to split up the surface of the rock and to commence the process of wearing away. From this quality of destruction a large class of plants derive the name of saxifrages, or rock breakers, from their roots penetrating into the minute fissures in search of water and so assisting in the process of disintegration. In winter the water collected in the hollows and crevices becomes frozen and, expanding as it changes into ice, acts like a charge of blasting material in breaking up the rock. The pieces thus detached become further disintegrated by frost and weather and, being rolled over and over and rubbed against each other as they are carried away down the mountain torrents, are ground gradually smaller and smaller till from fragments of rock they become bowlders, then pebbles and finally sand. As the mountain stream merges into the river the pebbles and coarse sand continue to be rolled along the bottom of the channel, while the ragillaceous particles and salts become mingled with the water and flow on with it either in suspension or solution.

While this disintegrating process is going on inland the rocks and cliffs on the coast exposed to the sea are suffering degradation by a similar process and are also being worn away by the incessant action of the waves of the ocean beating on them and attacking them not only with the impact of the water, but also with the fragments broken off, which, dashed against the face from which they have eroded, are thus used as implements of destruction.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

Its Location a Mystery That Will Probably Never Be Solved.

The location of the earthly paradise or garden of Eden is still a matter of dispute among orientalists and Scriptural scholars of highest reputation. Some have endeavored to locate it by the fruits and mineral productions named in the Biblical descriptions as they appear in the second chapter of Genesis; others by the rivers mentioned in verses 11 to 14 of the above mentioned chapter. The weight of investigation and tradition inclines to an agreement that the Tigris and the Euphrates of modern geography are the third and fourth rivers mentioned in the Biblical description of the garden. Those who agree so far differ widely as to what rivers should now be regarded as the ancient Pison and Gihon. The Buddhistic scholars, although they reject our Bible in the greater part, incline to the opinion that the Pison is the sacred Ganges, and that the Gihon is none other than the Nile. As to the last, it is altogether probable that they are correct on that point, because the Biblical account plainly says that Gihon "compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia."

Some investigations confirm that Eden was a spot of comparatively small area located on the tablelands of what is now Armenia, from which rise the Tigris and the Euphrates. A few scholars of distinction argue that the Adamic paradise was located in Africa in the vicinity of the mountains of the Moon. Still another school of orientalists locate the celebrated garden in the vicinity of the ancient city of Babylon.

You will notice, however, that none of these theorists has been able to get the four rivers mentioned in the Biblical account properly located. Neither have they found a place where one great river "separates into four heads." This being the case, it is hardly necessary to add that the exact location of Eden is a mystery that will probably never be solved.

The Scott of the Middle Ages.

John Florissant, born in 1337, is called the Walter Scott of the middle ages. He was a churchman and a scholar. Living as he did in unsettled times, before nationality had become well developed, he was destitute of patriotism and, therefore, more reliable as a cosmopolitan chronicler. He traveled in France, Scotland, Italy and other countries. His chronicles are the result of his own observations and are valued as a faithful portrayal of the places, customs and manners of the people during his time, although not so reliable as history.

The Word "Opera."

The word "opera" is a case of verbal specialization. Yet the Latin word meant originally nothing more definite than "work." The specialization, however, was thorough even in the time of Dryden, who defined an opera as "a poetical tale of fiction, represented by verbal and instrumental musick, adorned with scenes, machines and dancing," but the specialization is scarcely more remarkable than that of "drama," which means just "deed," "action," or of "poet," which is simply "maker."

A Pithy Sermon.

Here is the pithiest sermon ever preached: "Our ingress into life is naked and bare, our progress through life is trouble and care, our egress out of it we know not where; but, doing well here, we shall do well there. I could not tell more by preaching a year."

He that is ungrateful has no fault but one. All other crimes may pass for virtues in him.—Young.

A MEMORABLE TRAGEDY.

It Grew Out of the Last Great Slave Auction in This Country.

The last great slave auction held in this country occurred just a year and a half before the war—in October, 1859—at the race track in Savannah. The slaves were the property of Pierce Butler, a picturesque and prominent figure at that day in Philadelphia society, who is today only remembered as having been the husband of Fanny Kemble, the actress, reader and author. His family name was Mease, but he inherited a fortune in lands and slaves from his grandfather, Major Pierce Butler of South Carolina, on condition that he should take the latter's name.

Butler's inveterate passion for gambling got him into financial difficulties. It is said that he lost $26,000 on a single hand—four deuces against four kings held by his opponent.

Finally, to meet his losses, Butler was forced to sell his slaves. There were 988 of them in all. The sale took two days and netted $303,850. Butler had chosen a good time to sell. A year later his negroes would not have been worth a dollar a head. But the sale would have been more profitable had it not been announced as one of the conditions that no division of families would be permitted; hence in order to secure a good slave buyers often had to take with them infirm or aged relatives. Out of this limitation grew a memorable tragedy. Tom Pate, a well known Vicksburg trader, bought at the sale a man, his two sisters and his wife, with the guarantee that they should not be separated. Disregarding this, Pate sold the sisters, one to Pat Somers, a brother trader, and the other to a resident of St. Louis. What legal rights a negro had in the south were well protected. Somers was told of the guarantee, and he sent the girl back to Pate and demanded his money. A quarrel was the result, and Somers was shot dead. Ten days later his nephew killed Pate and died from wounds received. The feud was kept up until every male bearing the name of Pate was wiped out, and then the war liberated the sisters.

Got What He Asked For.

Among the best of the stories told by Russel, one of the Scotsman's former editors, was an instance of the innate cleverness of the newspaper boy. Russel had entered a train at Prince's street station, Edinburgh, one Friday, when a smart little newsboy immediately called out to him, "Scotsman, sir?" "How much?" said Russel jokingly. "A penny, sir," replied the boy. "Oh," said the editor. "I don't want today's Scotsman, but if you could give me tomorrow's I would give you a sovereign for it." "Here you are, sir!" delightedly shouted the youngster and handed him the Weekly Scotsman, which bore the date of the following day. Russel paid the sovereign.

Little Red Riding-hood.

Little Red Riding-hood is the heroine of a well known nursery tale, which relates her encounter with a wolf in the forest, the arts by which he deceived her and her tragical end. Grimm derived the story from tradition current in the region bordering upon the river Main, in Germany. The legend is, however, widely disseminated. In the Swedish variation of the story Little Red Riding-hood takes refuge in a tree, the wolf meanwhile gnawing at the roots, when her lover, alarmed by her cries, comes up just in time to see the tree fall and his ladylove crushed beneath it.

The Old Time Almanac.

An old minister in a Massachusetts town tells how implicitly the people of a generation ago trusted the weather predictions of the "Farmer's Almanac." One of his flock had died, and the pastor was consoling his widow. The subject of the funeral came up, and he asked when it was to be. "Wait, doctor," said she; "we must have it on a pleasant day." She hurriedly searched the almanac, and the day was set.

He Obeyed the Law.

The professor swims from the sinking boat and climbs up on the bank. Then, dashing in again, he returns to the wreck and rescues his wife.

"But why didn't you save her before?" asks the captain in amazement.

"Ah, my dear sir," was the learned man's reply, "I was bound to save myself first. Self preservation is the highest law of nature."

No Quarrel.

Housewife—And you left your last place because of a quarrel with your mistress? Applicant—Not a quarrel, mum. Housewife—How was it, then? Applicant—Well, mum, she was afther interferin' wid me, an' I spoke to her as one lady to another.—Cleveland Leader.

VOLCANIC ACTIVITY.

A Theory to Explain the Source and Cause of Eruptions.

In a volume on volcanoes Professor C. Doelter undertakes to tell why volcanoes have eruptions. Melted rock such as is flung from Vesuvius requires a temperature of 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit, so that it becomes liquid only far down in the earth, perhaps sixty or a hundred miles. Below the outer crust of cooled and solidified rocks there must be a large zone of rock which still remains solid because its temperature is less than that of the melting point corresponding to the pressure under which it rests, and below that again there must be rock or magma in a state of fusion. It is to this magma that Professor Doelter looks for the primary source of all volcanic activity. At the same time the depth at which this primary reservoir of magma lies and the pressure under which it is confined are so great that a direct eruption from it is inconceivable, but when, by movements in the overlying crust or otherwise, a channel is opened the magma may rise to a depth where it is surrounded by rock at a lower temperature than the melting point. In these circumstances solidification begins.

From all volcanoes large quantities of steam, of carbonic acid and other gases are evolved, and the course of every lava stream is marked by clouds of steam evolved from the cooling lava. At one time—and the idea is still common—this steam was supposed to have been derived from sea water which had obtained access to the molten lava while still underground, but this explanation is now generally rejected, being impossible in some cases and inadequate in all, and the greater part of the steam and other emanations from a volcano are now regarded as directly derived from an original store in the interior of the earth. However this may be, it is certain that the magma from which volcanic lava is derived is not merely in a state of igneous fusion, but is combined with water and gases, which are given off as it solidifies and by their escape frequently form miniature volcanoes on the surface of lava streams.

If the solidification takes place underground the steam and gases are expelled, and, if there is no free escape, pressure may increase till it becomes great enough to overcome the resistance of the overlying rock and so lead to an eruption and the formation of a volcano, whose character will depend on the nature of the reservoir from which the eruption took place.

The French Student.

Some of the French students are miserably poor. No one knows how much poverty is hidden under those long curls and pale faces. Sometimes in the libraries in the evening one sees a student take a piece of dry bread out of his pocket and munch it while studying, that being his whole supper. There was one student who always walked with his coat collar turned up. He was found frozen dead one morning. He had hardly anything on underneath his coat. But while American students who find themselves hard up will do manual labor, if nothing better can be found, a French student would rather starve than do so, and as one of them expressed it, "Rather starve during nine years and not do manual labor than live fairly well and finish the same studies in three years and work for a living."—Paris Letter in New York Post.

Houses In Siam.

In Caspar Whitney's book "Jungle Trails and Jungle Peoples" he says: "The Siamese builds his house of one story and on stilts for several reasons. The first, no doubt, is to avoid the unpardonable sin of living in a lower story while an upper one is occupied by other human beings, especially women, who in Siam are not regarded as of much importance. The second, and I should say the most practical, if not the most aesthetic, reason is to have a waste gate easy of access for the continually flowing saliva from betel nut chewing and household refuse, which may thus be easily disposed of through the crevices of the openly constructed floor."

Napoleon's Mother.

Napoleon's mother was as much of a soldier as her great son. On one occasion, when he wanted his own way, she gave him to understand that the first duty of a soldier was obedience, and that if he wished to be a soldier he must, first of all things, learn to obey. He had, to the end of his life, the highest regard for his mother. At his court she was styled "Mme. Mere." Speaking of the influence of the mother on the character of the child, he said, "The future destiny of the child is always the work of the mother."

"Excuse me, sir, but you have taken my umbrella."

"But this umbrella has my initials on it."

"I can't help that, sir. You will have to see the man who gave it to me."

"Where did he get it?"

"He said it was loaned to him by a friend who has since moved away."

A Painful Difference.

"You take your roast beef rare, do you not?" asked the host.

"Not rare," answered the man who is impoverished, but grammatical—"rarely."

A VENERABLE FICTION.

The Ceremony of Carrying the Purse In the House of Lords.

When the lord chancellor enters the house of lords to preside over its deliberations he is accompanied by his "purse bearer." This functionary, however, does not carry the purse of the lord chancellor, which would be a weighty responsibility, as his lordship draws a salary of £10,000 a year. The purse the "purse bearer" solemnly carries as, arrayed in court dress, he precedes the lord chancellor to and from the house of lords is a gorgeous satchel embroidered with the royal arms and other heraldic devices in white and gold and lined with the richest silk. It is supposed to contain the great seal. As a matter of fact, that emblem of a mighty sovereignty is never in the satchel. If it were, the responsibility of the "purse bearer" would be great—much greater indeed than if he had to bear a purse that carried a salary of £10,000 a year.

The ceremony of carrying the purse in the house of lords is but one of the many venerable fictions which play a picturesque part in the parliamentary procedure. The purse is placed on the woolsack. It indicates that the lord chancellor is in possession of the great seal and therefore entitled to perform his duties as speaker of the house of lords.—London Globe.

THREE WAYS TO SUBDUE.

A Story of Buddha and the Trainer of Elephants.

From Hindoo tales that have come through the Chinese, who give us most of our Indian records—the rishis were dreamers and not recorders—we have this story of Buddha:

The lord demanded one day of an elephant trainer what were the means he employed to subdue his beasts.

"Three," said the mahout. "One applies to the mouth a hook of iron, which he attaches to breast clasp, and the elephant cannot lift his neck. Then one gives less and less food till thin and weak and finally beats."

"And what does one accomplish by these means?" asked he-of-the-yellow-light.

"The crochet de fer serves to overcome the resistance of the head; the deprivation of food and drink, the violence of the body; the stick subdues the spirit. After this, all is easy."

The nimbused-bronze-one said:

"I also have three ways to subdue. First, by perfect sincerity I control what goes forth from the mouth; by affection and charity I harmonize the irregularities of the body; by inward vibration of thought I calm the spirit. Did you ever think of trying these on the elephant?"

FAMILY HISTORY.

Universal Interest In Knowing What Our Forefathers Did.

"Why don't you trace your family history?" The common reply to this question is summed up in the words, "If I knew how to go about it I should enjoy doing so." For few are the individuals who do not at times feel a longing to open the book of the past and read the records of their ancestors. Edward Everett felt that longing when he wrote, "There is no man of any culture who does not take some interest in what was done by his forefathers." The desire to trace the descent of one's family and to transmit the record to one's successors is as old as life—a strand in the binding cord of filial love.

So prevalent has the desire been among all nations to which either history or tradition extends that it has been regarded by many writers as an instinct in human nature. Observing its universality, the historian Hume began his history of England with these lines: "The curiosity entertained by all nations of inquiry into the exploits and adventures of their ancestors commonly excites a regret that the history of the ages should be involved in obscurity, uncertainty and tradition."

How to Roast the Succulent Oyster.

Select large oysters and have them scrubbed thoroughly, then place them in the oven in a large tin with the round side of the shells down, so that when they open the liquor will not be lost. As soon as they do open remove the upper shell, sprinkle them with salt, pepper and chopped parsley, add a little butter and serve hot as possible on a bed of water cress. Oysters served in this way make an excellent first course at dinner if accompanied by thin slices of brown bread and butter.

A Counter Attraction.

A recent visitor to Beaconsfield churchyard asked a middle aged native of the village to be directed to the graves of Burke and Waller. The man said he had no recollection of any such persons having been buried there. "But," he added, "you see that little chemist's shop over there? That's the shop where Devereux, the trunk murder man, used to be an apprentice!"

Not There.

"Judge," said Mrs. Starvem to the magistrate, who had recently come to board with her, "I'm particularly anxious to have you try this chicken soup."

"I have tried it," replied the magistrate, "and my decision is that the chicken has proved an alibi."—Exchange.

A Cure.

"Has your health improved of late?"

"Yes. I've been visiting among strangers who didn't keep talking to me about it all the time."

TWO CHILDREN BURNED.

Elder Sister Caught Fire While Cleaning Ruff With Gasoline.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—Two children, aged 1 and 3 years, a boy and girl, of Fabien Sayer, of Hintonburg, were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the home last evening.

An older daughter, aged 23 years, was cleaning a neck ruff with gasoline. She was near the stove when the gasoline ignited, the flames leaping up into her face and arms. In agony Miss Sayer ran to the door to throw herself into the snow, and in doing so scattered the fire through the house.

The two little tots who perished were sleeping in a corner of the room, one in a cradle and the other in a swinging bed.

Left $4,000,000.

St. Catharines, Jan. 23.—The late Thomas R. Merritt left an estate valued at about $1,000,000, principally in stocks in the Imperial Bank, of which he was president, the Suspension Bridge Co., Security Loan & Savings Co. of St. Catharines, and the St. Catharines and Welland Canal Gas Co. Beyond a few of the small legacies the estate will not be divided until the death of Mrs. Merritt.

MANDY'S MANDOLIN.

My gal's jest come from boardin' school
  An' what do yew suppose
She's fetched to while away the time
  Besides her style an' clothes!
It looks 'bout like a crookneck squash,
  Except the handle's straight,
An' it's got strings, an' all them things,
  An' Mandy thinks it's great!

I guess she's named it for herself,
  She calls it 'mandylin';
It's somethin' like a fiddle, tho'
  It ain't so wide an' thin,
She don't saw 'crost it with no bow
  But picks an' picks away,
An' keeps a-pickin', seems to me,
  But don't git down to play.

Now I like music, but I want
  Some noise; a hull brass band
Ain't none tew much for me, but this Thing I can't understand,
It's "tinkle, tinkle, tweedle-dee,"
  Or "pinky, panky, ping,"
With Mandy's fingers slidin' up
  And down each tiny string.

An' Mandy she says "paw" and "maw,"
  An' picks her mandylin,
An' gits her skimpy dresses on
  An' asks the neighbors in.
Then all thet we kin hear except
  When some one's ast to sing
Is "tinkle, tinkle, tweedle-dee,"
  Or "pinky, panky, ping."

Maybe it's all right, I hope it is,
  But I'll be called a "jay,"
Ef they had any such affairs
  'Way back in our day.
No, sir; an' I'll be called a chump,
  Or somethin' wuss ag'in
Ef I'd married ma ef she
  Hed picked a mandylin!

MEXICO'S LOST MINES

ANCIENT BEDS OF TREASURE THAT CANNOT NOW BE LOCATED.

The Romance Which Hovers Around the Famous Hidden Mine of Talopa. Superstition and Cunning of the Native Indians.

Of the many mines which were worked by the Spaniards and which gave them such fabulous returns for their labor scarcely one can be located today. Many romantic stories as to their whereabouts have been followed up, only to be met with defeat.

One of the richest of those mines was probably Tarasca, about which Humboldt has written. It was worked long before the Spaniards arrived in Mexico, and the gold and silver were made into ornaments by the aborigines. A family in Guaymas has a necklace of flying fish purchased from a Pima chief, who said that the metal was dug from Tarasca. Later the mine was acquired by the crown of Spain and was worked, with the exception of a period during the Apache war, till the French intervention, when the shafts were said to have been concealed by the administrator, Don Juan Moreno, who was forced to seek safety in flight. After the restoration of peace the location of Tarasca was looked for in vain, though the mine now known as Ubarbo is supposed to be the same. When rediscovered years ago Ubarbo was found to have been extensively worked and the shafts concealed under earth and brush. Rich pillars of ore were found in the drifts, and the mine corresponds in many respects with the descriptions of Tarasca found in the archives of the American consulate at Guaymas.

The fame of Tarasca is eclipsed by the romance which hovers around the lost mine of Talopa. A Mexican of great wealth who was much interested in the subject made a trip to Madrid to search for data on the subject. He found absolutely nothing to prove that such a mine had ever been worked by the crown of Spain, and there is nothing in Mexican archives to establish the facts. Quite as trustworthy as the written documents are the traditions among the Pima Indians. They maintain that Talopa exists and a few claim to know its whereabouts. Small quantities of very rich ore are occasionally sold at the mountain mining camps, but all attempts to follow the Indians to the spot where it is found or to bribe them to reveal it have been unavailing. Their wants are few, and they believe that should they reveal the secret they would drop dead. About six years ago an old Pima chief fell ill in one of the valley pueblos and was cured by a Mexican lady so well known and universally respected that her statement is taken without question. The old Indian returned to his tribe and from time to time sent his benefactress rich bits of ore which assayed thousands of dollars to the ton.

All her efforts to get him to lead her to the mine were fruitless, for the great spirit would strike him dead for the offense. The following summer the senora went to the mountains and lived among the Indians for three months, doctoring the sick and giving presents of ribbons and gay calico to the women. She became convinced that the spot whence the rich ore came was Talopa. Finally the old chief admitted that the mine was worked when he was a boy and gave permission to two women of the tribe to lead the senora within a few yards of the mine so that she might discover it for herself and save him from the penalty of sudden death for revealing it. The three women traveled mostly at night, passing through deep canyons and over lofty mountains.

The fourth night some hours after dark the Indian women led her into a deep canyon and paused before a large rock. In the dim moonlight an old arrastra was seen and across the canyon a large ore dump. The woman gathered bits of ore from the dump, but was hurried away by the squaws, who said they would be killed if they delayed beyond the time mentioned by their chief. They traveled till the moon went down, rested a few hours and went on before daylight, completely baffling the Mexican woman as to the route they had taken. They arrived at the pueblo at nightfall, having taken four days to reach the mine and but one to return, the obvious conclusion being that she had been led in a circle. Despairing of gaining more, the woman returned to her home, but she hopes at some future time to continue the search.

Two other mines which are supposed to have been the property of the crown during the Spanish occupation and of which there are many romantic tales are the Reina Mercedes and the Casa Blanca. Both have been probably rediscovered and worked under other names. The Reina Mercedes is supposed to be one of the rich Conchena group and the Casa Blanca the Casitas mine. Near the latter is an ancient mine, now worked by a Mexican company, which has open cuts on the surface for more than a mile and several miles of underground workings. Near this mine, where once a large church stood, which has long since fallen into ruins, two copper bells have been found. They bear the name of Guadalupe de Talopa, thus leading many to the belief that the Tajos mine is the long lost Talopa.

WONDERS OF SLEEP.

The Effects of Slumber Upon the Brain and the Heart.

"Shakespeare," said a scientist, "called sleep the ape of death. That is a striking name for a striking thing. Sleep is a wonderland. Let us explore it.

"Self hypnotism is a mysterious force that we can exercise on ourselves in sleep alone. We are all self hypnotists. We all, on certain nights, tell ourselves firmly that we must not oversleep, that the next morning—at 4, at 5 or 6 precisely—we must wake up. And we do wake up. Our sleeping selves respond to the hypnotic suggestion made the night before by our waking selves. That is mysterious and striking, isn't it? Still more mysterious and striking, though, is the fact of our keeping track of the time somehow in our slumber. How on earth do we do this?

"It is impossible to do without sleep. Men have slept standing, walking, even running. They have slept in battle, under fire, with guns roaring on all sides. They have slept in unendurable and deadly pain.

"There is no torture equal to that which the deprivation of sleep entails. The Chinese are the cruelest folk on earth and the most ingenious of torturers. Well, the Chinese place the deprivation of sleep at the head of their torture list.

"Sleep is a state of rest. The heart rests in sleep. The heart is a rhythmic muscle, not one that never reposes, but one that works at short shifts, like a puddler, a moment on, a moment off. Well, when we sleep the heart's shifts of rest are redoubled. It works, then, one on, two off, getting, indeed, pretty nearly as much repose as we do.

"The brain in sleep becomes pale and sinks below the level of the skull. When we are awake the brain is high and full and ruddy.

"Not only the brain and heart, but even the tear glands, rest in sleep. That is why when we awake we always rub our eyes. The rubbing is an instinctive action that stimulates the stagnant tear glands and causes them to moisten properly our eyes, all dried from their inaction."

THE ENGLISH PARLIAMENT.

Why Its Houses Were Built Upon the River Bank.

Wellington once declared that the most exciting moment of his life was not in any of his great battles, but that in which he had to forbid William IV. to attend a public banquet in the city during a time of great national excitement. Of the millions of people who every year see the English houses of parliament, how many imagine that their position was determined by strategic considerations? No one nowadays can think of the palace of Westminster in any other position than that which it occupies. But when the old houses were burned down and the task of rebuilding faced there was a proposition to establish them on or near the site of St. James' palace. Wellington resolutely put down his foot on the proposal.

The site suggested, its advocates pointed out, would be better as regards centrality and convenience than any other. But to the argument of the duke there could then be no answer. "With a vast and growing population, such as yours in London," he said, "you must never make it possible that you can be surrounded. You must build your houses of parliament upon the river, so that the means of ingress and egress are safe and that the populace cannot exact their demands by sitting down around you." Sir William Fraser, in whose memoirs the story is recalled, mentioned it to Napoleon III. just before the death of the latter. "What wisdom!" he said. "What wisdom!" And it set him musing upon the different turn which the history of France might have taken if in other ways as great precautions had been observed in his own case.

Hard Luck.

"Las' night I dreamed I died an' went ter heaben," said Toot. "St. Peter met me at de gate, an' I ax him ef I could come in. He sez he hatter weigh me 'ginst mah sins fus', an' wid dat he git out a big pair ob baluncés an' put me in one pan an' a great big bag in de udder. De bag outweigh me way yondah, so he sez I can't come in. I ax him foh ter tell me whut's in dat bag, an' he bus' it open fo' me. Well, suh, it wuz plumb full ob watahmillions an' chickens! An' I sez, sez I, 'Ef yo'll leabe mah sins out yere wid me,' sez I, 'I won't ax ter come in.' Sez he, 'All right.' But, doggone mah skin, I wake up 'fo' I could git ter dem t'ings!"

Tough.

"You should have heard Bangs roasting Goodley last night. He used some pretty hard words."

"Yes, but they didn't seem so hard to Bangs last night as they did this morning."

"How do you mean?"

"He had to eat them this morning."

Discouraging.

Gaston—I tell you, old man, Miss Watkyns is a mighty sensible girl—the most sensible girl, I think, I ever knew. Alphonse—I think you're right, my boy. I wouldn't advise you to propose to her.

"Yes. I can see the end of a ladder peeping through it."

"We're getting there at last," cried the girl excitedly. "See if you can get through that hole you've made."

Guthrie squeezed through the aperture with some small difficulty and then turned to help his companion. She was of slighter build, and so she managed it more easily. Then, giving themselves a shake to knock off the thick of the oak dust, the pair set off down the passage toward the other door which lay so invitingly open before them.

They never reached it.

Suddenly they felt the wooden flooring yield under their feet, and, with a startled scream, Dolly clutched instinctively at her companion. Guthrie tried to jerk his body backward, and his hands shot out wildly in search of a hold. But with a squeak of triumph—as it seemed—the floor swung bodily from beneath them, and they fell like stones through space.

But they did not drop far. In about ten feet they came into contact with a shoot of boards and went off sliding down that at a slightly lessened pace.

Then their involuntary slide ceased almost as suddenly as it had begun. They reached a terminus and fetched up with a jerk. Billows of blinding dust sprang out on all sides, and for some ten minutes they seemed to be in danger of suffocation. But as soon as they ceased to flounder about the stuff gradually subsided, and they were able to cough their throats clear and look around them to see what sort of a pit it was into which they had fallen.

The pivoted trapdoor in the floor above had snapped to again, and, although the shoot of planks below it showed certain new made scorings, everything else was much the same as it must have been before. Neither of the pair had fortunately been hurt, for beneath their feet was a stack of mouldering rushes, which had broken their fall, and as it had been placed exactly at the foot of the slide they decided that it had obviously been meant to serve just that purpose. Before them was a small door ajar, through which came the light which showed them these details of their prison.

With a startled scream Dolly clutched instinctively at her companion.

With eager curiosity they went on through this door and found themselves in a snug, square room, with a low wooden roof, in the center of which was a ship's skylight. Through this the sun was streaming in shafts of radiating light, which focused themselves with an accuracy that seemed almost purposeful upon another tar letter inscription scrawled over the door which had admitted them. This was the legend which it bore:

"Ye Bobo, Hys Trappa. Nick Colepepper Fecit, Anno Dom: 1588. Sept: XXiiij."

"Look!" cried Dolly, "there's more writing! What's a bobo, Alan?"

"Spanish for fool, I believe," said the young man. "'Ye bobo, hys trappe;' modern English, 'booby trap.' Your pirate ancestor was a bit of a humorist, it seems."

"A booby trap!" exclaimed Miss Colepepper. "We're the boobies, I suppose, as we've fallen into it."

"Quite so! I don't see how we can logically refute that argument," was the reply.

"How very rude of Nicholas the First!" said that worthy's descendant indignantly. "But what d'you suppose is the meaning of it all, Alan?"

"Well, I can only guess, of course; but from the evidence I should fancy it was something like this: Nicholas the First obviously put this snuggery together in September, 1587, which is the date on the front door in the cave up above, you remember. Then he went away on a cruise and in the meanwhile some evil minded person picked the lock of the aforesaid front door, came in and raided the room. Nick I returned, saw and considered. His absences from the cay were long. However strong a front door he put up, a determined man would always have plenty of time to smash it down undisturbed if he wanted to. So your worthy ancestor devised, and on Sept. 24, 1588, completed this booby trap, which resets itself and is evidently capable of holding just as many of the Pry family as choose to march into it. I rather fancy Nick I would chuckle considerably, too, if he could know how neatly his invention had caught us today. But do you think that's a correct reading of the history?"

"Perfectly," said the girl. "But what do you suppose happened to the prisoners who were caught in the trap?"

"If Nicholas the First returned soon after their capture, I've no doubt he dealt out hard fisted justice according to his lights. If, on the other hand, his cruise was a protracted one, I'm afraid the intruder would starve. The traditions of the time do not suggest that the jail would have been victualed."

Dolly shuddered. "And we?" she suggested in a tone which was more than half frightened.

"Shall find a way out, no fear," returned the undergraduate boldly. "Probably by the identical passage which the old gentleman used for his own comings and goings. But before we go we'll just see what sort of an inheritance the old scoundrel has left you."

But, though he thus assumed a reassuring tone, Guthrie was far from feeling in his own mind the confidence which he simulated. But, even so, it must be admitted that the strongest emotion in his mind at the moment was curiosity, and so the other feeling of doubt was for the present relegated to the background.

The furniture of the chamber was simple. There was an old four post bedstead of heavily carved Spanish mahogany, with a roof over it strong enough to resist a waterspout; there was a small oak table with three tripod stools to match, and there was a clumsy seaman's chest, made of oak and fitted with rope beckets at the ends. The lid of this chest was locked, but a vigorous kick from Guthrie sent it flying open. Dolly and he at once began to overhaul its contents, and the first thing they found was a drinking pot, which the girl pronounced to be silver.

Guthrie tested it with a knife scratch. It was only pewter.

Then Dolly found two gray platters and cried that surely these must be silver; but by trying to ring them on the side of the box she quickly settled the question. From the sound they might have been lead. With a grimace of disappointment, she threw them away into a corner and turned to the rifling of the chest again.

Further research discovered a truly miscellaneous collection of oddiments—two black jacks, whose leather sides were bound by stout copper hoops; a brass bound pistol butt, broken off close behind the lock; a short seaman's petticoat of yellow oiled canvas; the head of a boarding pike, whose point was blunted and twisted over into a hook; two brass shoe buckles of different patterns; a sailor's palm, with its triangular needle; a decayed molar tooth, and 14 assorted copper nails. Excepting one other item, these and a neat bundle of quill toothpicks comprised the whole collection—not, in truth, an inheritance of any very dazzling value!

The other item was a Spanish pillar dollar, hammered up into the form of a bullet and tied to a yellow paper which bore this inscription:

"Mem: too trye yat lubberlie prieste wi thiss nexte time and soe settel hys hasshe."

"Whatever did he mean by that?" cried Dolly in wonder.

"As I read it," replied the other, "that bit of hammered money is a strong proof that, although your redoubtable ancestor Nicholas the First might have been sacrilegious upon occasion, he was most certainly superstitious too. This bit of gold was meant to be used as a bullet, but apparently Mr. Nick Colepepper never got the chance of sending it to nestle within 'ye lubberlie prieste hys ribs.' I wonder whether he managed to 'settel hys hasshe' in any other equally efficacious way!"

"Ugh!" shuddered the pirate's descendant. "What a bloodthirsty old ruffian!"

"I'm afraid he was," agreed her companion. "I congratulate you upon your relative, Miss Colepepper. He seems to have been a thoroughly pleasant and gentle minded sort of person."

THE BOLE DRUG CO. • WINNIPEG, MAN.

Miss Colepepper accepted the congratulation with a laugh, and, though she did not say as much, it is probable that the thought of having owned such a quaint sort of ancestor was not entirely displeasing to her. It must be remembered that the man was most distinctly dead. Had he been alive just then, there can be no doubt that she would have regarded him as a decided nuisance.

The two explorers spent an hour in rummaging through that queer old time snuggery, examining its rude furniture time after time, in the vague hope of finding some secret drawer or cupboard which might contain something of greater value than they had as yet discovered. They pictured to one another the scenes which the room must have witnessed and took a curious pleasure in limning out from his surroundings a fancy portrait of the original owner. Tradition gave them every warrant for using the most lurid pigments in their sketch.

"Hadn't we better go, Alan?" suggested Dolly at length. "And, by the way, which is the way out?"

"Don't know," replied the undergraduate as carelessly as he could. "We've still got to find it, but if that old brigand had his shore quarters here he must have had some way of getting in and out."

"I expect there's a secret door in one of these panels," suggested the girl.

"Yes, probably there is," assented her companion. But he could not throw much enthusiasm into his tone, though, for the girl's sake, he tried to do so.

They spent another half hour in examining the wooden wainscoting of the walls, tapping, shoving and kicking, in the hope of discovering the hidden doorway, but in vain. The only spot where the wooden barrier was broken was at the tiny door which had given them entrance. And by that way they knew that there was no return possible. The sloping shoot of planks was utterly unscalable.

"Dolly," said the undergraduate quietly, "things are beginning to look blue, I'm afraid. We seem to be bottled."

But Dolly had an idea. There was a small hatchway or manhole in one corner of the ceiling. Would it not be well to climb up through that and see where it led to?

Quickly the table was dragged across the floor and one of the three legged stools placed on the top of it. Guthrie climbed up and beat at the hatch with his upturned palm. It was fastened from above. Dolly handed him another of the heavy oaken stools, and with this he hammered at the hatch savagely. A staple gave. The door of wood rose and fell back. He wrenched it away, and then, clasping his fingers round the combing, pulled himself up.

Around him on every side rose steep, bare walls of rock. The snuggery had been built at the bottom of a regular well.

Far away above the young man could see the shrubs and creepers which lined its edge. That was where the light stole down from. But surely the old buccaneer had not been accustomed to climb in and out of his sanctum from all that distance above! No, there was a black opening about 15 feet up the wall. It was a mouth of the same cave which had led them to the first oaken door up above. That this was so was proved by the fact that there projected from it some four feet of wooden ladder; the same ladder whose top they had seen at the moment when they stepped upon the swinging trapdoor.

"Well?" cried Dolly's voice from below. "Any success?"

Guthrie hesitated. Could they reach that ladder? No; the sides of the rocky wall above him were quite smooth; there was not a single crack or fissure for a foothold.

"I'm coming down again, Dolly!" he cried to the anxiously waiting girl below.

CHAPTER XV.

BREAKING JAIL.

Dolly took the bad news quietly enough. She heard what Guthrie had to tell her about the hopelessness of trying to escape via the roof. Then she remarked philosophically that it could not be helped. They must just discover some other way out.

"There's no earthly use in our staying here any longer, you know," she added. "We've discussed Nicholas the First and his doings with the most comprehensive fullness, and as he hasn't left me any legacy worth carrying away I admit that my interest in the sinful old filibuster has quite evaporated. Besides, how long is it since you had your last meal, Alan?"

"Breakfast," returned the undergraduate promptly. "About eight hours, isn't it?"

"Quite. Well, that's longer than I'm accustomed to. Therefore I'm developing a most unladylike appetite. Therefore I mean to return to the Eureka to satisfy that same appetite. Therefore, to put the situation tersely, I mean to leave Nick's snuggery immediately. Q. E. D.!"

"Perhaps the others will contrive to find us," suggested the undergraduate, but with little enthusiasm. "I'm sure Captain Colepepper and Dr. Tring will both do their best as soon as they know we're missing, and they'll root up half the island sooner than not find us."

Dolly sat on the edge of the table and swung a shoe.

"Now, Alan," she said quietly, "you know as well as I do that it's nonsense to expect either dad or Dr. Tring to find us down here. They might perhaps have just a bare chance of doing so if they gave up about a month to the job and were lucky. But I don't think we can wait quite all that time without considerable inconvenience. No; if we don't find some way out of the booby trap by ourselves we shall be starved to death. That was the fate, you remember, which we agreed would probably overtake the members of the Pry family who poked their noses in here."

"Oh, Dolly," broke out the undergraduate with a sudden burst of self reproach, "what an idiot I was to let you get into this scrape at all!"

The girl laughed with a gayety which was quite genuine. "As if," she exclaimed with a fine scorn, "as if you had anything to do with it! I like that. Do you really mean to imply, Mr. Guthrie, that you imagine you could have stopped me if I wanted to come? Don't you know that red haired people are always obstinate?"

"Your hair's auburn, Dolly!" said the young man.

"That's a mere quibble. Besides, auburn's worse, if anything, for obstinacy. But never mind my hair now. We're wasting time. I'm just horribly hungry already, and as I don't want to get much hungrier, I'm going to leave this ancestral cabin with the smallest possible delay."

Guthrie looked at the girl admiringly. Her courage was magnificent, and it was, moreover, of that quality which, in straits of this kind, has a way of working impossibilities. The young man, seeing it, felt the infection and was ashamed of his own perfectly natural misgivings.

"I'm with you in that, Dolly," he cried heartily. "Tell me what to do, and I'll do it."

"Then go and inspect that automatic letter box thing which dropped us in here, and see if the return journey by the same route isn't possible. I'll climb up through the skylight, meanwhile, and admire the prospect up there."

Guthrie helped her up through the little manhole, and, then dropping back on to the floor of the dusty den, set about the piece of exploration which she had commanded. He opened the low door which bore the insulting inscription, "Ye Bobo, Hys Trappe," and carefully inspected, for the second time, the wooden slide and its surroundings.

His survey was no cursory one. He examined every nook and cranny, he pulled up the heap of moldering rushes which lay at the foot of the sloping boards, in the hope of finding a vague something hidden beneath it. He tried to pull away one of the planks of the shoot, thinking that, perhaps, he might be able to swarm up the edge of its neighbor. But without tools he found that he could not even start the boards, and, if he had been able to do so, it would still have been useless, for above the upper edge of the planking was a sheer drop of at least ten feet beneath that fatal swinging door, and the rock which guarded it sloped outward.

Nicholas the First's ingenuity had been little short of fiendish when he schemed that safeguard to his snuggery.

Having finished his survey unsuccessfully, Guthrie returned to the little room, threw himself down upon the lid of the sea chest, and, moodily drumming his foot against its side, waited for Dolly to reappear.

His thoughts were not pleasant. Tom Jelly had once told him what starvation was like, for the one armed man had tried it, some ten years ago, in an open boat. It was the solitary subject, upon which he could be anything like eloquent. In the memory of the horrors of that terrible cruise his generally torpid intelligence would waken, and the tale that he then told was not pretty hearing.

Guthrie remembered something of what the man had said and shuddered with a horror of loathing fear. And must Dolly— The apple in his throat got glued tight somehow and refused to move either up or down.

Miss Colepepper let herself down through the manhole and stood beside him.

"Now, Alan," she said cheerfully, "if you are quite ready, we may as well begin preparing to go without further delay."

"What!" cried Guthrie, unable to believe that he had heard her rightly.

"I said that we might start getting ready to move ketchward," repeated Dolly. "But, of course, if you haven't finished admiring old Nick's sanctum"—

"Do you actually mean to say you've found a way out?" he interrupted.

"Of course I have!" the girl answered gayly. "Didn't I say I wouldn't stay much longer? Didn't I tell you I was getting abominably hungry? Now look here! A rope made of those ancient bedclothes, a weight at the end to throw over that projecting ladder; a bit of a climb, and there you are! No, Alan, don't! Mr. Guthrie, remember our contract! There, you've rumpled up all my hair!"

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

Are the Up-to-Date Remedy.

Medicines, like clothes, are made from different materials now than they were twenty-five years ago. Some of the materials used in making Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women had not been discovered then. You cannot get these new ingredients in the old time remedies. And yet these ingredients are used now in diseases of women by all the world's greatest physicians.

Progressive women—thinking women keep up-to-date in the matter of medicines as well as clothes. They are buying Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, the twentieth century preparation for women, and the one now recognized beyond doubt or question as the one best adapted to their special needs.

They make healthy women.

"You're the cleverest girl in all creation, Dolly!" cried the young man enthusiastically.

"Am I really?" asked Dolly with a demure courtesy. "Well, we'll take that for settled. And now, in the language of the doctor, 'Dry up, and get to work!'"

Age had rendered Nicholas the First's bedclothes uncommonly brittle, and the manufacture of a rope was a work of time. The sheets were found to serve the purpose best, for they were of linen, doubtless the loot of some luxurious hidalgo. They tore easily into narrow strips, and these the two prisoners plaited and then plaited again into a nine strand cord. But when this was done the rope was still too short. So they had to make out the rest with blankets, and these were by no means so satisfactory.

At last a sufficient length was completed, and the ropemakers tested it fathom by fathom by taking a hitch round a post of the heavy mahogany bedstead and pulling at the length to be tried with all their combined strength. It stretched, but it did not break. Guthrie thought that it would bear the strain of his weight. So, bending the old brass bound pistol butt at one end, he passed the coil up through the hatch and went after it.

However, they were by no means out of the wood yet, for to shy the missile with its dangling burden of rope over the projecting rungs of the ladder was no easy task. Again and again it missed and came clattering down about the young man's ears. And what with the heat and the dust he was somewhat out of breath and just about tired of the exercise before the broken pistol butt deigned to effect a lodgment on one of the projecting ladder rungs.

Then a good deal of maneuvering was necessary before it could be persuaded to slip down on the other side. But by cautiously "snaking" the bight which he had in his hand he coaxed it down little by little, till with a vigorous jump he reached it with his fingers and brought both ends of the rope together.

He waited a minute to recover his breath and then reported progress to Dolly, who had remained below.

"I'll come and see you climb," said she, and Guthrie helped her through the hatch.

"Will it bear?" she asked, looking upward at the clumsy cord on which so much depended.

"I haven't tried yet," was the reply. "But here goes!" And, gripping the rope as far up as he could reach, Guthrie cautiously drew his weight on to it. Dolly watched breathlessly and then gave a little gasp of dismay.

For when the young man's toes were nearly off the ground, and there were only a few more pounds of his weight unsupported, the ladder moved. Its inner end was being tilted up.

Guthrie let go of the rope and leaned back against the rocky side of the well with a groan.

"It was a good idea, Dolly," said he quietly, after a little, "but my beastly weight has spoiled everything. Perhaps, though," he added, with a thin, unenthusiastic smile, "after a couple of days without grub, I may be just about light enough."

She raised her knees and hauled herself a foot farther up the rope.

"H'm!" commented Dolly. "I don't admire the prospect of two days' more starvation. I've had quite enough of it already. Don't you remember, Alan, that you were heavier than I was by over a stone when we got weighed at Bristol? I don't think I've got much plumper since then, although the doctor was chaffing me about it only yesterday. However, we will soon see."

She grasped the rope and cautiously raised herself up by it. The ladder bore her weight without a movement.

"But, Dolly," exclaimed the undergraduate, "you can't go up that beastly thing!"

"Why not?"

"Oh, it may break, or you may fall, or—anything! And even if you did get to the top all right, it would be awfully dangerous for you to haul yourself up into the cave without help from above."

"Now, Alan," retorted the girl sharply, "don't be foolish, please! If you want to stay here till you've starved off two stone of your weight, I'll openly confess that I don't."

She raised her knees and hauled herself a foot farther up the rope. Then she stopped and, having convinced herself that her weight could not move the ladder, lowered herself on to the woodwork again.

"Alan," she said, "go below."

"Whatever for? No, Dolly, let me be at hand here in case anything happens. You may fall. Perhaps I could catch you, or"—

"Alan!"

"Yes?"

"Go."

Alan went, and Dolly slid on the hatch above him.

Down below the young man listened with straining, anxious attention. He heard a little squeak from her shoes as she took off from the boarding, and then a gentle panting as she worked her way upward. The sounds grew fainter, till he could hear them no longer. There was a minute's awful suspense, in which his feet tingled to be up on the stool and through the skylight again. He imagined all sorts of possibilities—if the girl should fall, or if one of the knots should come undone—

There was a slight jar on the boarding overhead and then a gleeful hail from the climber:

"Ahoy, below there! The ladder waits, your excellency."

CHAPTER XVI.

CAIN LAVERSHA GOES POACHING.

By the time that Dolly and the undergraduate had picked their way out of the long rock gallery which led to Nick's snuggery it was almost dark, and there was still the better part of an hour's hard scrambling to be done before they could hope to reach the Eureka again. Indeed, the journey took them considerably longer than an hour, for the rocky gullies and thorny knolls which they had to traverse needed careful walking even in the daytime, and now, in the rapidly growing darkness, they were doubly dangerous. Fortunately there was a moon, but moonbeams are not the most reliable light in which to go rock climbing, even if one is quite sure of the track.

The ketch's riding lamp served as a beacon to lead them in the right direction, and without its help it is most certain that they would more than once have gone very far astray indeed in their efforts to retrace the path which they had taken in the morning, for in the moonlight the shadows gave deceptive appearances of easy gullies where there were in reality nothing but ugly holes and of gentle slopes which a closer approach showed to be sheer precipices. Every step had to be picked, and carefully picked too.

When they reached to within a quarter of a mile of the Eureka, the rest was easy, for they were now upon the sandy, level beach once more. And here they came upon Dr. Tring.

The doctor was striding along quickly, a gaunt, black shadow in the moonbeams. At a hail from Guthrie he stopped.

"Guthrie ahoy!" he cried. "Are you all right?"

"All right it is!" answered the undergraduate.

"Both of you?"

"Both of us!" shouted Dolly. "Rather tired and fearfully hungry. That's all. Where's father?"

The doctor shifted his helm and bore down upon them. About a fathom away from them he stopped, fiddled for his glass and put it in his eye, and then he crammed both his fists deep into his pockets and stared hard at the truants. He said nothing. His leathery features were screwed up as if he were going to whistle, but no sound came out from between the puckered lips.

"Well!" he remarked presently. "Aren't you ashamed of yourselves?"

Under that stare Guthrie had begun to feel uncomfortable. Dolly, as usual, took matters coolly. She knew how to manage most people and among them, of course, Dr. Tring.

"We're very sorry for outstaying our leave," she said demurely. "But we couldn't help it. We were boxed up and couldn't get out. We've had a very tiring day, and we've missed two meals."

"Bless my soul!" ejaculated the doctor, letting his eyeglass topple down and his features smooth themselves out again. "So you have! What a fool I was not to do the St. Bernard dog trick—brandy bottle and Bath bun. However, come along at once."

"Where's the dad?" asked Dolly.

"As the Yankees would say, 'Tearing around.' He began to get anxious about you a couple of hours ago, and I dare say he's fully convinced by this time that one if not both of you will have to be carried back to the Eureka on a stretcher."

"I say, doctor."

"Well?"

"Go and tell him, do, and save us the wigging. We couldn't help it really. You see, it was this way"—

"Never mind the yarn now," interrupted Dr. Tring. "Here we are at the boat. Henrietta will put you on board, and I'll go and find your father and tell him you're all right. Afterward you can give us the whole yarn."

"Mind you explain to the dad that we couldn't help it," insisted the girl.

"H'm! I'll tell him that you say you couldn't, but you've still got to prove that, you know, miss," answered the doctor, with a very feeble pretense at severity.

He turned away inland again, and the others went down to the boat. Henrietta squeaked a curt greeting, and as she was shoving off remarked that the "cap'n had took on bad about Miss Dolly."

"Poor old dad," remarked Miss Colepepper ten minutes afterward, when she and Guthrie had taken the keenest edge off their appetites—"he's always fussy and nervous about me. Alan, do you consider we've wasted this day?"

Now it so happened that cold beef and pickles prevented the undergraduate from giving an articulate reply to Dolly's question at that particular moment. But he shook his head most vigorously.

"We haven't found the spring of fresh water we were sent to seek, you know," suggested Dolly slyly.

"I don't care if we haven't," replied the young man unblushingly. "I'm glad, in fact, because we can spend another day like this in looking for it."

"Oh!" murmured Miss Colepepper quietly and dropped the subject.

There was, however, as it turned out, no necessity for another day to be spent in the search for the needed fresh water, because Captain Colepepper had found it, himself. The spring was only about

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Packing Pork.

Clean the barrel thoroughly until all bad odors are removed. Then cover the bottom with three inches of salt and pack in a layer of pork, closely fitting the space and covering the whole layer with salt three inches deep. Pound it down solid with an axe and start another layer, keeping on in the same way until the pork is all packed. Cover the whole with one-half bushel of salt and let it stand a few days, after which clean cold water should be added. A float with a flat stone on top will keep the meat from rising above the surface. This plan requires more salt than commonly used but is very sure for keeping meat.

Nitrate in Fruit Culture.

Fruit growers in this country generally believe that there is injury likely to result from the use of large amounts of nitrate of soda, but recent German experiments with amounts as large as five hundred pounds per acre show no bad results. As a result of ten years experience an extensive German experimenter holds that not only is the nitrate beneficial and profitable but for those who would secure the greatest returns it is indispensable. He says, however, that it is possible to apply too much, in which case the effects show themselves first in the youngest shoots which turn brown and wrinkle up and look as if they were burned. The nitrate is used in connection with potash and phosphoric acid fertilizers.

AGE LIMITS OF DAIRY COWS.

A cow is at her best during the fifth and sixth years, up to which time the production of milk and butter fat by cows in normal condition increases each year. The length of time the cow will maintain her maximum production depends on her constitutional strength and the care with which she is fed and managed. A good dairy cow should not show any marked failing off until after ten years of age. Many excellent records have been made by cows older than this. The quality of the milk produced by heifers is somewhat better than that of older cows, for a decrease has been noted of one to two-tenths of one per cent. in the average fat content for each year till the cows have reached the full age. This is caused by the increase in the weight of the cows with advancing age. At any rate, there seems to be a parallelism between the two sets of figures for the same cows. Young animals use a portion of their food for the formation of body tissue, and it is to be expected, therefore, that heifers will require a larger proportion of nutrients for the production of milk or butter fat than do other cows. After a certain age had been reached, on the average seven years of age, the food required for the production of a unit of milk or butter fat again increases both as regards dry matter and the digestible components of the food. A good milk cow of exceptional strength, kept under favorable conditions, whose digestive system has not been impaired by over feeding or crowding for high results, should continue to be a profitable producer till her twelfth year, although the economy of her production is apt to be somewhat reduced before this age is reached.

THE WORLD DOES MOVE.

An old farmer said with some truth: "If it were not for the factories and railroads we would still be swapping cheap butter at the stores for high-priced sugar, tea and molasses." There are those who assert the old times were better when the farms were 'self-supporting' and before the factory people came. But suggest to such that there is still a chance to live under exactly those conditions, in a new country like the far Northwest, and they show no enthusiasm to leave their comfortable homes to get back into primitive conditions, where farm products as well as land is cheap and plenty, but money and comfort scarce. Forty years ago the "simple life" was still a sure enough reality. Most farmhouses had bare floors except in the parlor, and country families went to church in a spring wagon. It was easy to exchange goods at the store, but the dealer took a wide margin both ways and there was very little cash from any source. When you come to think it over the world has moved after all.

THE HORSE.

Soundness in Market Horses.

Perhaps the first and most important essential in a market horse is soundness. It is absolutely useless to expect to sell a horse that is unsound for a good price on any critical market. Unsoundnesses that are most common are those of the limbs and the respiratory organs. A marketable horse should not have a splint so high up on the leg that it interferes with the articulation of the knee joint. A splint may be small and low down and not seriously affect the selling price of the animal. Understand, however, that where you have to consider the highest type of equine beauty you want to avoid blemishes just as much as possible. A splint at best is a blemish, and naturally will result in a discrimination being made against a horse possessing one when he is sold. With high horses, everything that is an offence to the eye must be avoided. The more beautiful a horse is, other things considered, the higher he is going to sell. There must be no ring-bone, no side-bone or other unsoundness of the effect and on the hind legs no curb; no spavin, no thoroughpin or bog spavin; of course he must not be a roarer or wind-broken. Now most of these things are unsoundness that can be readily detected by any one who is at all competent in judging horses.

SUCCESS IN FARMING.

It is possible for a man who has intelligence enough to learn; money enough to meet the primary expenses; and physical constitution strong enough to bear the burden, to convert any kind of soil into a good producing condition. But he must know enough at the beginning to figure out the results, to know whether his venture will be a paying one or not. Or whether the outlay will not be greater than any return that he may reasonably expect from it.

A farmer can make a farm, but a farm cannot make a farmer. There is, therefore, the possibility that an intelligent man may make a successful farmer, even though he start out farmer, even though he start out with a poor farm.

But a man with small intellect, without education, and without knowledge of his profession cannot farm successfully, however good a farm he may have to start with. He might raise one or two fairly good crops, but it would only be by chance if he should make a paying conversion of his crops into cash. Of this we have probably all seen enough without needing any further proof or explanation. Independent fortunes have been made by shrewd, intelligent farmers; and fortunes have been lost on good farms by those who did not understand the business.

I believe that the intelligent, well-educated farmer may succeed against very adverse conditions of the land. But a poor farmer cannot succeed at this business. He must constantly grow poorer, and finally fail.

Success in farming, as in every other calling, depends first upon the man—his mental and his physical capacity, his education; and his wife. With these conditions to start out with, then the better the farm, the greater will be his degree of success. But he will succeed.

SHORTENING THE MOULT.

The poultry department of the California Experiment Station is making tests with the object of shortening the moulting season of laying fowls. The plan adopted seems to be a good deal along the lines of the Van Dreser method of very light feeding followed by heavy feeding, but in California they have tried changing the character of the food also. When wishing to stop the egg laying and bring on moulting they reduce the supply of nitrogenous food, including meat, middlings, etc., about one-half. This plan stops egg-laying and the hens go to moulting. In about a month, it is claimed, the moulting process is all finished. The ordinary plan of feeding is then resumed and the hen begins to lay early in the fall. The results in detail have not yet been given out, but in view of the rather unsatisfactory average of experience with the Van Dreser method there is room for doubt whether the artificial moulting plan will result in much practical gain.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

It is said that the most nauseous physic may be given to children without trouble by previously letting them take a peppermint lozenge, a piece of alum or a bit of orange peel. Many people make the mistake of giving a sweet afterwards to take away the disagreeable taste: it is far better to destroy it in the first instance.

The New York Evening Post has had several letters inquiring the process by which a turkey or other fowl can be roasted breast downward, as advised. This is not a difficult feat, several devices having been tried with success. The best was a series of wooden skewers holding the bird upright. Sometimes one or two small stoneware teacups have to be used to brace a heavy bird. The results are well worth the trouble.

Glasses that have been used for milk should be well rinsed in cold water before being washed in the usual way. If put at once into warm water the milk will harden on the glass and be difficult to remove.

Paper and string need rarely be purchased if all the brown paper from parcels is neatly folded and kept in one drawer, the string rolled up in the string basket, whilst if newspapers seem to accumulate in too large quantities in the home, the butcher is usually willing to buy them.

A leak in a water or gas pipe may be temporarily stopped with a paste made of soap and whiting. This, of course, should not prevent one's sending immediately for the plumber, but it will make the waiting for him much less trying than it usually is.

A young infant ought to spend the greater part of its time asleep. In fact, the two great duties of its life are feeding and sleeping, and the second ought to occupy much more time than the first. Never allow a baby to be aroused from its sleep, even to see the most important of visitors. Remember that it is often politeness and not affection which makes people ask to see the baby, and do not let the little one be roused from its slumber. When it has rested long enough it will wake naturally, but to be suddenly roused often causes a considerable shock to its nerves and injury to its health.

Where there are children the chemist's bill is apt to be higher than it need, seeing that so many simple medicines and toilet preparations can be made at home. Thus, lemon and glycerine can be mixed to make a preparation for chapped hands. Castile soap melted, yolk of egg and a little eau de cologne with water serve for a hair wash; quinine, if required, is cheaper by the powder, when doctor and chemist will tell how much is needful to put in a bottle of orange or ginger wine, according to the age of the one taking it, whilst plain aperients for children with senna pods, lemon juice and glycerine, or powdered rhubarb, are cheaply and efficaciously prepared at home.

Some fruit never seems to get sweet when cooked with sugar. The trouble is that ordinary cane sugar, when heated with certain fruit acids, is converted into grape sugar. This sugar has only one-third the sweetening power of cane sugar, and so a good deal is required. This can be overcome by putting in a little baking powder with the sugar, and this will so neutralize the acids of the fruit as to prevent the conversion of cane sugar into grape sugar.

Red and green are Christmas colors, and should be used as far as possible in holiday decorations. Fortunately, holly is cheap, mistletoe little more expensive, and laurel cheapest of all. Buy big bunches of laurel and place in jars of water. They will keep fresh a long time, and make a good background for flowers. Red crepe paper helps out wonderfully when a great deal of decorating has to be done. Instead of holly wreaths for the windows, try the effect of flat branches against the panes. Beware of using candles, unless protected with substantial shades. Christmas greens are very inflammable as soon as they become dry. Holly is especially dangerous.

NO MORE DANDRUFF.

Newbro's Herpicide Destroys the Pestiferous Cause of Annoying Dandruff.

Does your head itch? Is your coat or dress full of white flakes after dressing your hair? That's the effect of dandruff. Is your hair thinning? Are you beginning to get bald in spots? Are you already, in fact, rapidly becoming bald? If so, that is the effect of a measly little parasite that burrows in at the root of the hair, and throws up the scalp in dandruff and eats off the hair at the root. Science's latest discovery is a destroyer of that pestiferous germ. That destroyer is contained in no other hair preparation on earth but Newbro's Herpicide. Try it, and be convinced. A delightful dressing.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

White Sponge Cake.

Beat the whites of eight eggs to a very stiff, feathery froth. Sift a little baking powder, with one and one-half cups of sugar and one cup of flour which has been previously sifted four or six times. Add a pinch of salt and bitter almonds flavoring. Bake slowly.

Banana Jelly.

Put the juice of three lemons and the grated rind of one in one quart of boiling water. Add one cupful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of granulated pink gelatin. Stir until the gelatin is dissolved. Press slices of banana on bottom and sides of mould. When the gelatin is cold and begins to stiffen pour it carefully into the mould. Set where it will become stiff and chilled. Turn out on a glass dish and served with whipped cream.

Frosted Apples.

Select medium-sized, smooth apples which are tart. Peel and take out the core with apple corer. Fill a plate which fits into the steamer with one layer of apples, set over kettle of boiling water and cover closely until done; set away to cool, then carefully remove to a clean plate and prepare another plateful for steaming; make a frosting with whites of three eggs, add seven tablespoonfuls of pulverized sugar; frost before they are quite cool. This will make frosting for two plates of apples. Set in oven a few minutes, but watch closely or the frosting will get too brown.

Rice Gems.

One cup of cooked rice. Moisten with two tablespoonfuls of cream; add two cupfuls of graham flour, and moisten the whole with one-fourth cup of milk. Beat well and put in heated iron gem pans. Bake fifty minutes.

Lemon Pudding.

Beat the yolks of two eggs with two cups white sugar. Dissolve four tablespoonfuls corn starch in a little cold water, stir into it two cups boiling water; add a teaspoonful of melted butter, the juice and grated yellow peel of two lemons, and lastly the eggs and sugar. Mix well together and bake in a moderate oven for fifteen minutes, spread over the top a meringue made with the whites of the eggs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and set in the oven to color delicately. No sauce is required with this delicious pudding.

THE HORSE.

Marketing Light Horses.

Action is extremely important in light horses. It should be straight and true. At the trot it should be what is known as the straight line trot, no wabbling from one side to the other, or swinging the feet. The action from behind should be straight, the feet picked up smartly, hocks well flexed and the feet of both fore and hind legs at each step placed immediately in front of the former position.

Style is of the highest importance, and this is generally indicated by the way in which he carries his head, the general appearance of smartness, of good disposition and nerve.

Then we have the point of manners. No horse is going to sell well in any of these classes that is not well mannered or shows that he has had no education. I do not mean by that that he should lack spirit, because he must have spirit, but he should have been taught how to behave himself in the case of emergency. This is especially true in the cases of horses that are sold for city use. A great many horses are very sharply discriminated against on this point.

The last point is that of condition. You know, of course, that if you send a steer to market that is not fat, you are not going to get as much for him as you would if he were fat. To a certain extent, the same thing is true of horses. It is not true of light horses as much as with drafters, but a horse out of condition will not sell within twenty-five per cent. of what he might sell for if he were in good condition. He should not be over-fed or over-fat, but he should have meat enough to cover his bones and make him look well and smooth.

BREEDERS' NOTES.

As to the best time of the year to breed that depends upon what the foal is intended for. The produce of such a foal should be good enough to enter in the colt stakes and race as a two or three-year-old. In that case it would be best to wait until spring and have her mated with the stallion as early as the middle of March. Early foals have a decided advantage over late ones when racing colt stakes.

One of the expensive mistakes which horse breeders are apt to make when first starting in the business is to keep too many brood mares. They should make calculation for about one mare in five to fail to produce foals every year. They should also make calculation to keep all of their produce until they are mature and fit for the market, which will be on an average when they are five years old. Some of them may be so good gaited and promising as to sell for satisfactory prices before reaching that age, but with the average small breeder such cases are liable to be of less frequent occurrence in the future than in the past.

The farmer who will pay a high price for a fine piece of cloth from which to have a suit of clothes made for his own wear, would show poor judgment by cutting and making the suit himself, or employing a fourth-class tailor, who can neither fit well nor make a garment properly. The man who has a well-bred and promising colt and places him in the hands of an unskilled trainer shows much poorer judgment than the man who pays a high price for fine cloth and employs an unskilled, bungling workman to cut and make his dress suit for him.

It is announced that the Russian Count Malynski, who owns some twenty trotting bred mares in his own country, mostly American bred or from American trotting stock, is now in this country for the purpose of visiting some of the noted trotting breeding establishments. And it is also stated that the count intends to spend a part of the coming winter at some Southern track, where trainers are wintering their horses, for the purpose of learning as much as possible about the practical part of training, so that he may be able to know whether or not his own trainers are working his horses as they should.

GETS PLENTY OF LIGHT.

One Hotel Guest Who Travels Prepared For Emergencies.

"I called on a friend at one of the New York hotels the other day," said a man, "and found him in a room that was far, far away from daylight. There was one electric light, which did not make the apartment lustrous. We had some papers to look over, and I instinctively moved over near the air shaft window.

"'I can do better than that,' he said, going to his satchel and taking out an electric bulb. 'I carry this around with me for just such occasions,' he laughed. 'That one does well enough for transient guests who are not in their rooms except to sleep, but sometimes I need more than sixteen candlepower, and I carry a thirty-two.'

"He unscrewed the sixteen, and in a jiffy had on his thirty-two. The current was there, all right, and we had no more trouble about too little light. Later he showed me a large gas tip which he carried along for hotels that used gas instead of electric light. This needed a pair of pliers in addition, but he had them in his small box, and he told me it was a mighty poor quality of gas and a powerful low pressure that wouldn't respond with the goods when he put on his accommodation tip. There is nothing grafty about that little scheme possibly, but just the same he is getting something the landlord is paying for."

Example.

One watch set right will do to set many by. One that goes wrong may be the means of misleading a whole neighborhood, and the same may be said of example.

The good things of life are not to be had singly, but come to us with a mixture.—Lamb.

Two Kinds of Ambition.

Men have two kinds of ambition, one for dollar making, the other for life making. Some turn all their ability, education, health and energy toward the first of these, dollar making, and call the result success. Others turn them toward the second—into character, usefulness, helpfulness—life making, and the world sometimes calls them failures, but history calls them successes. No price is too great to pay for an untarnished name.—O. S. Marden in Success Magazine.

His Usury.

"Now, Willie," said the boy's mother, "before you go to sleep you must try to recall any little sin you committed during the day and be truly sorry for it." "Yes, ma'am," replied Willie, "I guess I was guilty of usury, for one thing." "Usury?" "Yes'm; I found a nickel and used it."

A Rule of Life.

In all the affairs of life let it be your great care not to hurt your mind or offend your judgment. And this rule, if observed carefully in all your deportment, will be a mighty security to you in your undertakings.

Ald. Marsh Gave Notice of a By-law Last Night Which Would be Drastic in Its Effects—Sewerage System By-law Passed--Council May Apply to the Legislature--The Price of Coal--Front St. May Be Permanently Paved--Library Grant Passed.

When Mayor Sulman at 8 o'clock last evening called the Council to order the only absentee was Ald. Paterson, who did not put in an appearance during the session.

BARKIS IS WILLING.

A communication was read from the Trenton Electric Company stating that they were content with the proposition of the Council in reference to a three years' franchise with the option of a two years' extension.

The reports of the various committees, as already published, were read.

Ald. Vermilyea was in the chair in committee of the whole.

The reports of the various committees were passed without much discussion.

A recommendation from the Executive Committee, that the two auditors be paid $100 each, was concurred in.

LIBRARY GRANT PASSED.

A recommendation that $1000 be given as a grant for the maintenance of the Public Library, the same as last year, was adopted without any discussion.

ALBERT COLLEGE'S WATER.

A recommendation from the Water Committee, that the rate for Albert College be the same as last year, namely $150. came up.

Ald. Gordon stated that Principal Dyer had appeared before the Committee and informed the Committee that the College would be willing to pay the same rate as last year, although there were some colleges equally as large which were getting lower rates for water privileges.

Ald. Marsh did not think that $150 was enough for that institution to pay. He would be in favor of a meter being put in the college.

Ald. Green spoke in a similar manner. He did not think it was fair to other parties who were large consumers of water to give the college a small rate, if such was the fact.

Ald. Gordon said the college was a benefit to the city and it should be encouraged.

Ald. Knox referred to the fact that no laundry work was done in the college.

The recommendation of the committee prevailed.

PERMANENT PAVING FOR OUR MAIN AISLE.

Ald. Panter said he intended, this year, if possible, to inaugurate the building of a permanent roadway on Front street. Much money was spent upon that thoroughfare and part of the time it was in a wretched condition. He would like to procure information from the press or from any person as to the best way of making a permanent job on that thoroughfare.

Several of the Aldermen approved the idea of Ald. Panter, and the matter will be brought up at the next meeting of the Public Works committee.

TELEPHONE TALK.

A communication was read from the Sprague Telephone Company, operating in Prince Edward County, asking the Council if anything could be done in the way of securing connection with this city. At present subscribers to the line in Ameliasburg, if desirous of speaking to any person in the city, have to get connection by way of Picton. The Bell Telephone Company had the exclusive right to the bay bridge and also exclusive rights in the city.

The Solicitor, in answer to a question, said the Bell Telephone Company did have exclusive rights in the city, but that right would expire in a year or two.

The matter was on motion referred to the Executive Committee.

FIRE CHIEF REPORTS.

A report was read from Chief Campbell, of the Fire Department, showing that during last year the brigade answered 40 alarms. The total loss from fire was $6,405, as against $26,000 in 1904.

Ald. Cooper said it was a source of gratification that we had such an efficient fire brigade. He thought that the city should be in a better class of insurance than it is when, such a record for the year is presented.

Ald. Sinclair also referred to the efficiency of the brigade. The insurance rate in the city was, he thought, higher than it should be.

Ald. Panter concurred in the remarks of the previous speaker. He was not so sure but that it would be a good idea for the city to insure its own property. On the city building a three years' premium used to be secured, now a yearly premium had to be paid.

On motion the report was ordered to be sent to the Underwriters' Association.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Panter said that a complaint had been made that trees were being cut down on Ponton street. Had any permission been given?

As no one could answer this the Surveyor was authorized to look into the matter.

Ald. Knox enquired as to the advisability of cutting down the apple trees on the Corby Park. He contended that they retarded the growth of other trees just planted.

The trees were ordered to be cut down.

THE PRICE OF COAL.

Ald. Knox asked the Mayor why we had to pay, in Belleville, $7 per ton for coal when it could be procured at Trenton, and other places near by, at a lower price.

The Mayor said he could not answer that question. If there was a combine here the County Attorney might interest himself in the matter.

THE CITY'S LITIGATION.

The Solicitor said that there had appeared in the press an article intimating that he had forced litigation on the city. He did not think such was the case.

The Mayor said he failed to see where the Solicitor had forced litigation on the city. Some cases had been settled by him when some thought that litigation was necessary. The impression the papers gave was wrong.

Ald. Panter and Green spoke similarly to the Mayor and both said the Solicitor had been successful in leading the Council in matters of law.

GRAVEL ASKED FOR.

Mayor Sulman said a request had been made for a few loads of gravel from Zwick's Island to be used in making a roadway at Holloway St. church.

This was referred to the chairman of Public Works.

BY-LAWS.

Ald. Marsh introduced three By-laws namely;

A by-law to amend by-law No. 1247. This was in reference to the salary of the auditors.

A by-law to authorize the Mayor and Treasurer to borrow $25,000 to meet the current expenses of the city.

A by-law to authorize the Council to apply to the Legislature of the Province for permission to instal a sewerage system in the city.

In regard to the latter by-law Ald. Green believed that where public money is expended the taxpayers should have a voice in the matter. It was not, he thought, right to go to Parliament over their heads.

The Mayor stated that a by-law to instal a sewage system, if voted upon by the ratepayers, could not extend the debentures beyond 20 years, whereas the Legislature will be asked to extend the debentures over a period of 40 or 50 years.

The by-laws were passed through their various stages and numbered respectively 1253, 1254 and 1255.

MOTIONS.

Ald. Cooper moved, seconded by Ald. Panter, that the various committees meet hereafter on Thursday evenings, instead of Friday. — Carried.

Ald. McCrodan moved, seconded by Ald. Gordon, that a committee composed of the Mayor, and Ald. Gordon and Knox be appointed to procure a suitable lot for the erection of the Corby Public Library building.—Carried.

Moved by Ald. Marsh, seconded by Ald. Gordon, that a vote of thanks be tendered to Mayor Sulman for his kindness in tendering to the members of the Council a dinner at the Quinte on the date of the inaugural meeting.

The motion was adopted by a standing vote, and His Worship replied briefly but in an appropriate manner.

WOULD DISFRANCHISE BACK TAXERS.

Ald. Marsh gave notice that he would introduce a by-law to provide for the disfranchising of citizens who did not pay their taxes before the 14th of December in each year.

The mover said the Statute gives the Council the power to pass such legislation and he would do all that was in his power to better the present state of affairs, and have the taxes, water rates, etc., collected every year.

Ald Knox said he would again introduce his Dog by-law.

LOOKS LIKE BUSINESS.

Ald. Marsh stated that he would, at the next meeting of the Committees, lay before the members the names of civic employees who were behind in their taxes, water rates, etc., and the amount of the same.

Council adjourned.

LADY PARKER'S BURGLAR.

ENTERED HER ROOM WITH A MASTER KEY.

New York, Jan. 20. — The Herald publishes the story of how Lady Parker, wife of Sir Gilbert Parker, was robbed of $75,000 in jewels several weeks ago.

In the recent political campaign in England, Lady Parker took up a temporary residence in the Carlton. She was Miss A. E. Van Tine of this city, daughter of the late A. A. Van Tine, and wealthy in her own right. Her jewels are well known, and on this occasion she had in a casket in her room part of her collection. There came a knock at her door one morning, and a well-dressed man was discovered. At the sight of Lady Parker he apologized profusely, saying that he had made a mistake, having been called to the room of a friend.

Little was thought of the incident, and Lady Parker went to make some calls. When she returned she discovered that the case and its contents had been taken. Nothing else had been disturbed. Entrance had been obtained by a master key. It was Lady Parker's description of the man who had rapped at her door that caused the Scotland Yard man to take ship for this city. The detective authorities thought they recognized in it a man who has made a reputation as a sneak thief and hotel thief on two continents. It was learned he had sailed for New York. He was not in New York when the detective arrived, but there were traces of him, and after a week's investigation a clue was found which indicated that he had gone to Florida.

Against the Law.

We are informed that parties are destroying the muskrat houses built in the marsh near Mr. Holton's mill. As the penalty is severe in this respect those who are guilty will do well to desist.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Is one of the best friends that any family has, but there are often sudden and acute attacks of some painful disease that require immediate treatment, such, for instance, as rheumatism, neuralgia, lame back, etc. Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil makes the calling of the doctor unnecessary. It will give relief before he could answer the call, and if faithfully used will cure the most stubborn attacks of rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago, pain in the chest or back, soreness, sprains or strains. It is a powerful, penetrating oil, that goes straight to the seat of the trouble and roots out the cause. It relaxes the stiffened joints, soothes the affected parts and allays the inflammation, which produces the torturing pain. It is, therefore, a valuable remedy not only for rheumatism and kindred diseases, but is equally good for croup, bronchitis and quinsy. One father writes that it cured his child of a violent attack of croup in five minutes. A mother writes that her boy was subject to quinsy and two or three times each year was confined to his bed and could not speak. When threatened with another attack this fall she rubbed his throat and chest with the Bone Oil and by three applications warded off the attack. The wonderful curative powers of this remarkable remedy are being talked about by everyone. A bottle should be in every home. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or will be sent prepaid on receipt of 50c by the Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls. Money refunded if not satisfied.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"UNCLE TOM" TO-NIGHT.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," like wine, grows better with age. From its first production at the Troy, N. Y., Museum, June 18, 1852, up to the present time, it has been one of the best drawing cards known. Instead of falling off, the patronage has increased to such an extent that the theatres are too small to accommodate the crowds it draws. Not only have American theatre-goers supported the drama, but those of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales have sung loud their praise. Al. W. Martin's great production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" should be well patronized when it appears at the Carman this evening.

M. REVOIL KEEN FENCER

Count Von Tattenbach Parries With Downright Speech.

Beginning of Fresh Controversies Between Germany and France Through the Unsympathetic Personalities of These Delegates—Five of 16 Articles in the Report of the Committee on Contraband Arms Adopted.

Algeciras, Jan. 23.—The plenipotentiaries were entertained at yesterday's sitting of the Moroccan conference by an almost continuous skirmish between M. Revoil, head of the French delegation, and Count Von Tattenbach, the second of the German delegates. While the amenities were carefully observed, the other delegates were conscious that the day was the beginning of fresh controversies between France and Germany, which are likely to be long protracted and of increasing earnestness.

The styles of fence displayed by the two plenipotentiaries suggested their differences of races. M. Revoil was keen, analytical of mind, skillful in diplomatic phrasing and with a grace of expression and a winning personality. Count Von Tattenbach was downright of speech and soldierly in manner, trusting to the solidity of his ideas and to his facts.

The two plenipotentiaries are not in sympathy, and draw apart outside the council room. Both are of high ambition, and it will be difficult for either to yield to the other.

Messages of Hope.

The conference reassembled at the Town Hall. The presiding officer, the Duke of Almodovar, Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs, read messages from the Spanish Senate and Chamber of Deputies, expressing hope for a successful issue of the conference. The Marquis Visconti Venosta, head of the Italian mission, replying in the name of the delegates, made a significant reference to the international character of the agreement to be concluded here. This was interpreted as referring to the Franco-German difficulty over the question of the international control of Morocco.

The conference adopted five of the 16 articles contained in the report of the committee on contraband arms. Discussion of the remaining articles then went over until Wednesday, today being reserved for the ceremonies attending the feast day of King Alfonso.

Spoke in Arabic.

The discussion brought out a lengthy discourse from Sidi Mohammed El Mokhri, the second of the Moroccan delegates, concerning Morocco's general attitude towards the conference. He spoke in Arabic, and the delegates decided to have a translation made of his remarks.

The drafts of the report under discussion, besides providing repressive laws by the powers, charges the Moroccan customs authorities with the repression of contraband along the coast. Before seizing a foreign ship they must notify the legation of the country to which the ship belongs, and pending action on the part of the legation at Tangier, the Moroccan authorities shall install a guardian on board the ship. Upon the legation's approving the seizure, the contraband cargo will be condemned, the proceeds going to the Moroccan treasury, while the fines will be distributed between the informers and the Moroccan treasury.

France Given Control.

The draft gives France exclusive control over contraband on the Algerian frontier, and gives Spain exclusive control along the frontier of Spain's possessions in Morocco.

The general principle of the plan is to leave the coast surveillance with the Moroccan customs, but as the question of France's administering the customs comes up later, the Franco-German contention remains open.

French Fight the Chinese.

Marseilles, Jan. 23.—The Chinese mail which arrived here yesterday brought an account of the invasion of Tonquin, French Indo-China by Chinese regulars who encountered a French force numbering 400 men, of whom 150 were Europeans. A three-hours battle ensued resulting in the defeat of the Chinese, who lost 300 killed and 300 wounded. The French lost 16 men of the foreign legion, and 29 Annamites killed.

Kingston, Jan. 23.—The nomination of E. J. B. Pense as the candidate for the Liberals, and of Donald M. McIntyre for the Conservatives in the bye-election, took place in the City Hall yesterday at 1 o'clock. At this hour only a few persons were present, and the preliminaries were limited to the legal requirements only. At 2 p. m. the hall was comfortably filled, and in 20 minutes more it was packed. Besides the candidates J. T. Rigney for Mr. McIntyre, and Dr. Richardson, for Mr. Pense, spoke.

WON'T DEBATE HELL.

Dr. Torrey's Reply to a Challenge to Debate the Subject From the Christadelphians of Toronto.

Toronto, Jan. 22.—Dr. Torrey will refuse to debate the doctrine of future punishment with Thomas Williams of Chicago.

The opposition to Dr. Torrey's theories of hell reached the climax last night when the following challenge was sent to him by the Christadelphians of Toronto:

"The Christadelphians of Toronto, believing the doctrine of unending hell torments to be contrary to 'Christianity, science and sense,' and a gross libel upon the Bible, which they believe to be holy, and the divinely inspired word of God, hereby challenge Dr. Torrey to a public debate with Thomas Williams of Chicago, author, publisher and lecturer, upon the following subject: 'Do the Scriptures Teach the Doctrine of Unending Hell Torments?'"

When asked if he intended to reply to the challenge, the evangelist said: "I certainly would not make any reply or pay any attention to the challenge whatever. I am not in such business. If they want to talk, let them hire a hall and talk. They don't bother me in the least. I am not in such a picayune business."

"Do you want to hear the challenge?" he was asked.

"No, I certainly do not. I have no time."

Both Meetings Crowded.

Both meetings at Massey Hall yesterday were crowded to the doors. In the afternoon many of the delegates to the conference were present, and the evangelist spoke on the blessings and power imparted by God's Spirit, introductory to his sermon to the ministerial conference this afternoon.

It was the purpose of the Holy Spirit not to make Christians happy nor holy, but to fit them for soul-saving work, and to give them power to stem the awful tide hellwards.

He referred to the great work that Christians must do in bringing their own family to Christ. There was nothing so holy as sanctified motherhood.

"In the world to-day," he said, "there is nothing that undermines the blessing of the Holy Spirit in the churches, nothing that shakes the very foundations of our social and domestic life like that hell-born theory of race suicide.

Two thousand working girls admitted by special ticket occupied seats in the first gallery in the evening.

PERSIA'S HOUSE OF JUSTICE.

Shah Presides Over Representative Elective Assembly.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 23.—A constitutional Government for Persia, according to advices from Teheran received here, is the outcome of a sudden exodus of a thousand merchants and mullah priests from the Persian capital and a protest against the Shah's Government. The insurgents proceeded to the village of Shah-Abd-Ul-Azim, where the Shah presided over a representative assembly elected by the mullahs, merchants and landowners.

The assembly will be called the "House of Justice," and exercise administrative and legislative powers. The equality of all before the law will be proclaimed. It is expected that the assembly will demand the dismissal of M. J. Naus, the Belgian Minister of Customs and Posts, and the Belgian employes of the customs.

King's Accession Day Celebration.

London, Jan. 23.—The fifth anniversary of the accession of King Edward was celebrated throughout the United Kingdom with salutes, flag flying and bell ringing.

The King and Queen, who are now at Windsor Castle, attended the annual memorial service yesterday in honor of the late Queen Victoria, which was held in the Frogmore Mausoleum.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—Flags were flown from civic and Government buildings, and, in memory of the departed sovereign, the Daughters of the Empire placed a wreath of violets on the statue in Queen's Park with the inscription, "Victoria, beloved by her people, Jan. 22, 1901."

A Flim-Flam Game.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—In the Police Court yesterday the preliminary investigation of the loan agents for conspiracy to defraud came to a sudden stop. KISSED MR. M'MASTER

Ladies' Candidate, However, Was Downed by Labor Vote.

Former Montreal King's Counsel Defeated in the Leigh Division of Lancaster by 2,006—Chamberlain Admits Surprise—Realizes Now That a Political Revolution Is in Progress—Only Two of Monday's Returns In.

London, Jan. 23.—(C. A. P.)—Donald McMaster, K. C., lately of Montreal, has failed in his effort to wrest the Leigh division of Lancaster from the Liberal column and was defeated yesterday by J. F. Brunner, the Liberal candidate, by 2,006, the vote being 7,175 to 5,169. The constituency has been Liberal for over 20 years by majorities ranging in the neighborhood of a thousand. At last election the majority was reduced to 120. The riding includes large mining interests and the Labor vote is considerable.

Appealing for the Labor vote the Liberal candidate pointed out in a recent speech that Mr. McMaster had spoken against Labor candidates in other ridings, while he had shown friendship for Labor by loaning his motor car to three Labor candidates, and each of them won.

But the campaign has not been entirely in vain for the Conservative candidate, as a report from the riding says after his meetings several ladies insisted on kissing Mr. McMaster.

Only Two Returns of Monday's Polling.

Only two other returns were received last night out of 22 pollings yesterday. Sir J. F. Leese retains the Accrington division of Lancashire for the Liberals by 2,257 over a Unionist and Independent Socialist. The Gorton division of Lancashire goes to the Labor candidate, John Hodge, defeating S. W. Roys, Conservative, by 4,228. The seat was won for the Conservatives by Ernest Hatch, whose majority was 320, in 1900, but Mr. Hatch went over to the Liberals last year and did not seek re-election.

In the short race for the biggest majority Romford bids fair to be second. Sir Edward Clarke, Conservative, with 10,706, in the City of London, is still at the top, but Romford yesterday disclosed a Liberal majority of 8,858, a change from a Conservative majority of 3,062 last time.

John Sinclair, who was elected for Forfarshire, Scotland, is the Secretary for Scotland, and son-in-law of Lord Aberdeen.

The score to date is: Liberals, 274; Labor, 37; Conservatives, 115; Nationalists, 80.

Party gains: Liberals, 150; Labor, 30; Conservatives, 9; Nationalists, 2.

Worse Than Expected.

In a campaign speech last night Mr. Chamberlain admitted the majority against him was much larger than he expected, and recognized that a political revolution had been in progress. "But," he affirmed, "I want, once more, now at the end of the election, to put on record my determination to pursue to the end the policy which I believe to be demanded in the interest of the population.

"Tariff reform is not dead. When the calumnies which have for the moment overwhelmed it have come home to roost; when all the side issues are forgotten, tariff reform will remain as the only practical remedy for the distress with which our English trade and workmen are confronted. It will come back, and meanwhile our duty is to keep the lamp alive."

LATE MR. PREFONTAINE.

Remains of Dead Minister Arrive At Halifax and Are Received With Honor—The Funeral Procession.

Halifax, N. S., Jan. 23.—The body of the late Hon. Mr. Prefontaine was landed at 11.30 yesterday from H.M.S. Dominion, and the funeral procession passed from the dockyard to the station between lines of soldiers.

The funeral was a striking one. About 400 bluejackets and marines from H. M. S. Dominion were in line, as well as the Canadian soldiers and marines. It was one of the most spectacular funerals ever seen here.

The order of the funeral procession was as follows: Band; guard 100 men; gun carriage drawn by Canadian marine detachment; member of family of deceased Minister; Marine Department; A. D. C.'s to Governor-General; Lieut.-Governor and staff; Archbishop of Halifax, Roman Catholic; Bishop of Nova Scotia, Episcopal; representatives of other denominations; members of Federal Cabinet; Chief Justice of Nova Scotia; members of Privy Council not in Cabinet; senior naval officer and staff; members of Senate; judges Supreme Court Canada; judges Supreme Court Nova Scotia; Federal members of Parliament; members of Provincial Government; Mayor of Halifax; members Legislative Council; members House of Assembly; Mayor of Town of Dartmouth; Halifax City Council; Dartmouth Town Council; Mayors, Wardens and Councillors of other municipalities; naval and military officers; citizens.

The special train to which the mortuary car is attached left Halifax at 1 p. m. for Montreal.

CARTER ON TRIAL.

Kirkfield Stable Trainer Gives Vivid Description of His Fatal Quarrel With "Dutch" Miller.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—In the Assize Court, Alex. Carter was arraigned on the charge of manslaughter, for causing the death of Fred (Dutch) Miller by shooting him in the Seagram kitchen on Nov. 26 last. Justice Britton is presiding. All the evidence is in. Counsel will address the jury this morning.

A feature of the trial was the dramatic, graphic and excitable manner in which the accused gave his evidence. Carter's description of the fatal quarrel between him and Miller was vivid. He told how, after they were alone in the "kitchen," he called Miller "a big Dutch bully," and accused him of being ungrateful. More words followed. Miller went to his trunk, and while lifting the lid said: "—— —— I'll kill you." Miller turned with the revolver and snapped it twice, while it was pointed at his (Carter's) head. They grappled and the struggle for the gun commenced. They turned and twisted.

"I knew I was fighting for my life," said Carter. Both had hold of the weapon with both hands, their arms extending full length upwards. Miller had his finger on the trigger. The gun was pointing downwards when it went off. Miller fell back on the bed. Carter then went out on the street and asked some boys to hurry for a doctor.

Witness, in telling of this part of the fight, got down out of the box and described the position of himself and his opponent.

Dr. Caven, who made the post-mortem, testified that the shot which caused death was fired with the revolver pointing downward. He saw no signs of gun-powder. If a revolver was fired a foot from the object, one would naturally find to expect signs of powder. Fired at two feet there would be none shown on a tweed coat.

Other witnesses testified that the dead man had from time to time made threatening remarks against the accused.

The accused is a trainer in the employ of the Kirkfield stable, and the dead man was employed by the Seagram stable.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

In the Assize Court, Dominico Taberinto, pleaded guilty to manslaughter. Judge Britton postponed sentence. Taberinto was tried at the last Assizes on the charge of killing Amos Marlow at Mimico on Sept. 22 last. The jury disagreed.

BATTLESHIP SUNK.

Three Hundred of Brazil's Turret Ship Aquidauban's Crew Go Down With Her—Only One Officer Saved.

Rio Janeiro, Brazil, Jan. 23.—The Brazilian turret ship Aquidauban has been sunk at Port Jacarepagua, south of Rio Janeiro, as the result of an explosion on board.

Three hundred of her crew perished, and only one officer was saved.

Four rear admirals perished on board the Aquidauban, which had been used for the accommodation of a number of supernumery officers and men attached to the flotilla escorting the cruiser Barroso, having the Minister of Marine and his staff on board, who were inspecting the sites proposed for a new arsenal.

The explosion on the Aquidauban occurred in the powder magazine.

The vessel sank in three minutes.

212 Sailors Were Killed.

Later advices show that the number killed in the blowing up of the battleship was 212, and that 98 of those aboard were saved.

The bodies will be brought to Rio Janeiro and given a national funeral.

There is general mourning here, and all the theatres are closed.

The following members of the commission which left the arsenal on board the Aquidaban, accompanying the minister of marine, were drowned:

Rear-Admiral Rodrigo Jose Da Rocha, Rear-Admiral Francisco Calheiros Da Graca, Rear-Admiral Joao Candido-Brazil, and Capt. Alves De Larrigo.

Two commanders, two German photographers, and one reporter also were drowned.

Teas Get Stale

and you can tell a stale tea the minute you taste it, it lacks the fragrance and the aroma that a fresh tea has.

You Won't Buy Stale Bread

Why buy stale tea? Tea that has been standing around some store for a couple of months or more--generally more. To sell fresh tea it is necessary to buy fresh tea and sell it quick, or it will go stale waiting to be sold. We buy all our tea direct from places of growth and new teas are constantly at our warehouse in Montreal where they are opened, blended, repacked and shipped weekly to our different stores Consequently our teas are always fresh.

STROUDS

An Acute Step In the Quarrel

Balkan Situation Has Become Serious Once More.

Austro-Hungary and Turkey Try to Break Up Coalition of the Balkan States—Servian Cattle Barred Out of Austro-Hungary. Its 90 Per Cent Market—Turkey Takes Action—King Peter Must Go Soon.

Vienna, Jan. 24—A despatch received late Monday night from Belgrade says that the Austro-Hungarian frontier has been closed against Servian cattle. This marks an acute step in the quarrel between Austria-Hungary on one side, and Bulgaria and Servia on the other, as the result of secret negotiations between the Balkan States for a mutual customs union.

All the efforts of Austria-Hungary to terminate the negotiations looking to the conclusion of the customs union have been unavailing. In its last note on the subject the Servian Government declined to be guided by Austria-Hungary's suggestion in the matter. The negotiations between Austria-Hungary and Servia for the conclusion of a commercial treaty were officially broken off Monday because of Servia's persistence in endeavoring to form the union with the other Balkan states.

The closing of the Austro-Hungarian frontier against the importation of Servian cattle into Austria-Hungary is clearly an aggressive movement for the purpose of making Servia understand that Austria-Hungary is firmly opposed to the proposed neutral customs union of the Balkan states. Ninety per cent. of the Servian cattle are marketed in Austria-Hungary.

Turkey Makes Demands.

London, Jan. 24.—Telegraphing from Sofia Monday, The Times' correspondent says:

"Contending that Bulgaria has no right under the provisions of the Berlin treaty to conclude such a convention, Turkey has presented a note requiring that Bulgaria abandon the Servia-Bulgarian convention. Bulgaria refuses to comply with the request.

"Turkey's intervention, apparently, is attributable to Austro-Hungarian inspiration, and introduces a new factor in the situation; but it is not known whether Turkey is ready to enforce the demand by frontier regulations."

Special despatches from Vienna to yesterday morning's London newspapers are inclined to attribute the strained relations between Austria-Hungary and Servia partly to the waning influence of King Peter. The King is represented as being powerless to control the policy of his Cabinet owing to the growth of Radical and Republican influences which, it is said, appear to threaten the position of the Servian dynasty.

Days Are Numbered.

The correspondent of The Daily Mail says:

"It is believed in Austria that the days of the Karageorgevitch dynasty are numbered, and that before a year has elapsed King Peter and his family will be expelled. King Peter's court is virtually boycotted by the European courts, owing to suspicions that he had foreknowledge of the murder of King Alexander and Queen Draga, and already a strong party is trying to place a German prince on the Servian throne."

The correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says he hears that Austria has learned of the conclusion of a military alliance between Servia and Bulgaria.

Mayor of London Appointed.

Toronto, Jan. 24—A Royal Commission was issued yesterday morning, appointing Joseph C. Judd, mayor of London, and a member of the firm of Meredith and Judd, solicitors, a commissioner to inquire into the charges and counter charges which have been made against S. T. Bastedo and J. S. Webster, of the Fisheries Department. Mayor Judd of London was at the buildings yesterday arranging the preliminaries. Charges on both sides must be submitted in writing by Friday morning. Commissioner Judd will peruse the copies of their charges against each other between Friday and 10 o'clock Monday morning, when each side must be ready with their witnesses to appear before him at the Parliament buildings.

Pastor's Diamonds Found.

Toronto, Jan. 24.—Rev. D. M. Martin, Cannington, Ont., on the 16th Dec. placed his valise on a seat in the Union Station. It contained three stick pins, gold watch, set with diamonds; diamond sunburst, wedding ring, diamond ring, string of pearls, string of colle beads from South America, and other ornaments. The valise disappeared. Yesterday Maurice Morden, who said he worked for the C. P. R. at one time, was seen in Hamilton trying to dispose of the watch for a few dollars. Detective Sockett will bring him back. Sergt. Duncan has located the sunburst, diamond pin and the valise in Toronto.

Worst in Fifty Years.

Galt, Jan. 24.—The earliest and worst spring flood on record for fifty years is now raging on Grand River, which has risen 15 feet. Happily there is little heavy ice, otherwise the damage would be great. All the factories north and south of the water are shut down by reason of flooded premises. The G. T. R. tracks are submerged, and traffic is stopped. There is considerable damage to the contents of cellars. The flood came wholly unexpectedly.

Five Killed by Snowslide.

Silverton, Colo., Jan. 24—Five Italian miners employed at the Sunnyside Mine lost their lives in an immense snowslide late Monday afternoon. There are eleven slides between Silverton and Elk Park. The slides average from seven to thirty feet deep and from 50 to 450 feet wide.

Conservative Convention.

Toronto, Jan. 24.—It is said a movement is on foot to call a Conservative provincial convention for some time early in March, when the Legislature will be in session.

Children Slide to Death.

Sherbrooke, Que., Jan. 24.—A drowning accident occurred here yesterday afternoon. Two young children, Claudia Enniare, 14 years old, and Jeannette Gagnon, four years, were sliding down a very icy hill, which finished at the river. They slid on to a large piece of ice, which immediately started away and broke up. The only witness of the accident was unable to render assistance, as the stream was by that time full of floating ice.

Didn't Know He Was Missing.

Perth, Jan. 24.—The body of John Maclaren, who left his home in Dalhousie Nov. 29, to visit his brother in Burgess, eight miles away, was found in a swamp, one-half mile from that place, yesterday. Through neglect and delay in correspondence, it was not until a week ago that his relatives realized that he was missing. He was 75 years of age.

What makes old age so sad is not that our joys but our hopes cease.—Richter.

OUR PRICES

We claim and guarantee our prices to be as low or lower, value considered than can be found anywhere in CANADA,

Fifty years of merchandising experience places us in a position to know what GOOD VALUES are and being in constant touch with the largest markets we enjoy inside prices.

Establishments in large cities as Toronto and Montreal have, owing to greater land values, higher rents, etc., expense bills proportionately many times larger than ours.

These expense bills must be paid and can only be met by being added to the retail prices.

Thus while we enjoy ideal buying advantages our lower ratio of expense enables us to mark our goods at a lower margin than is possible in the larger centres.

If you contemplate a purchase, investigate our values before sending out of the city.—It will save you money.

The Kingston Election.

GAMEY'S CHARGES.

The by-election in Kingston is likely to be unique in character, as it is to be run on principles not, unfortunately, heretofore practiced. No teams are to be hired to convey voters to the polls; no undue influence is to be practiced, and, what is of greater importance, no money is to be spent. Kingston in the past has had an unenviable reputation and will deserve the encomiums of the whole Dominion if the agreement of the contesting parties be rigidly and honestly adhered to and carried out. That it will be, on the part of the Conservatives, there is no doubt.

The agreement does not taboo speech-making, hence there will be no limit to oratory.

Already instructive speeches have been made by Mr. Lucas, M.P.P. and others. Not the least among them is that of Mr. Gamey, M.P.P., who has the courage to hit straight from the shoulder. In his address to the electors of Kingston he made bold charges, which those who followed events as they transpired under the Ross Government, will readily believe. Among other charges he made was one of a serious character. "In dealing with the sale of timber and mines, the Mail reports him to have said that the "Cap." Sullivan sale of land for $9,000 cost him only $250, and then dealt with the Hunter claim deal, which, he said, would be investigated at the next session of Parliament. He hopes to be able to show that two Liberal Cabinet Ministers received $25,000 and $10,000 respectively, and a Government official $5,000. The last sale in connection with this claim realized $600,000, while the original price paid the Government some ten years previous was a mere trifle."

The Globe reports him as saying: "He was in a position to state authoritatively that at the next session of the House it would be shown that E. F. B. Johnston, K. C., of Toronto, had received about $40,000 in cash from the Hunter timber limit claim; that a former prominent Liberal Cabinet Minister had received $25,000, and another Minister $10,000."

These are serious charges. If the Sullivan transaction, which is known to have occurred, be the principle upon which the timber department of the Ross Government was conducted, the statement of Mr. Gamey will be readily accepted as correct.

Are there not reasons why charges of this character should not be made, particularly on the eve of an election. The first of which is, that no matter how true, Grits will denounce them as fabrications, though vouched for by the most respectable people of the locality.

No better evidence of this can be given than the conduct of the leaders, as well as the rank and file of the Liberal party in this city at the last election. Notwithstanding the fact that the bogus ballot-box fraud was exposed, and vouched for by respectable citizens, who put the boxes on exhibition, Grits, who claim to be honest and respectable, even in politics, voted for Lott, at the same time indulging in loud-mouthed denunciation of those who exposed the fraud. In that case there was positive proof of villainy. It is hoped Mr. Gamey is well fortified with evidence to sustain his charge. Is there not another and important reason for not giving publicity to these charges until ready to proceed with the investigation, as it gives the accused party the opportunity they most desire, to cover up their tracks by spiriting away witnesses, and resorting to other devices so well known and practised by those engaged in these boodling operations.

Our opinion is that Mr. Gamey made no charges he is not prepared to prove; and he has what is essential in such cases, the courage and ability to push an investigation to the bitter end.

The following story is alleged to have been doing duty for over 50 years: A young German who had come to Harvard College as an instructor decided to take a sleighride one mild winter day and went to the livery stable to make arrangements. As the sleigh was about to be turned over to him, the livery foreman looked up and asked:—"Shall I put in a buffalo?" "Mercy no," answered the German professor. "Put in a horse!"

AN AWFUL POSSIBILITY.

(Montreal Witness.)

Mr. Donald Macmaster has been defeated but not dishonored. He entered the political lists in the Leigh Division of Lancashire — a 'notorious' Liberal and free trade constituency, and upon what to a less sanguine man would have seemed a forlorn hope — but although his opponent received two thousand odd more votes than he did, Mr. Macmaster, so far as the cable informs us, received all the kisses. We are told, too, by that same cable — very often a very funny cable it is—that they were 'ladies'' kisses, always the sweetest. It was the ladies that 'insisted.' Yet there is, it must be admitted, a peril in ladies' kisses. We all know what happened to poor Hobson, and that to be 'Hobsonized' has become a part of the 'American' language, and we should hate to think that to be Macmastered should be the English variant of this somewhat painful verb. Supposing, some day in the future, a bashful and rejected candidate should be 'persistently' kissed by 'ladies', and should be led to exclaim, 'Ye fates, but I'm Macmastered!'

HOCKEY.

No Games Yesterday.

The long-deferred cold wave did not arrive in time to provide any hockey yesterday. On Monday Winnipeg defeated Portage la Prairie by 8 to 2, and Calumet won from Pittsburg by 7 to 2 at Calumet.

SPORTING NOTES.

It now looks like good ice for the Cobourg-Belleville game here to-morrow night, and in that case hockey-lovers will see the swiftest and hardest fought match of the season. The Cobourgs are touted as the greatest in group 2, but wait til the Belleville flyers get through with 'em to-morrow night.

If the locals will play their positions and stay on the ice to-morrow night they should have a gilt-edged chance of winning. They are in fine shape, can go the distance at top speed, and if they don't beat the husky Cobourgs many in this city will have another guess coming.

Harry Mathewson, a brother of the Famous Christy, has been signed to pitch with the New York Giants.

The Chippewa Yacht Club, which has held the gold challenge cup of the American Power Boat Association for two years has accepted a challenge for the cup from the Riverton Yacht Club of Riverton, N.J. The races will take place at Chippewa Bay, Thousand Islands, in August.

J. A. Culverwell, of Port Hope has announced to Harry McGuire, manager of the Cobourg junior hockey team, that he will donate a silver cup, valued at $15, to be called the "Twin Cities Electric Power Cup," to the winner of Group No. 2 of the Ontario Hockey Association junior series this year. The teams in the group are the twin cities, Cobourg and Port Hope, and Belleville and Picton. The cup is to be presented by Mayor Ewing, of Cobourg, at a banquet to be given by the donor of the cup to the winning team and friends.

The Belleville juniors have been keeping in training by running and other exercise, and will be in first-class shape to-morrow night for the game with Cobourg.

There are good reasons to believe that next winter there will be two professional hockey clubs in Winnipeg, says a Winnipeg despatch. While, of course, it is too early to talk hockey for next year with the present season not half over, still the fact remains that plans are already being prepared which will ensure at least two out-and-out professional sevens. For various reasons it is stated that the professional organizations are being favored. The venture will prove an experiment in Winnipeg, though it is generally conceded that it will be a success. An attempt was made early this winter to place a professional seven in the city, but the efforts to get together the team were too long delayed, and the club did not materialize. Next winter, the danger of a recurrence of this nature will be provided against by an early start, and plans are already being formulated.

Letter From Duke of Argyll

The following gratifying extracts from a letter received last week by Colonel Ponton from the Duke of Argyll, Honorary Colonel 15th Regiment, A.L.L, are interesting to all at the present time:

"I had the pleasure of seeing two or three Canadian officers lately and always like to tell them that I can claim comradeship with them in having a connection with your old regiment, of which I am very proud.

"We had a really magnificent review at Edinburgh late in September. There were 37,000 present, and I led a Glasgow Kilted Regiment past the King. Old Lord Wemyss, at the age of 87, "rode like a Centaur,' and 'did A.D.C.' to the King.

"Poor Prefontaine! I grieve at his loss. I saw him just before he left for Paris. He was full of schemes for a marine militia. I hope his views may not be fruitless.

"You will have had Strathcona with you by this time. He is a most admirable representative of Canada here. It is not often that any country gets so unselfish and whole-hearted a representative."

NOT ON HER KNEES, SAYS MR. NORTHRUP.

CANADA IS NOT A BEGGAR FOR FAVORS FROM BRITAIN.

London, Jan. 23.—Mr. W. B. Northrup, member for East Hastings in the Canadian House of Commons, told the United Empire Club here at their dinner to-night that Canada did not care a snap for Britain in a monetary sense, but was proud of belonging to the glorious Empire. If preferential tariffs would strengthen that mighty fabric they would accept them with joy, but Canada was not asking favors. She wanted to assist in forming the greatest Empire the world has ever seen, but she was not on her knees. If the Mother Country could not accept her advances, they might go elsewhere.

County Council.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

Council met at 2 o'clock, all the members being present.

Mr. Geo. Nicholson moved, seconded by Mr. T. A. Macfarlane, that Mr. Robert Lancaster be Warden for 1906.

There being no other nominations, Mr. Lancaster was declared elected and subscribed to the declaration of office.

THE WARDEN'S ADDRESS.

The Warden-elect addressed the Council, thanking the members for the honor conferred upon him. He would do all in his power to perform the duties satisfactorily. The year upon which they were entering would be an important one, and the expenditure would be considerable. The House of Refuge would have to be erected, and this would cost probably $40,000. Some bridges would also have to be built, and, owing to so much rain, the gravel roads would no doubt need considerable repairs. He had no doubt the members would do all they could to economize.

A number of communications and petitions were read and referred to their respective committees.

Mr. Macfarlane said that a matter of great importance to the County was the building of a House of Refuge. He, in company with the Clerk, had visited the Houses of Refuge at Lindsay Whitby and Picton. He considered the building at Lindsay was a model House of Refuge, and it had accommodation for 75. The cost, including farm and building, was $50,000. The Whitby building cost $25,000, and the Picton Home $29,000.

The Clerk stated that the House of Refuge at Lindsay, was a suitable building and better equipped than the other two buildings visited.

In answer to an enquiry Mr. Macfarlane said the buildings were all of brick. The outbuildings of the Lindsay Home were excellent.

Mr. Rogers asked if the Committee had ascertained to what proportion the Houses were self-sustaining.

Mr. Macfarlane said the Committee had not been able to ascertain the information desired. The Lindsay House had not been in running order for any length of time. In Whitby at present there were 44 inmates and it had been running only two months.

Mr. Denyes moved that a building be erected in this County that would accommodate 80 inmates.

Messrs. Dryden and Best spoke in support of having a building that would accommodate 100 inmates.

Mr. Macfarlane seconded Mr. Denyes' motion, which prevailed.

Council adjourned until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

WEDNESDAY MORNING SESSION.

Council resumed at 10 a.m., Warden Lancaster presiding.

A memorial was read from Ontario County Council, asking the Hastings Council to petition the Legislature not to change the present mode of electing County Councillors. — Referred to committee on communications.

A communication was read from Co. Ponton, asking the Council to hear a deputation from the Hastings Law Association, regarding a matter affecting the Association.

The Warden was authorized to invite the Association to appear before the Council on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

REPORTS.

Mr. W. Farley presented a report that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would place the crossing near the Foxboro station in a proper state of repair, and also place proper guards.

On motion the report was received and adopted.

Mr. Macfarlane presented a report of the special committee which was appointed to look into the claim of Messrs. Smith and Rogers, of Frankford, for damages sustained by an engine going through the Frankford bridge. The committee had made an offer of $150 in full settlement of their claim, which had not yet been accepted, but probably would.

The report was adopted.

Mr. Nicholson presented a report that a satisfactory settlement had been effected with Mr. Lake on account of his engine going through Gullett's bridge in Rawdon Township.

On motion the report was received and adopted.

Mr. Macfarlane gave notice of a by-law to appoint a member of the County Audit and High School Trustees.

Mr. Vandervoort gave notice of a by-law to appoint examiners for third class teachers.

Mr. Dryden gave notice of a by-law to borrow a certain sum of money from the bank.

On motion the Council went into committee of the whole on communications

A memorial from the County of Waterloo was read, asking Hastings County Council to co-operate in petitioning the Legislature to secure better telephone regulations, and to control a trunk line, the same as the Manitoba Legislature intends to do.

Mr. Macfarlane was in hearty accord with the memorial. The Bell Telephone Company, he said, has a franchise and is so strong that it can virtually crush out any other concern. The Government should, he thought, control the trunk line. The Manitoba Government intended to do this and Ontario should do likewise. He moved that the County concur in the memorial.

Mr. Best seconded the motion.

Mr. Denyes spoke in support of the memorial, with which he was in hearty accord.

The motion was unanimously adopted.

A communication was read from Mr. E. J. Mason, of Peterboro, stating that it was proposed to send a large deputation to wait upon Parliament at Ottawa in reference to the completion of the Trent Valley Canal. Hastings County Council was asked to send delegates.

Mr. Denyes thought it was rather absurd that a deputation from various municipalities should have to go to the Government in this matter. The Government should know which is best. He moved that no action be taken in the memorial.

Mr. Nicholson was in favor of a small delegation being appointed to wait upon the Government, and moved in amendment to that effect.

Mr. Farley seconded the amendment.

Mr. Macfarlane said that at present this matter was at a critical point, namely whether the outlet should be at Trenton or Port Hope. It would be a great benefit to this County if the canal were constructed by way of the Trent river. He would favor the sending of a small delegation.

The amendment prevailed, and the appointment of the delegation was deferred for the present.

No action was taken on the communication respecting the sending of a delegation to Ottawa to confer with the Government in reference to the spread of tuberculosis and its prevention if possible. A number of the members spoke in favor of the object and hoped that success would attend the same.

A communication was read from the School Trustees' Association in reference to having a convention and appointing a deputation to wait upon the Legislature having for its object the increase of grants from the Government for school purposes.

Mr. Nicholson, whilst in favor of the scheme, did not think the County could afford to send a deputation.

Mr. Denyes said that this was an important matter and better salaries could be paid to teachers if the grant from the Government could be increased. He would favor the sending of a delegate to the convention and also to wait upon the Government.

Mr. Morton would favor sending a delegate, especially if good could be accomplished.

Mr. Bonter spoke in support of sending a delegate. He moved, seconded by Mr. Denyes, that Mr. Morton be appointed a delegate

The motion was adopted.

Memorials were read from a number of County Councils asking Hastings Council to co-operate in petitioning the Legislature not to change the present manner of electing County Councils.

Mr. Dryden moved, seconded by Mr. Kirk, that no action be taken in this matter.

Mr. Macfarlane said that members of the County Council generally were satisfied with the present mode of election of the County Councils. He did not think that Premier Whitney would do what is requested, as, when he was in Opposition, he was strongly in favor of a change being made in the present mode of electing County Councillors.

The motion was adopted.

HAIR TELLS CHARACTER.

Color of Hair Said to Indicate a Person's Temperament.

Many people believe that blonde, or light hair, denotes affection and dark hair constancy. A person without hair is no devoid of character; far from it. The disposition of the average bald-headed man is to show such solicitude for the welfare of others, that he neglects himself. A germ causes baldness. Prof. Sabouraud, of Paris, France, innoculated a rabbit with Dandruff germs, causing it to become totally bald in five weeks' time. To rid the scalp of these dangerous germs it is necessary to apply Newbro's Herpicide.

TORONTO SHAREHOLDERS WANT THE COMPANY REORGANIZED.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—The liquidation or sale of the assets of the York County Loan and Savings Company is opposed by the Toronto Shareholders' Committee, and the reorganization of the company is recommended.

The committee at a meeting last night decided to present a report to that effect to the general meeting of shareholders, to be held in Association Hall to-morrow evening.

The opinion of the committee is that the company should be reorganized and equipped with officers appointed by the shareholders at large, their duty after appointment being to develop the company's property by improvement, selling portions thereof when satisfactory prices were offered, and in this way ultimately closing the affairs of the company.

This plan means that no further collections would be made from shareholders, or stock sold, excepting any shareholder wished to sell out to any person desiring to buy.

The committee believes that with the carrying into effect of the plan of reorganization, every shareholder would receive every cent of his indebtedness with interest.

No objection is taken to the National Trust Company, in fact, the committee is of the opinion that no more capable liquidators could be appointed, but the committee does not want liquidation or sale.

It is the opinion of members of the committee that sale of the property in its present condition would not at the very outside realize more than fifty cents on the dollar to the shareholders.

NO STATEMENT TILL SEPTEMBER

Toronto, Jan. 23.—The representatives of the National Trust Company, liquidators of the York County Loan Company, have announced that it will not be possible to prepare a statement of the company's affairs before next September.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

CONVENTION OF THE BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE.

Bowmanville, Jan. 23.—The seventh biennial Epworth League Convention of the Bay of Quinte Methodist Conference opened a three days' convention in the Methodist Church today.

With Mr. E. A. Morden, Picton, President, in the chair, the Executive Committee held a session to prepare the reports to be presented and to consider matters of finance. The Reception Committee were busy during the afternoon receiving and registering the one hundred and fifty delegates and assigning their billets.

The church, auditorium, school, lecture and League rooms are very elaborately decorated with bunting, Union Jacks, banners, mottoes, texts, plants and palms, giving the whole interior a fairylike appearance.

A motto most conspicuous is "Welcome," and next to that in prominence is "A revival in every League and a League in every revival."

Mr. L. K. Farr, President of the Bowmanville League, gave the delegates a hearty greeting.

The evening session opened with a song service given by the Bowmanville Methodist choir of thirty voices, led by Mr. H. J. Knight, conductor. Rev. Vernon H. Emory, pastor of the convention church, conducted the devotional exercises. Rev. Dr. A. C. Crews, of Toronto, gave a lecture on "The Sunny Side of Life," the delegates repeated in concert the active members' pledge, and Rev. J. J. Rae, of Picton, gave a capital address on "First Things First."

The arrangements made by the local League are very complete, and are said to surpass anything previously attempted in this conference.

The officers in attendance are:—President, E. A. Morden, Picton; Vice-President, Rev. A. W. Coone, S.T.L., Milford; President Missionary Department, Rev. H. W. Foley, B.D., Bayside; President Literary Department, Miss Idell Rogers, Cobourg; President Social Department, Mrs. G. W. Hammond, Campbellford; Superintendent Junior League, Miss Annie Wilson, Newcastle; Treasurer, Mrs. John Cook, Kingston; Secretary, Rev. S. F. Dixon, Wooler; Conference Representative, Rev. H. B. The Best Way to Rise in the World.

Young men are always being advised to "rise in the world."

Which may or may not be good advice. It depends upon:

How the young man rises.
What he rises upon.
What he rises to.
What he takes up with him.

If your idea is to rise in the world by making money and having people look up to you on that account it is easy enough.

If you want to go up like a man, however, put some foundation besides dollars under you. What will you rise to? To something worth while. Ideals are worth while, and one way to define ideals is to say they are what your mother wants you to be. When men go up to ideals they are the light of the world.

Brunettes Have Thick Skin.

The human skin not only varies in thickness in different individuals, but also in different parts of the same person, being in some places only one two-hundred and fortieth of an inch in thickness, while in others it is one-twenty-fifth of an inch. The skin of women and children is thinner than that of men. A thick skin is always developed over parts where there is frequent pressure, as on the hands and feet. Thickness of skin varies with the color of the hair and eyes. Usually black hair and dark brown eyes are associated with a thick skin. A moderately thick skin is found with brown hair and blue or gray eyes. The finest skin belongs to blondes and is a usual accompaniment of auburn or flaxen hair.

Harmless Necessary Evil.

The bridegroom is generally the most depressing feature of the modern wedding. If he is well off he is either bald, with a decided tendency to adipose tissue, or else of a pale, sandy type, with equally pale eyes and a retreating chin. In ordinary life he wears spectacles, which at the request of the bride he discards at the wedding, with the result that he stumbles over the last step leading from the chancel to the altar rails and is only saved from falling flat on his face by desperately clutching at the bride's bouquet.—Ladies' Field.

A Perplexed Poet.

An Indiana poet recently sent a poem, accompanied by the following note, to the editor of a magazine:

"Dear Sir—I have written these lines for your consideration."

Instead of getting the ordinary rejection slip he received this reply:

"Why?"

He is still wondering whether he ought to explain or not.

In a Bad Way.

Johnny—I wish my folks would agree upon one thing and not keep me all the time in a worry. Tommy—What have they been doing now? Johnny—Mother won't let me stand on my head, and dad is all the time fussing because I wear my shoes out so fast.

TIMELY TOPICS.

BACK HOME.

I've been up in th' mountains
For a little spell o' rest—
Up where th' birds an' trees an' brooks
Are alwus at their best.
Away from th' din o' th' city streets,
Away from the rush o' trade—
Jest lollin' 'round in th' lap o' peace,
An' p'rhaps I'd oughter stayed
A few days more, but I kinder felt
That, while 'twas nice t' roam,
Among th' trees an' by th' brooks,
I'd like t' git back home.

There hain't no place for me like that,
Where I can sit around,
Knowin' that I own it all,
From th' roof down to th' ground,
There's certain chairs that fit my back
As other chairs don't do;
There's a bed that's been my friend for years
An' a lounge that suits me, too,
I like th' paper on th' walls
An' the pictures hangin' there;
I like the carpets on th' floors
An' th' scent that's in th' air
Of home-made bread an' bakin' beans
An' other things that's good,
Cooked by th' sweet-faced, gray-haired girl
Who at my side has stood,
Strong and noble, like a queen,
For more than forty years,
Joinin' in my laughter
An' joinin' in my tears.
I put my arm around her
An' kiss her precious face.
She lays her head down on my breast—
It's her fav'rite restin' place—
I stroke her snowy hair an' think
That while it's nice to roam
Among th' trees an' by th' brooks
I'd ruther be back home.

—Thomas Holmes.

Announcement comes from Ottawa that a Quebec member is to get the portfolio rendered vacant by the death of Hon. Mr. Prefontaine. Who ever supposed anything else? According to the Canadian Military Gazette, the Minister of Militia has secured the co-operation of the provinces in his scheme to introduce a system of military preliminary training into the public schools of Canada. In consequence he will promote legislation at the next session of Parliament to meet the new conditions. The Minister further states that the department will undertake to supply the men to give the necessary training, and will find the rifles for the practice which is to be made the main part of the instruction. Wherever there is a school there is usually a militia officer or non-com. in the neighborhood who could be inexpensively secured to give the necessary teaching, while a few rifles per school would be quite sufficient for the wants of the young shots. Thus efficiency could be secured at the minimum cost, and an asset of immense strength added to the militia forces of Canada.

An ailment like consumption that has been months and years getting a foothold cannot be relieved in a week or day. Scott's Emulsion will always afford relief and often cure, but not over night. The consistent use of Scott's Emulsion will positively help the consumptive at any stage of the disease. We guarantee nothing beyond this, but we know that right living and Scott's Emulsion have done more to cure consumption than anything else.

We shall soon have to say "Good-by" to the "Hello" girl. Out in Grand Rapids, Michigan, a practically "girlless" telephone system has been in successful operation for over a year on an exchange of considerable size. Results are so satisfactory, especially in the matter of economy, that an eventual and complete divorce between the girl and the telephone seems possible, if not probable, in much larger exchanges than has heretofore been thought possible. The figures given by Mr. C. E. Tarte, general manager of the Citizens' Telephone Company of Grand Rapids are as follows: The system with a girl exchange cost, during 1903, $9.40 per telephone, there being 4,977 subscribers. For the year ending June 30, 1905, during which an automatic system was in operation and 6,119 subscribers were supplied with service, the cost per 'phone was but $4.60, less than half that under the girl regime.

One of the current stories springing from the curtailment of railroad pass privileges concerns George H. Daniels, former head of the New York Central, now manager of the Company's advertising business. He sent an annual pass to Stuyvesant Fish, President of the Illinois Central, who, on examination, found that according to restrictions on the pass the only train he could use was one that left New York city about sunrise. Mr. Fish, in order to show equal courtesy, filled out a pass in Mr. Daniels' name and sent it with a pleasantly worded note acknowledging the favor which the latter had conferred upon him. Mr. Daniels examined the pass and saw that it read: "Good for transportation on all hand-cars on all the lines of the Illinois Central Railroad system."

A prospective Boston bridegroom, who meant to be master in his own house, called on the well known Unitarian clergyman, the Rev. C. W. Wendte, who was to tie the knot the following day. "I have heard," he said, "that you omit the word 'obey' from the marriage service. Will you kindly insert it to-morrow?" Mr. Wendte obligingly promised to do so. "Wilt thou, Lucy," promise to love, honor and obey?" was promptly answered by the bride without demur. The same question was put to the groom, who hesitated, stammered and gulped, but answered as had his bride, "I will," probably not wishing to create a scene. Later he reproached the minister. "But you asked me to use the word 'obey,' said Mr. Wendte, with a twinkle in his eyes; how was I to know that you wanted it for the lady only. You should have been more explicit."

100 yards from the part of the beach where the Eureka was lying, and the captain had lit upon the spot accidentally, while he was engaged in turning the island of Piper's cay upside down to find the two authorized water searchers.

"No more shore leave for anybody at present," he declared that evening, therefore, when he had heard his daughter's tale. "It doesn't seem to be safe, and, besides, we've got plenty of work for all hands, without wasting our time in playing hide and seek all over the island. Tomorrow we'll set about the filling of the water casks and the other jobs that brought us to Piper's cay. I don't want to stay here a day longer than is necessary to put the ketch into proper trim for another attempt on the Santa Catarina's money box. We've got through a fairish bit of the repairing work today, while you two youngsters have been amusing yourselves by tumbling into my piratical ancestor's mantraps. But there's still three days' work good to be done before I shall declare the Eureka in fit trim to weather an Atlantic blow, so we'll make it four bells, doctor, and all hands to take their watch below. We shall make an early start tomorrow."

"Come, out with it, Tom!"

But, as it proved, the general overhaul of the ketch was not destined to begin on that next day, after all, for in the morning at breakfast Tom Jelly made a statement that gave the whole crew other work to do. The one armed sailor arrived at the foot of the companion with a very embarrassed grin peeping from among the jungle of black hair on his face. He kneaded his cap nervously in his hand and did not seem to be able to speak at all till the captain had twice exclaimed, "Come, out with it, Tom!"

At last, with a loud introductory "H'm!" the man began his explanation.

"Why, cap'n, it's that lubber Cain!" And there he fetched up short.

"Well?" said the skipper, with a trifle of impatience. "What's the matter with him? He hasn't been running away, has he?"

"Why, cap'n," replied Jelly, "I believe you've about hit it. You see, it was this a-ways: Cain and me was ashore with the jolly las' thing las' night, and Cain, he says, 'Tom,' says he, 'I bin a poacher, I bin.'

"'Oh!' says I. 'Have you reely now?'

"'A dasprit poacher,' says he, 'afore Zusan Pierce took me in hand, and the longing's coming on me again now. If I doan't go poach this night, I's'l bust.'

"'Surely not,' says I, shifting to wind'ard of him a trifle.

"'Surely, yes,' says he. 'Zusan Pierce not being 'ere, 'tis poach or bust.'"

"What's the use of telling us all this rigmarole?" broke in the doctor impatiently.

"With due respect," said the voice of Tom from behind the black jungle, "you'd better hear the whole yarn. Well, I says to him, I says, 'Cain, when'll you have done?'

"'Sun up,' says he, 'sees me standing where us is now.'

"Then says I, always being wishful to do the kind to a shipmate, though he be but a cook with the clay still yaller on his heels: 'Here goes, then, for shoving off wi'out you. But sun up Cain La-what's-un's-name or I'll be getting into trouble.'

"'Sun up, Tom Jelly,' says 'ee, an starts off into the scrub, leaving me to scull the jolly aboard by myself. Now, cap'n, that was how it began, but, though sun up see me ashore again and though I waited a matter of two hours, no Cain hove in view. So off I sculls again to the ketch and tells the whole business to 'Enrietta, 'er bein fust person to hear it.

"'Tom Jelly,' says she, 'you be a blamed fool!' Them's the very words, cap'n—'blamed fool!' 'And,' says she, 'get below, you black avised swab, and tell the skipper at once!' Terrible clever woman 'Enrietta be, gentlemen all and miss."

The man was going on, but Captain Colepepper cut his rambling short with a "That'll do!" whereupon he saluted with his solitary fist and tumbled up the ladder.

"What does this mean, Colepepper?" the doctor asked, picking his wig up from a locker and clapping it on his bare sconce. "The fellow can't have been trying to desert, can he?"

"I don't see that there's anywhere to desert to," replied the captain perplexedly.

"Caves and booby traps," suggested Dolly.

"Ah," said the doctor, "of course! I fancy that's more to the point, Colepepper. It seems likely enough that this infernal island fairly bristles with pleasant surprises of that kind. That great lumbering fool evidently went off under the impression that he was going to lay hands on black game or red deer, as he was probably accustomed to do on Dartmoor, when he carried less flesh on his bones. I've heard of men getting a touch of that sort of madness when they find themselves ashore after a long spell at sea. The only thing which surprises me is that this plethoric clod should have had enough imagination or energy for such an adventure."

"He'll have found some cosy niche, I expect," said the captain, "and have tumbled off to sleep. We shall hear him bawling, like one of his brother Abel's bulls, from the shore there in the course of the morning, asking to be taken off again. If he'd only screw his voice up into some sort of a decent sea hail, I believe I'd let him off without a wigging. Now, on deck, all hands, and set to getting the work done! Thanks to my scurry round yesterday after you two youngsters, I've found the place where Piper or my scoundrelly ancestor or some of the other blackguards of the old days used to heave their craft down. It'll fit the Eureka as though it had been built for her."

They got the anchor up, and, putting the ketch under jib and mizzen, worked her into the miniature bay which the captain had noted. It was rather delicate work getting in, as the whole place was not bigger than a dock basin, but the captain had the boat out to get warps ashore, and before he piped down to dinner the Eureka was snugly moored by shore fasts at stern and bow. One of the sides of this tiny harbor was steep to, and by getting out a couple of springs and slacking up a trifle on the other warps they were able to heave her close in, and then, after slipping out the gangway, a bridge of planks put them in direct communication with land.

And when all this was done, still no Cain Laversha had returned.

"I'm afraid, Colepepper," said the doctor anxiously, "that your sleep theory is a wrong one, after all. I fear the fellow has got pitted like the young people were."

"It looks as if you might be right, doctor," admitted the captain, with some irritation. "Confound the lout! I don't suppose he'd have the sense to find us in our new moorings, either, if he did come down to the shore and found that the ketch wasn't exactly where he'd seen her last. I wish I'd left her where she was and gone to look for the man this morning."

"We must have volunteers for a search party," said Dr. Tring.

"No, I'll take all hands," replied the captain. "We shall be more likely to find him quickly if we spread well, and no harm can come to the ketch where she is lying now."

Five minutes after this the whole crew was ashore, with instructions to advance straight across the island and not to be afraid of giving tongue as soon as they saw any sign which might lead them to the missing farmer.

"Half a minute, Guthrie, my lad," added the captain, as the undergraduate was setting off with Miss Colepepper. "I don't think you and Dolly had better go together, or you'll be getting one another into mischief again."

"Send Henrietta to look after them," suggested Dr. Tring, with a grin.

"Right. I will. Thanks for the idea, doctor. Here, Henrietta, go as nursery maid with my daughter and Guthrie and see that they don't break their own necks or yours. Try the pirate's snuggery first, Guthrie. That fool of a farmer may have tumbled into the very same trap as you did."

"Aye, aye, sir!" said Guthrie, and then added in a tone which only Dolly could hear: "Confound Henrietta! But we'll try to lose her."

CHAPTER XVII.

A BLOOD MARKED OAR.

When Guthrie announced to Miss Colepepper his intention of managing to lose Henrietta, he was no doubt perfectly serious, but he reckoned without the sailor woman's natural instinct of faithfulness to the spoken order of her captain. Henrietta had been told to nursery maid the two young people, and, inasmuch as she was a sailor, she stuck grimly to her ordered duty; but, inasmuch as she was at the same time a woman, she had a kindly feeling for the lovers, and therefore trudged stolidly along as far behind them as was consistent with the duty demands of her conscience. And by this compromise she succeeded in the difficult task of carrying out her orders to the satisfaction both of herself and of her charges.

They found the cave in which Nicholas the First had established his inhospitable snuggery in exactly the same condition in which they had left it. So it was obvious that the burly farmer had not been there.

"But I don't think," pronounced Dolly, "that there's the least likelihood of his having followed the shore route at all. There's far too much climbing hereabout to suit his taste. He'd be sure to take the easiest path he could find. So we ought to stand the best chance of finding him by following his example and picking out the smooth bits."

"What do you think, Henrietta?" asked Guthrie.

"Well, you see," said the woman, "he told that muddling fool, Tom Jelly, that he was going poaching, and he nat'rally wouldn't expect to find his game along the coast. So most-likely he's gone inland."

"So you think we'd better strike inland too?"

"Yes, sir and miss, I do," said Mrs. Jelly.

They took her advice and struck up into the country, but they found the going very disagreeable, for the ground was for the most part covered with a dense scrub of clinging bastard palm. Single plants of this growing in flowerpots make graceful enough ornaments for an English drawing room, no doubt, but when they are packed into a thick jungle and fostered by tropical heat they form a most unpleasant medium through which to be compelled to press a way. The stalk of each fan leaf is furnished on either side with sharp hooks, which point down the hill, and these have a way of taking toll from the flesh and wearing apparel of the climber which is, to say the least, irritating.

The part of the island which they were now exploring was made up of low hillocks and shallow gullies, and on all the upper ground this rank scrub flourished luxuriantly. In the hollows there was less of it, and its place was taken by a tall, coarse grass which often grew shoulder high. To force a passage through this and through the palm scrub, whose graceful fronds not infrequently arched completely over the searchers' heads, was sultry work enough, and the burly farmer who had made it necessary was at the moment in danger of becoming distinctly unpopular.

The West Indian sun was blazing in a cloudless sky up above them like a great furnace of brass, and the gentle breeze was not strong enough to penetrate the dense, leafy covers and give them relief. However, occasionally they came across a projecting knoll of barren rock, so smooth that the rains allowed no soil to collect upon its surface, and at such places as these they found that they could get a refreshing breath of purer, cooler air.

"There doesn't seem to be much in the way of sport for friend Cain," observed Guthrie during one of the breathing halts. "Barring sea gulls and small green parrots, we haven't seen a living thing."

Dolly gave her cheek a hasty smack.

"You forget the mosquitoes," she said. "I'm sure they're very much alive. What with them and the sand flies and the other abominations, I'm just being walked away with piecemeal. Can't we get out of this place of torment?"

"It seems all much of a muchness," said Guthrie, "but over there, to the left a bit, there's a knoll which, from what one may judge from here, should be about the highest point of the island. I vote we go up there and prospect. We may find, at least, a paradise moderately free from mosquitoes."

The undergrowth thinned a little as they neared this slight upland, as though the soil were poorer and would not support such rank herbage as grew on the lower slopes and in the bosky hollows between them, and when the climbers gained the crest their way was impeded by nothing worse than sparse tufts of grass which rarely reached to the knee.

"Hello!" exclaimed Guthrie, as he stumbled and nearly fell over something lying in the cover just below the topmost curve of the summit. "What have we here?"

A fine brown dust which had spurted out under the influence of the young man's involuntary kick said "wood," and a further examination showed that the wood had once been dressed by cutting tools.

"It's a spar of some kind," pronounced Henrietta, who had come up behind him.

They examined it curiously. It was, they found, several spars, fished together into one piece, which could not have been less than 100 feet in length. At the end of it were the remains of a platform or "top." Evidently the thing had been upreared on end at one time and held in position by shrouds and guys—indeed, Henrietta actually found its "step." The summit had been a lookout station, perhaps belonging to the mysterious Piper, perhaps even to Nicholas the First himself.

"There have been some rum sights viewed from the top of this before it was blown down," opined Guthrie.

"Very probably," replied Dolly, "but as the top of it showed the seas all around, surely the foot of it should show us most of the island."

"Well?"

"Well, if Cain's on the surface, we ought to see him if we look hard enough."

"So we ought, miss!" exclaimed Henrietta, "and if we do, mayhap we needn't tramp through any more of them nasty palms."

"If it does that, it's worth the effort," declared the undergraduate with conviction.

They settled themselves down therefore on a big bowlder and commenced scrutinizing the greenery below carefully and methodically. On one side of them, away down by the coast, could be seen Hans Spiedernichel and the doctor toiling through the scrub about a quarter of a mile apart, and near the opposite shore a blue cloud rising from a patch of tall grass showed where Captain Colepepper was waging by means of smoke an unequal war with the mosquitoes. Half way between them and the captain was Tom Jelly sitting on a bowlder and fanning himself with his cap, and, excepting for a few wheeling sea fowl, there was not another living thing in sight.

Away out farther was the calm blue water of the lagoon, dotted here and there with points of black and shimmering white, where the reefs cropped out and broke the seas from the outside, and beyond this again was the great sweep of the ocean, unbroken to the horizon. Except where the Eureka's people made patches in the solitude, the place was deserted by man and beast alike.

"No sign of the farmer anywhere," pronounced Guthrie at length, after a long and careful scrutiny.

"No," said Dolly, "but there's a thing down there which puzzles me—down on the beach near that big black bowlder. What do you make of it?"

She pointed to the place, about half a mile away, where the gleaming, white fore shore was nearest to them. Guthrie made a telescope of his hands to avoid the blinding glare from above, and stared for some time at the thing which had attracted Dolly's attention.

"It looks like an oar," he declared presently.

"That's exactly what I thought," replied the girl. "Suppose we go nearer and make certain."

So on they trudged again and found that half mile to the shore the worst bit of going they had come across so far.

"It is an oar!" exclaimed Dolly triumphantly, when at last they came out on to the open beach.

"And look-ee there!" cried Henrietta. "See that blood on the handle of it, scarcely hard yet! This oar's been used by a chap wi' a blister on's hand. Look-ee, the blood chips away when I scratch it with my nail. There's been no rain fallen on this 'ere, and we had rain only two days agone."

"Oars don't grow out of coral sand," pronounced Dolly excitedly, "nor do they drop from the clouds, that I've ever heard, nor do ghosts carry them about, or, if they do, they don't leave fresh blood stains on them! Alan, I think it's allowable to suppose that a boat has been in here, and under the circumstances we might even take it for granted that Cain went off in that boat."

"It looks like it, certainly, but where on earth could a boat come from?"

"Best call the doctor, hadn't you, sir?" suggested Mrs. Jelly. "The captain said as how we was to give tongue if we found anything."

"Right, Henrietta! You go to the top of that rock and wave to him. He's not more than a couple of hundred yards off, for I saw him just now."

The woman went, and the others ran down to the water's edge to look for footsteps or the impress of a keel or some other trace which might confirm their guess about a boat, but, though they searched high and low for some distance along the shore in both directions from the oar, they found nothing. If there had been any such marks, the wavelets had completely washed them away.

"H'm!" said Dr. Tring when he was shown the oar, with its fresh blood marks. "I tell you what, young people, I don't half like this."

"What is it, doctor—pirates?" asked Dolly, with a thrill of awe. For amid these surf guarded solitudes such a thing did not seem to her to be impossible even at the end of the nineteenth century. There was an atmosphere about Piper's cay which suggested mystery and crime.

"No; hardly so bad as that," replied Dr. Tring, with a laugh, "but I didn't look for company of any sort in the island, and, now that you have come across this irrefutable evidence that we may have callers popping in upon us presently, I confess I should like to have some testimonial to their honesty before I make ready to receive them with open arms. You see, I can't think of any reason for their presence here at all, or rather there's no reason which is at the same time obvious and lawful. There are plenty of unlawful ones, of course, without going so far as actual piracy."

"Do you think they've got hold of friend Cain?" asked Guthrie.

"Looks very like it, doesn't it?" was the answer.

"But what on earth could they want with him?" exclaimed Dolly.

"Don't know, miss," returned the doctor, "and that's another thing which rouses my suspicions. They wouldn't have detained him without a purpose of some sort, and, without being able to guess what that purpose could be, I admit that I none the less doubt its honesty."

"H'm!" said Dr. Tring.

"Oh, but"—cried Dolly—"isn't it possible that poor Cain may have met with an accident—fallen, for instance, and broken his arm? The people with the boat may have rescued him and may be looking after him!"

Dr. Tring smiled. "You want to make out a good character for the man with the blistered hand, eh, Dolly?" he said dryly. "Quite right! He may be all that you suppose him, but I'm rather afraid that the chances are the other way. In the meantime, till we know better what sort of people we shall have to deal with, I don't propose to leave the Eureka without an anchor watch any longer. The £3,000 worth of Spanish treasure which she has on board is too much temptation to put in the way of the saints of the West Indies, so I'm going straight back to her now. Dolly, you'd better come with me."

"Yes," said the girl, "I will. I confess to being tired."

"Then Guthrie," continued the doctor, "you and Henrietta may as well explore those rocks ahead there. Dolly's notion that the farmer may have met with an accident is quite a possible one; the man's fool enough for anything. It's quite on the cards that he's lying somewhere lamed, and that the boat people have nothing to do with his disappearance at all. Be back at the ketch by dark and look out for possible traps."

"No fear of them," returned the young man with a laugh. "Henrietta and I will take care not to step on any more swinging booby snares."

"Mind you do," said the doctor, "but that was not exactly what I meant. I was thinking more of the possibility that the man with the blister might prove dangerous."

"Oh, I see! Well, I'll be on my guard against him, too," said the young man confidently. "He shan't catch me napping!"

But he did.

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE CAVE OF GREEN LIGHT.

The undergraduate and the manlike sailor woman started off briskly enough for the rock gully which Dr. Tring had bidden them explore. But very soon the nature of the ground compelled them to lessen their pace.

The fine beach of coral debris first gave place to rough shingle; then small rocks began to crop out here and there, and then the fore shore grew to be nothing but one huge jumbled tangle of honeycombed stone. They worked their way painfully along about half a mile of this, scrambling and clambering, and then Guthrie had to stop and wipe the perspiration from his brow.

"Not much use going farther, is there, Henrietta?" said he. "Cain Laversha would never have given himself the trouble of climbing over ground like this. Even the heat of the poaching fever in his blood couldn't work such a miracle."

"No, I don't think he'd do it—not willing, that is," returned the woman promptly. "But he might have been forced to do it. Them as left the blood mark on that oar we found might—see here, sir," she broke off. "What's that?"

She was pointing to a huge gray bowlder in front of her. There were three or four unmistakably new scorings on it, where a hobnailed boot had slipped, struggled to recover and then brought its owner down by the run. Guthrie examined the marks. They were plain reading. The wearer of the boot had stepped on an inch wide ledge. Under his weight the film of stone which formed the substance of the ledge had scaled off clean and sharp like a knife cut.

"And see," cried Henrietta, "there's the mark where his other toe slipped! There aren't any hobnail scorings there, but there's a shiny red line, made by a copper toe cap!"

"It's our friend Cain's spoor, right enough!" exclaimed Guthrie. "We must push on and find him. Ten to one those lumbering brogues of his have brought him to bad grief over a slippery bowlder somewhere."

Now the fact that the farmer should have been wearing such uncouth footgear needs a word of explanation.

To Dr. Tring's amusement and Captain Colepepper's wrath, he had come aboard the ketch at Bristol in precisely the same bucolic attire in which he had first made his appearance at the little house in Shaftoe street—hobnailed boots, yellow gaiters, tight overcoat and hard, square bowler hat, all complete. When this unseamanlike rig out caught the skipper's eye, he had nearly exploded. "You haymaking ox!" he had roared. "D'you think I'm going to have my decks knocked into sieves by those infernal stubble mashers? Take them off your feet, sharp, or take yourself off the Eureka! And I'm hanged if I care much which you do!" And so Cain had to ship a pair of smooth soled shoes instead, and the headgear difficulty was satisfactorily settled by a callous squall, which took charge of his stiff hat in the Bristol channel.

But to the rest of his attire he stuck like a man on the surface and beneath it. Indeed report said that he was so much attached to the yellow leather gaiters that he invariably slept in them at night. With these trifles, however, the captain did not interfere. "Might as well try to make a sewing machine into a sailor as that fellow Cain," he declared resignedly. "So let him stick to his rig, and then Jones'll know to stow him in the regular landsmen's locker, if he gets down there."

Now, Cain was not an emotional man, but the separation from those inch soled boots touched him, for it was like losing a part of himself. And so, as he was not allowed to wear them on board, he hung them up in the caboose and there anointed them daily with copious libations of grease with all the devotion of a nigger to a fetich, and when the Eureka ran into the anchorage at Piper's cay and word was given for all hands to go ashore the farmer replaced his feet in their favorite coverings again, mounted the tightly buttoned fawn colored overcoat and, with a borrowed felt hat of Tom Jelly's to replace the one he had lost, was in all outward respects the same individual who had fled from the unkindness of that "tarrible hard man Abel" at the instigation of Zusan Pierce. Such attire in such a climate was provocative of laughter, but the wearer was not sensitive, and the shower of chaff which was rained on him seemed only to have the effect of confirming him in his love for the uncouth habiliments. Like a child's headless and armless doll, they were all the dearer for being despised.

Thus it was therefore that the red copper streak and the parallel scorings told a plain tale to the two people from the Eureka, and with the certain knowledge that the farmer had gone before them they hurried on over the bowlders at their best pace.

The going was still very bad, and it got worse as they proceeded. Indeed as Guthrie, nimble footed though he was, stumbled and floundered among the rocks, he wondered how the clumsy Somersetshire man had managed to get over the ground at all. The reason of his absence seemed in the light of the rock scorings clear as daylight now. He had slipped somewhere and disabled himself. His shipmates were sorry for him, of course, but at the same time they confessed to one another that it served him right. A man of his build, they agreed, ought never to have gone trapesing over such an abominable obstacle track.

"We shall not be able to carry him back the way he came," declared Henrietta. "We couldn't tote Miss Dolly herself over them rocks, let alone Cain Laversha, and she isn't half his weight or near it. We shall just have to drag him down to the water's edge somehow and then bring the boat round from the Eureka for him. Eh! But what's this, though?" she cried. "We seem to have come to the end of the road!"

They had reached a turn in the path. The steep cliff walls of the gully drew together from either side and met one another, and the tumbled, honeycombed fragments at their foot ran no farther. The arm of the sea which had followed the windings of the gully so far lapped the foot of a 40 foot precipice.

"As the worthy Cain is not a fly," observed Guthrie, "I don't see that he can have got along there. He must have turned back again. Perhaps he's got jammed in some cranny and we've passed him on the road. We must keep a better lookout on the way back and give tongue as we go."

But Henrietta had pulled herself up on to a little spire and was peering eagerly forward.

"We haven't got to the end yet, sir, after all," she reported. "There's a path down below there that seems to lead round a bend."

About a yard or so from the water's edge there was a break in the cliff which offered a three foot path, at any rate, round the next angle. What lay beyond, they could not of course tell, but they resolved to find out. A convenient fissure helped them down, and in another couple of minutes they were stepping briskly along a hard, level footpath.

"Better travelling, this, Henrietta," exclaimed Guthrie thankfully, "and more to our heavy friend's taste, I should fancy! Perhaps he's so charmed with it that he has made up his mind to stay here permanently sooner than toil over those abominable rocks again, or perhaps he's come across an attractive mermaid and fallen in love with her and so taken to a fish diet and a damp bed for the rest of his days."

"No," retorted Henrietta with a smile, "he wouldn't do that, I'm thinking; he'd be afraid of Zusan Pierce getting to hear of it, you see, sir!"

By this time they had reached the angle of the cliff and a new prospect opened out before them. Some 20 yards in front lay the entrance of a cave, into which the low swell of the lagoon ran backward and forward unceasingly, with a gentle soughing whisper. The narrow path they were following seemed to run far away up into the cool depths of the cave. Had the farmer

Ice Picks and Art.

The career of Mr. Frederick MacMonnies as a sculptor began when, as a boy of five years, scarcely tall enough to reach up to the top of the kitchen table, he modeled little figures in dough. Two years later he discovered a better material for his purpose. At that time a white wax chewing gum was much in fashion among children. Young MacMonnies saved his odd pennies until he could buy what he wanted of it, and then he made from it an equestrian statue of George Washington, which is still among the family treasures.

When he was ten years old Barnum's circus came to town. He was an enthusiastic admirer of the parade, and when the elephant appeared he became intense. He watched every motion and studied every line of the strange beast. Then he rushed into the house and, working as fast as he could, modeled from memory a clay elephant of which he need not be ashamed today. At thirteen he carved a likeness of a pet bullfrog out of a Belgian paving block, with an ice pick for a chisel

A Tough Meat Story.

Of the food served to the sailors in the British navy of 100 years ago a recent historian says: "A ship's company had to start a cruise upon the old meat returned from various ships and routed out from the obscure cellars of the victualing yards. Frequently it had been several years in salt before it came to the cook, by which time it needed rather a magician than a cook to make it eatable. It was of a strong hardness, fibrous, shrunken, dark, gristly and glistening with salt crystals. Strange tales were told about it. Old pigtailed seamen would tell of horseshoes found in the meat casks, of curious barkings and neighings heard in the slaughter houses and of negroes who disappeared near the victualing yards, to be seen no more. The salt pork was generally rather better than the beef, but the sailors could carve fancy articles, such as boxes, out of either meat."

Horses and Medicine.

Healthy horses require no medicine, but there are so many intestinal parasites and so many kinds of worms that affect horses that constant supervision pays. Almost all young horses are better for a few feeds of sulphur in the springtime. Many horsemen like to give a little worm medicine, and each man has his favorite. A good many worm medicines are harmless, and if administered to a healthy colt will do no harm. Usually a keen horseman knows whether worm remedies are necessary or not, but in case of doubt it is a little safer to give the medicine, provided the medicine is really harmless. Some medicines are harmless and some are not. Stimulants are not necessary, and stimulating medicines should never be given except on the advice of a veterinary.

Gladstone's Speech For Irving.

Gladstone was a great admirer of Sir Henry Irving, and this admiration was shown one day in the house of commons. Irving was under the gallery in the house when suddenly, without apparent reason, Gladstone leaped to his feet and delivered an impassioned speech, set off with all the expression and dramatic gesture for which he was so famous. The house seemed surprised. Members looked at one another and murmured, "What is the old man now up to?" They thought it was some deep political game. But a week or two later a friend of Irving's, encountering Mr. Gladstone, mentioned the actor's visit to the house, and Gladstone eagerly inquired: "What did he think of my speech? I made it for him."

Skinning a Sable.

The method of skinning a sable is to draw the skin over the head without any incision in the body. The feet and tail are left as part of the fur. Every thirtieth of an inch is valuable, for the average length of the animal is only twelve inches and the tail about six inches. In the reign of Henry VIII. the use of sable was forbidden to any below a viscount. A coat lined with sables is often worth from £300 to £400. A set of sable tails can hardly be sold for less than £50.—London Standard.

The Snail.

The slowest creatures in creation are snails and certain small beetles. Some of them habitually move only a foot or two in an hour, but this slowness is partly due to the fact that they remain motionless at intervals. By measuring the distances covered by snails when they were kept going constantly it has been found that the maximum speed of a good healthy snail is five and a half feet an hour.

Wiser Counsel.

"What's that sign you're making there?" asked the grocer.

"'Fresh eggs,'" replied the new clerk.

"Make it 'Fresh laid eggs.'"

"Why—er—everybody knows the eggs were fresh when they were laid."

"Exactly, and that's all that it's safe for us to say about them."

Real Merit.

Real merit of any kind cannot be long concealed. It will be discovered, and nothing can depreciate it but a man's exhibiting it himself. It may not always be rewarded as it ought, but it will always be known.

Solitude.

Solitude relieves us when we are sick of company and conversation when we are weary of being alone, so that the one cures the other. There is no man so miserable as he that is at a loss to use his time.—Seneca.

THE MONOTONY OF LIFE.

Why a Comment About It Made One Man Laugh Out Loud.

"Sometimes I think that the monotony of life wears on us far more than the duties we have to discharge," sighed a robust citizen the other evening as the car reared on its hind legs and began to creep up the shaft. "The everlasting rut or treadmill, or whatever you may choose to call it, gets on to one's nerves. Existence isn't varied for many of us; it's a perpetual grind."

His companion looked at him a moment and showed a broad grin. "I like that kind of talk," he said. "It's so truthful. Do you know what you do when anything out of the ordinary happens to interfere with your cut and dried plan and takes you a few steps out of your beaten path? I do. You throw three or four fits hand running and look and behave as if there had been a death in the family. If your wife accepts an invitation or makes an engagement for you or you're cornered so that you can't escape the theater or a concert, you're the crossest and most despondent creature on earth. And you'll invent excuses that wouldn't wash in a strong lye to dodge a visit to your relatives or an excursion or a journey to another city. You want to do the same things in the same old way day after day, and if you can't do them you sit down and cry. With you it's the morning paper, breakfast, the barber, work, luncheon, more work, home and the evening paper, and that would be your routine if you had $100,000 a year and were free to come and go as you chose. Nine men out of ten are exactly like you, and when I hear them complaining of monotony I have to laugh out loud."

STEVENSON'S PRAYERS.

They Were a Necessity to the Life of the Afflicted Writer.

"With my husband prayer—the direct appeal—was a necessity," writes Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson. "When he was happy he felt impelled to offer thanks for that undeserved joy; when in sorrow or pain, to call for strength to bear what must be borne." Then in every Samoan household the day closed with prayer and the singing of hymns. She says again: "As soon as our household had fallen into a regular routine and the bonds of Samoan family life began to draw us more closely together, Tusitala felt the necessity of including our retainers in our evening devotions." To their usual evening service they were summoned by the "pu" or Samoan war conch. She does not think it ever occurred to them that there was any incongruity in this use of it.

One of these plain, patriarchal services Stevenson himself on one occasion brought to a sudden check. "He had just learned of the treacherous conduct of one in whom he had every reason to trust. That evening the prayer seemed unusually short and formal. As the singing stopped he rose abruptly and left the room. I hastened after him, fearing some sudden illness. 'What is it?' I asked. 'It is this,' was the reply. 'I am not yet fit to say, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."'"

"Piano-Organ."

"Piano-organ" seems to have got into the language—unfortunately, since the contrivance so designated is neither a piano nor an organ. "Organ," in musical language, means an arrangement of pipes or reeds, with bellows, keyboard, pedals and draw stops. The "piano-organ" has none of these. "Piano" is short for "pianoforte" and indicates a keyed wire instrument which can be played both softly (piano) and loudly (forte). Now, nobody ever heard a "piano-organ" play "piano." A possible explanation is that the first user of the bad word "piano-organ" was trying to combine "pianoforte" and barrel organ," and, of course, he couldn't call the thing a "barrelforte."—London Chronicle.

Bismarck's Comment.

In the early days of the present German empire the question as to how the kaiser's title should run divided the court into three sections. One division favored "German emperor," the second was for "emperor of Germany," while the third wished it to be "emperor of the Germans." Bismarck, who was present at one such discussion, looked up from a meal. "What's the Latin for sausage?" he asked. "Farcimentum," said one. "Farcimen," said another. Bismarck smiled significantly as he replied, "Farcimentum or farcimen, it is all the same to me."

Inconsistent.

"If You Don't See What You Want, Ask For It," is the sign displayed over a grocer's counter. And when a man went in and asked payment of a bill that had been running for six months he was shown out through the front door. He is now of opinion that grocers are not consistent.

A Juvenile Opinion.

"I suppose you will marry when you grow up," said the visitor pleasantly.

"No" replied the thoughtful little girl; "mamma says papa is more care than the children, so I guess the care of my children will be enough for me without the care of a husband."

His Descent.

"Woodby declares his grandfather descended from one of the greatest houses in England."

"Ah, yes; I did hear a story about the old man falling off a roof he was repairing once for Lord Somebody or other!"

A hero or a genius, or both, is the man who guesses right most of the time and then does it.—Louisville Herald.

THE AMERICAN THEATER.

It Should Not Be a Toy—It Should Be Made an Educator.

To claim that the stage, no matter how improved, could work an immediate revolution in the manners and taste of our people would be manifestly absurd, but it is entirely safe to say that the theater could, in the matters which are apparently so unimportant in life, yet which mean so much, be an important factor in molding at least the externals of our national character. This means, however, that, busy as we are, we should give the theater a more important place in our thoughts and in our scheme of popular education than that at present allotted to it. Nor is the claim that the theater might be made a teacher of improvement in the minor things of life the only one that can be made for it. It might be made the medium for the elevation of the popular taste in all the arts and in literature and even for the inculcation of the principles of lofty thought and right living. It may seem strange that a people so clever as we are have neglected this potent influence for good and have regarded it only as a toy for our amusement, to be shaped and fashioned by the toy merchant solely with a view to making it catch the fancy and therefore become a salable and profitable article of merchandise. But, as we are a busy and, on the whole, a self satisfied people, beyond our pursuits and ambitions we look only for the amusements which shall be the least burden to us.—J. S. Metcalfe in Atlantic.

"PELE'S HAIR."

A Product of the Gigantic Hawaiian Volcano Mauna Loa.

Mauna Loa, the gigantic Hawaiian volcano, has two craters or openings, one of which, Kilauea, is the largest active volcanic crater in the world. The mountain is 14,100 feet high and Kilauea is situated on the eastern side about 4,000 feet above the level of the sea. This marvelous crater is really a vast lake of boiling lava which rises and falls continually by the action of subterranean fires. In tossing to and fro like a troubled sea of molten metal the lava is dashed against the cliffs and hardens there in the form of long glassy filaments, gigantic knobs, miniature trees and in imitation of grass, leaves, etc.

Another form of glassy filament to be found along the shores of this fiery lake is in the shape of queer bunches and tufts of lava made up of an aggregation of vitreous threads which the natives call "Pele's hair," Pele being the goddess to whom the mountain is dedicated. These glassy threads appear to be caused by the passage of steam through the molten lava. In so doing small particles in the shape of bubble-like balloons are thrown into the air, leaving a tail behind like a comet. When the scene of these miniature steam eruptions is near a rock or shore all solid and cool surfaces are found covered with bunches of "Pele's hair." This "hair" was formerly used in mystic native ceremonies.

Canal Locks In China.

The contrivances for locks along the Grand canal in China are very simple—stout boards, with ropes at each end of them, being let down edgewise over each other through grooves in the stone piers. Boats are dragged through and up the sluices by means of ropes communicating with large windlasses worked on the bank, which haul them safely, but very slowly. Artificial basins were hollowed out in the banks of the canal at these locks, where boats might anchor securely. The sluices which keep the necessary level are of very rude construction. Soldiers and workmen are constantly in attendance at these sluices, and the danger to boats is diminished by coils of rope hung down at the sides to break the force of possible blows.

A Phenomenon.

A handy word much misused is "phenomenon." The London Globe once heard a man explaining its meaning to a friend. He did it as follows: "Now, if you see a cow in a medder," he said didactically, "that's not a phinomeena. It's a pretty animal and what not, but it ain't a phinomeena. And if you see a thistle in a medder that ain't a phinomeena. Nor if you see a lark in the medder that ain't a phinomeena. It's a pretty bird and what not, but it ain't a phinomeena. But if you was to see that cow sitting on that thistle and singing like that lark that would be a phinomeena." His friend said, yes, he saw now.

The Bull of Perillus.

Perillus of Athens is said to have invented for Phalaris, tyrant of Agrigentum, 570 B. C., a brazen bull which opened on the side to admit victims who were to be roasted by the fire which was built underneath. The dying groans of the sufferers resembled closely the roaring of a mad bull. Phalaris greatly admired the invention and by way of test roasted the inventor first. Later the populace rose in rebellion and burned Phalaris.

Must Have Been.

"Ah, Lady B., I had the pleasure of meeting you last year. And how is your dear little girl?"

"My little boy is quite well, thank you."

"Little boy? Ah, yes, of course! I knew it was one of the two."

The Silver Lining and the Cloud.

WESTPHALIAN WITCHES.

All the Victims Who Died at the Stake Had Red Hair.

Soest, in Westphalia, Prussia, was the Salem of the European witch burning era, and, by the way, the witchcraft delusion lasted for three or four centuries longer there than it did in the colony of Massachusetts Bay. The judicial tribunal before which all Westphalian witches were forced to appear was called the vehm-gericht and was composed of the most superstitious set of bigots in the province. The trees are still standing under which this witch trying congress regularly met on the commons of Soest, and the records of their proceedings are still to be found in the archives at the town hall.

One of the most noticeable things in these queer old records of the days of bigotry and blind superstition is the fact that the pages upon which are written the proceedings of cases in which the accused were condemned to the stake are all adorned with locks of the culprit's hair. The individual hairs of this queer collection of tufts exhibit all the variations usually noticed in such assortments, being long and short, coarse and fine and straight and curly. In one very characteristic feature, however, that of color, all the locks have the same general appearance, being uniformly red.

It is passing curious, to say the least, that in a country where red hair does not predominate all the witches executed during a period covering several hundred years should have had red hair.

THE TRAMP PROBLEM.

How Count Rumford Solved It In Bavaria In 1790.

A remarkable experiment was made in Bavaria in 1790 in an effort to solve the problem of the unemployed. Count Rumford, an Englishman, after an adventurous career in America, settled in Bavaria, won the confidence of the elector and obtained permission to apply Cromwellian methods in ridding the state of all its tramps, beggars, thieves and undesirables. On New Year's day four regiments of cavalry were distributed throughout the state, and at a given hour a "drive" was made of all the undesirables. Over 10,000 were placed under arrest, including 2,000 in Munich alone.

These derelicts were afterward set to work in factories which had been specially established for their reception, and Count Rumford superintended the work of their reformation. Some trouble was at first experienced with the raw army, but by kindness, exhortation and encouragement, by the public distribution of special awards for merit, the best results were achieved, and in a few years the thriftless were converted into good citizens.

Count Rumford secured a great hold upon these people. On one occasion when he was reported to be dying a multitude of poor people marched in procession, silently and with bowed heads, to the principal church in Munich to offer prayers for his recovery, despite the fact that he was a foreigner and a Protestant.
